That was just what the hand seemed to be—a tingler. The hand was covered with a kid glove, and underneath the glove there was felt a gentle throbbing motion which seemed to be communicated to the living hand, while an equally gentle and pleasant warmth was plainly perceptible. It seemed hard indeed to realize that the hand was not one of living flesh and blood, instead of a piece of mechanism.

"How is it done?" said the inventor. "Oh, easy enough. It's just electricity. Right here, where the stump fits in, you'll observe is a small dry battery. From it a current is sent down to the fingers where it passes through minute tubes, or veins if you will, of asbestos; that is the heating system. A second current sets in motion a number of small diaphragms which lie along the palm, and it is that part of the arrangement which gives the throbbing motion to the hand.

"You see," continued the inventor, growing a little enthusiastic over his arrangement, "calorified and vibrant artificial hands and feet make very much possible that which was not so before; in fact they open up new possibilities of life to maimed men and women. With this electrical vivification a young man who has lost his left arm in a saw mill can pass such an artificial arm as this around his sweetheart's waist and she will not only feel its gentle warmth against her throbbing heart, but the young man has only got to give the battery an extra charge before he leaves home to go sparking, and the girl would swear that his hand is glowing and quivering with an emotion he cannot control, when really it is nothing but a question of electrified particles of asbestos and tintype metal.

"The benefits of my invention even go further than that," continued the genius. "I know a man who lost both feet in a powder explosion. Now this man's wife suffers terribly from cold back and nothing seems to relieve her. Now here's my chance. I'm going to fit that man's artificial feet with the patent calorification attachment, and then there will be no more trouble. You see it will revolutionize the old antagonism of feet and back, and a man with artificial limbs will positively be at a premium—provided he has the patent calorification and vibratory attachment on."

The press is the best instrument for enlightening the mind of man and improving him as a rational, moral and social being.—Thomas Jefferson.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sence of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

JUST SO

We only tell you of goods that have merit and are worth your while to examine. The plan of buying a lot of poor, cheap goods that no one wants at any price don't go. It may make a noise, but that's all it amounts to.

SEE THESE.

MILLINERY.

As you would have it. Everything of the newest; nothing here simply for the sake of making a show. Dutch bonnets, evening hats, carriage hats, rough braids, plain Milan chips and prices are our way.

DRESS GOODS.

You are getting to know our dress goods better, as we are selling more every day. They say we have more styles and our prices are more your way. 36 inch Fancies 27c; 40 inch Fancies 42c; 40 inch silk and wool mixture 49c; 36 inch all wool cashmere 25c.

Only a few of those dress patterns with linings complete left. The price, $2.19, takes them.

THAT CAPE.

How would one like this suit? Made of fine broadcloth, blue or black, trimmed with point lace, ribbon and jet; a beauty, and the price $4 98.

KID GLOVES.

We mean to make our Glove Department talk tomorrow. We have the goods and the prices will do it. We only sell gloves that we can guarantee, and we stand for every pair we sell. 98c is all we ask for a real kid, 4 button all shades. Try them.

MEN.

We are after your trade on fixings, such as shirts, collars, cuffs, ties, etc. You know there is a vast difference in dry goods stores' prices and regular dealers. For instance: 50c neckwear for 25c; the best collars are 12c instead of 18c; fine unlaundried shirts 50c instead of 75c; fine night shirts 48c instead of 75c; there are about 150 outing shirts, manufacturer's samples, none worth less than $1, and some worth $1.50, your pick for 69c; see that cambric shirt we sell for 48c. We sell half hose the same way, a quarter and some times half the regular price.

A Break in Prices.

The combine that for a long time has existed in materials for mason and builders supplies in this city is now broken. Cement, lime, lath, in fact all the articles, are cut nearly one-third. A barrel of lime that ten days ago was sold for $1.75 can be bought today for less than $1, and all other articles used in that trade at about the same cut.

How long this state of affairs will last, is not known; but it is safe to say not very long. One builder says that you can purchase right here from our local dealers 20 per cent cheaper than you can in New York city at the present time.

—Millinery, capes, and kid gloves, are three important items that Mr. White speaks of in his advertisement. White offers everything of the latest style, and his prices you will find most moderate.

A Famous Egg Dance.

There is a pretty account of the marriage of Marguerite of Austria with Philibert, the handsome duke of Savoy. It is called "Marriage aux oeufs." She had come to the castle of Brae, in the charming district of Bresse, lying on the western slopes of the Alps. Here the rich princess kept open house, and Philibert, who was hunting in the neighborhood, came to pay his court to her.

It was Easter Monday, and high and low danced together on the green.

A hundred eggs were scattered in a level space, covered with sand, and a lad and lass, holding each other by the hand, came forward to execute a dance of the country. According to the ancient custom, if they succeeded in finishing the braule without breaking a single egg they became affianced.

Then Philibert, radiant with youth and happiness, appeared upon the scene. He bent his knees before the noble chatelaine and besought her hospitality. He proposed to her to try the egg fortune. She accepted. Their grace and beauty charmed the onlookers, and they succeeded, without a single crash, in threading the perilous maze.

"Savoy and Austria!" shouted the crowd. And she said, "Let us adopt the custom of Bresse."

They were married and enjoyed a few years of exquisite happiness. Then the beloved husband died. Margnerite survived him long, but never forgot him.

Although our eyes no longer fill and weep
Or watch no more at night when others sleep,
And find not, like new grief, the ready tear,
No transient solace touches such wounds here
No other hearts can know the anguish deep
Of hearts that higher hearts in memory keep
Time passes but to show their loss more clear
The way is weary and the wall is thick
That keeps us from the waiting souls beyond.
Ah, sages, poets, have you not, too, lied
Unto our fancies that are faint and sick?
For answer clasp one truth, no dream phase fond—
One man came up from hell, the crucified

HIS EASTER LILY.

BY EDITH SESSIONS TUPPER.

[Copyright, 1895, by American Press Association.]

"My, what a makeup!" ejaculated a popular actor to his companion as they sauntered up Fifth avenue one bitterly cold winter afternoon at the hour of the fashionable parade. "There's realism, there's art, me boy!"

He was right. Haggard, wrinkled, toothless, her sparse white locks tossing on the chilling wind, her shreds and patches fluttering about her bent frame, stood old Betty Herrick, Hester street, rear tenement, huddling close against her asthmatic hand organ, from which she was grinding out a doleful air.

Yes, here indeed were realism and art. Something more. Disease and famine looked out the bleared, sunken eyes, staring with the pathos of helpless old age at the throng of richly dressed people passing and repassing before her. Occasionally a few pennies chinked into old Betty's tin cup, but her store of earnings grew slowly.

Down the avenue, wrapped in velvet and sables, shedding the perfume of English violets as she passed, and attended by a smart French maid, came Miss Cynthia Coupon for her daily promenade, that constitutional so requisite to the health and complexion of the modern athletic feminine swell. Cynthia was a daughter of the gods, tall, svelte, fair and stately as a lily, a typical well groomed New York girl, with shining, lustrous, golden bronze hair and proud, frank, fearless eyes. She was a distinguished figure in the procession of elegant and beautiful women out on parade that day. People nudged each other as she passed. "The beautiful Miss Coupon," "Old Ben Coupon's heiress," "Engagement just announced," "Count de Farandole, chateau in France, ancient family, exchange of title for millions"—these were the snatches of comment and gossip as the young beauty, carrying herself as became a countess elect, walked through the crowd.

Trained to repress her natural emotions, what looked behind that fair, haughty, serene face? What thought darted through her mind as for an instant Miss Coupon paused before a bewildering display of flowers in a florist's window? The Easter flowers were already in market, and pots of great, odorous, stately annunciation lilies were standing there wafting through the constantly opening doors the perfume of their breath.

"You are like a lily, a tall, fair, sweet, white lily!" rang in her ears. Who said that to her? Not the count whose bride she was to be soon after Easter. Ah, no, it was not the count!

And then a face, an honest, handsome, American face, with pleading lips and resolute eyes, the face of the man she loved, whom she had sacrificed to her pitiful ambition, came before her. For an instant Miss Coupon felt like dying. There was a dreadful little sharp pain near her heart, and a dreadful little sharp lump rose in her throat; but, like the self possessed young woman she had been drilled to be, she recovered herself, and thinking of her chateau in France she walked on—on to where fate, in the person of old Betty Herrick, Hester street, rear tenement, stood waiting, waiting for her.

"Heavens, how distressing!" murmured Cynthia as she stopped and regarded this battered old wreck. Betty mumbled and leered and held out a shaking purple claw beseechingly.

There was a word to the French maid, a snap of a gold purse, the chink of silver. Betty looked down in stupefaction and beheld two silver dollars. "Glory be to"—she shouted.

Cynthia interrupted her.

"Where do you live, my poor woman?"

"Twenty-three Hester street, lady."

"That's not at all a nice locality, is it, Zephine?" asked Miss Coupon.

"Eet es of all streets ze most villain," announced Zephine, with horrified eyebrows and alarmed shoulders.

"Nevertheless I will go there," said Miss Coupon calmly. "I shall go to see you, poor old soul!"

Zephine spluttered like a jar of fermenting fruit.

"Taisez-vous, Zephine," recommended Miss Coupon as she turned away.

"Mais, mon Dieu"—

"Voulez-vous vous taire?" demanded her young lady sharply, and Zephine concluded that she would hold her tongue, for no one ever presumed to stand in Miss Coupon's way when once her decision was taken. And how, from some strange whim, some caprice, Cynthia had settled in her mind that she would go and see how the other half of the world lived. She had heard a great deal of slumming and concluded to try it a bit on her own account and see if it bored her.

Hester street to this day recalls the moment when a cab rumbled through its dingy borders and stopped before the wretched tenement wherein old Betty lived, and when there stepped from the vehicle such a vision as had never before dawned upon that neighborhood. Miss Coupon came, bringing a store of provisions and delicacies which the maid and cabman looked regretfully upon as on a waste of so much raw material.

Old Betty was sick. She was lying in her wretched bed when Miss Coupon shuddering with disgust, found her filthy room. But the old organ grinder had not forgotten the handsome young lady who had given her so much money. She blessed her unceasingly, she ate ravenously of the food brought her, and she insisted upon kissing Miss Coupon's hand, a proceeding to which the young lady submitted with concealed aversion.

At length Betty asked the name of her visitor, and when it was given demanded fiercely, "Old Ben Coupon's gal?"

Miss Coupon replied rather haughtily that her father's name was Benjamin, upon which old Betty was seized with a fit of silent, horrible laughter. It so alarmed Miss Coupon, who fancied this attack might be a precursor of sudden death, that she sent Zephine out for aid.

When the maid had left the room, the old woman raised herself on one elbow, and fixing her fading eyes on Miss Coupon said: "Ye think ye air old Ben Coupon's own gal, don't ye? Waal, ask him"— A fit of coughing broke her sentence, and she sank back exhausted.

That night Cynthia sought her father in the library and briefly related her experience of the day. She kept her proud questioning eyes upon her father as she talked and saw, to her horror, a strange ashen hue steal over his rubicund face. When she had finished, with a broken and humble manner, he said: "I have always dreaded this day, Cynthia. I knew it would come. No, you are not my child."

The room swam about the girl. "Whose, then, am I?" she managed to ask. "And how should that dreadful old woman know about me?"

"Cynthia," said Mr. Coupon in a low voice, "you are the child of that old creature's daughter!"

He expected tears, reproaches, a swoon perhaps, but Cynthia sat as if turned to stone. At last she said in a voice strangely unlike her own, "Tell me—all."

"My wife and I were childless. She saw you, a beautiful little creature, running about in rags, on one of her charitable visits to the east side. Your mother readily relinquished you for a certain sum. She died soon after. This old woman is a noted character. The police have kept her from troubling me"— He could say no more.

"She, that horrible old woman, is my mother's mother?"

"Yes."

Cynthia rose mechanically to leave the room. Her father sprang to her and caught her in his arms. "My dear," he cried, "forgive me. I ought to have told you before, but you were like my own daughter. I thought I would be able to protect you from this knowledge."

"Forgive you?" she murmured brokenly. "I bless you for saving me from a frightful life, but don't you see it must alter everything?"

"What should it alter?"

"My marriage. Have you told the count of this secret?"

"No."

"Well, you must. You will tell him, too, that I release him from our engagement. Oh, you will see, papa. He will be very willing to be released. Even your millions cannot gloss over this affair."

Cynthia was right. The Count de Farandole relinquished the Coupon millions, with a sigh. He was desolated to lose this fair American heiress, but the stain of illegal birth and the police record of his fiancee's maternal grandmother were too much for the proud Frenchman, and so he fluttered away in search of other worlds to conquer.

The news of the broken engagement made a great hubbub in society, and passing its charmed portals reached the ears of a young physician who was building up a name and a place for himself in his profession. A gleam of joy shot over his strong, tender face, and then it saddened as he said to himself: "Oh, well, what matter? She can never be anything to me. She is too ambitious."

Nevertheless, when Easter morning dawned, among the myriad bouquets sent to Miss Coupon there came one long stalk of lilies, white, odorous, stately, breathing a message of longing, of remembrance, of fidelity, which moved Cynthia strangely and brought back those heavenly days on board an ocean steamship when she had learned what it meant to love; brought back those nights when they had stood alone with the sea about them and the stars overhead; brought back the voice which had whispered, "You are like a tall, fair, sweet white lily."

Cynthia looked dully at the magnificent costume lying on the dainty, canopied brass bed, the gown ready for the Easter service at a fashionable church and then for the Fifth avenue parade; at the masses of orchids, violets and roses with which her chamber was crowded; at the jewels sparkling on her dressing table, Easter gifts from her father. Ah, what did they all matter now? She had thrown away a priceless treasure, the love of an honest man's heart, and she had her reward.

Miss Coupon's maid was about to begin the mysterious rites of the toilet when a servant knocked at the door, and offering abject apologies stated that there was a very dirty little boy below who insisted upon seeing the young lady. "He says, Miss Cynthia, that he's sent by the old woman in Hester street, and that she's dying and begs to see you."

Miss Coupon hesitated a moment, looking at the silvery cloth and velvet lying in lustrous, seductive folds, waiting to grace her beauty. Only a moment. "It is my grandmother, my mother's mother, who is dying. Let me remember that," she said under her breath. Then aloud: "Say to the boy to return to the old woman at once and tell her I am coming."

* * * * * * *

When John Thornton, M. D., was hastily summoned to attend a wretched old beggar in a district to which out of the goodness of his heart he was in the habit of paying free professional visits, he anticipated no such shock as he was destined to receive. He mounted the rickety stairs, and pushing the tumbling door open entered and saw a strange sight. The cold sunlight streaming through the dingy window played across the frozen features of poor old Betty Herrick, beggar, crook, outcast, passed forever from beyond the judgment of men. Her withered hands had been decently composed across her breast, and over her white hair a lace scarf had been hastily thrown. By the dead woman a figure sat, a figure whose stately contours sent the blood rushing to Thornton's heart. It moved, rose, turned its head toward him and looked at him with the proud, sad eyes of Cynthia Coupon.

"Cynthia," he cried, "why are you here?"

"She sent for me," pointing to the sheeted form lying there in awful silence. "She is dead!"

"Yes, I am too late, I see. Poor old wretch! It is a good thing"—

"Don't," she said, lifting her hand, "don't speak like that. She is such an old woman"—

"I know," he interrupted impatiently, "but she was a terror—a crook, a fence. I cannot see what your father could have been thinking of to allow you to come alone to this horrible place. Let me take you away at once."

"Not yet," she replied. "I must see that she is decently prepared for burial, and that everything that can be is done for her. You see, she was my mother's mother."

"Cynthia!"

"Oh, yes," she answered wearily, "I am not Mr. Coupon's daughter. I am an impostor, a cheat, a swindle, Dr. Thornton! Look around you! This is the mud, the slime from which I have sprung!"

He had reached her side and now snatched her to his heart. "Cynthia," he murmured, "look at me—my love, my lily! Yes, fair, sweet and pure—like the lily which springs from mud and slime, you are mine at last. There are no false barriers between us now. I will take you and wear you on my heart, my lily—my Easter lily!"

LEGENDS OF THE PASSION.

Prototypes In Nature of the Instruments of the Crucifixion.

The story runs that Adam took with him from Eden as a staff a branch of the tree of knowledge—in fact, the very branch that bore the fatal apple. During his wanderings he reached Jerusalem. He thrust the staff in the ground, and it grew and became a tree from which the cross was fashioned. Thus the same wood bore that which brought sin into the world and him who overcame it and redeemed the world from its sway.

Some say the wood of the cross was from the aspen tree and since then its leaves forever tremble with remorse and fear. The mistletoe, according to another legend, was once a sturdy tree, but having furnished the material for the cross it was accursed and became a weak parasite.

To many a shrub and plant has been attributed the dread distinction of furnishing the crown of thorns. In Italy it is the barberry, in Germany the holly, and elsewhere it is given to the bramble, the buckthorn, the hawthorn, the brier rose, the acanthus, the wild hyssop and the acacia. The scourge that was laid upon our Saviour's back, tradition says, was made from the weeping willow, for which reason that tree has ever since maintained a drooping and remorseful attitude. And the reed which was placed in his hand, according to the same authority, was a stalk of the common cattail with its mace-like head.

The passion flower, when found by the Spaniards in Mexico, was hailed with adoration, since it displayed within itself all the instruments of the passion—the crown, the scourge, the spear and the nails. There are other flowers which, fable says, were growing at the foot of the cross and were stained with drops of the Lord's blood.

The Germans tell us that the crossbill strove hard to draw out the nails that pierced the sufferer's hands. It could not, but it twisted its beak in the effort and dyed its plumage in blood. The English robin is the hero of a similar tradition and dyed its breast from the bloody thorns.

A Danish legend has it that during the Saviour's agony three birds came flying thither and alighted upon the cross. "Styrk ham! Styrk ham!" cried one. "Strengthen him! Strengthen him!" And ever since men have called the stork a bird of strength and blessing. The second cried: "Sval ham! Sval ham!" or "Refresh him! Refresh him!" And the swallow, too, is a bird of blessing. But the third cried: "Puen ham! Puen ham!" or "Punish him! Torture him!" And thus the lapwing is a bird accursed forevermore. The same legend prevails among the Swedes, only they add a fourth bird—the turtledove—which cried: "Kyrie! Kyrie!" or "Lord! Lord!" and to this very day has no voice but that one word of lamentation.

CURIOUS RUSSIAN OBSERVANCES.

Easter Is the Muscovite Cleaning Day. Making the Holy Chrism Oil.

Easter is the greatest national religious festival of Russia. Holy week ushers in a constant season of prayer and somberness. The clubs are closed and street musicians forbidden to ply their trade. Easter is the time for giving presents, just as Christmas is with us, and every one puts on a new suit of clothes on Easter morning. The shopkeepers' fever only rages during the latter half of the week, for on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of Holy week all commerce is suspended.

Another great feature of Russian Eastertide is the housecleaning. The floors of the principal apartments are turned into what a stranger might suppose was a skating rink, but is actually the effect produced by two or three men skimming over the boards with brushes fastened to the soles of their feet and sometimes accompanying the motion with song. At Easter time in Russia cleanliness, instead of being the next thing to, actually is, godliness, and in observance of this maxim there ensues one great universal Muscovite wash. The public baths are crowded, and he who neglects to bathe "early and often" is regarded as a pariah.

A celebration which takes place about once in three years is the making of the holy chrism, a ceremony performed invariably either at Moscow or Kiev. The chrism oil is used for baptismal purposes, for the consecration of the metropolitan and the coronation of the czar. The making of the myro, as the oil is called, begins on the Monday morning of Passion week. The metropolitan attends at the sacristy of the patriarchs in Moscow, lights a fire, pours in a gallon and reads the gospel, and after this the oil is kept boiling for three days and nights, while monks stand over and stir it with silver ladles.

The final ceremony takes place when the oil is put into two silver caldrons upon a porcelain stove and stirred with silver ladles by six deacons in vestments of black and silver. In the center of the room is a large silver vase, the gift of Empress Catherine II, and into this the chrism is poured to receive the benediction. At the side are placed a number of smaller silver vases in which the oil is eventually sent away. People attend in crowds to dip bits of cotton wool in the holy mixture. On Holy Thursday there is a procession from the sacristy to the Cathedral of the Assumption with the oil vases, and mass is said by the metropolitan. In the intervening years, when there is no making of the myro, that ceremony is replaced by the washing of the feet of the poor.

Bad Egg's Revenge.

How to Etch Eggs.

There are many ways of coloring and ornamenting Easter eggs. A simple way is to sew them up in highly colored prints before boiling. There is one way to engrave eggshells. Take an egg that has been blown and stop up the ends with wax. Then write or draw any design desired with varnish or tallow. Then drop the egg into a weak acid like vinegar. In a little while the acid will decompose the lime in the shell, except where the lines are marked by the varnish or tallow, and the latter will stand out in bold relief.

AT EASTER.

When Easter comes, the church bells loudly ring out notes of joy and thanks. When Easter comes, the busy Cupid starts his round of cunning pranks.

EASTER ETCHINGS.

A Few Loose Leaves From a Notebook of Life.

What a bonnet it was! The very bandbox that it came in seemed to appreciate the value and magnificence it contained—such a substantial, well varnished, responsible bandbox. Up the steps the messenger carried it and rang the bell. Her husband felt a chill come such as that we experience when, according to the old gossip, somebody walks over our future grave.

It was Easter, and if one can't have a new bonnet after the Lenten deprivation and abstinence, when is one entitled to one anyway?

Mrs. Frontpew tried it on in the parlor and said her husband was a duck. Never was there a husband so good and kind and with such taste.

The doorbell rang again. Another messenger boy came up.

"This is Mrs. Frontpaw's bonnet," said the messenger. "The other one was left by mistake. It should have gone to Mrs. Styly, next door."

With a blanched face she gave back the bonnet and looked at her own. Bird for bird, feather for feather, flower for flower—it was the same as the other.

That is why Mrs. Frontpew was not in church on Easter and why Frontpew has been taking supper down town and looks like a man upon whom great woe is fallen.

How could he tell? The milliner merely showed him a pretty headdress, and he ordered one made up like it.

But that's like a man.

"The Destruction of the Poor Is Their Poverty."

A little pot of mignonette stood in the window of a crowded tenement. A poor woman bent over it and tenderly plucked a withered leaf from its fresh green crown. The sun shone gayly on the blue bay, and the woman stood watching the little glint of dancing water she could just see between the houses.

She put a tiny sprig of the faded mignonette in her faded dress and took down her shabby bonnet. Then she walked as far as she could to get a good breath of fresh air. She passed a church door standing open and heard a burst of music. So she wandered timidly in and sat humbly down in a quiet corner.

The altar was fair with flowers. The woman drew a deep breath of delight when she saw the lilies.

A man took hold of her arm. "You're in some one's pew," he said roughly.

The woman rose nervously. "I'm sorry," she stammered. "Where are the free seats?"

"There ain't no free seats in this church," sneered the man.

The woman hurried out. She put her thin hands upon the bunch of mignonette. The clergyman was announcing his text. She just heard it as she passed through the swinging doors:

"He was despised, rejected, a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief."

Toil Not Nor Spin.

A very untidy and reprehensible person hurried up the steps of a big house early Sunday morning. Her hair was untidy, and her shoes were run down at the heel. She talked to herself, too—a disgraceful habit.

"Hot coffee and two eggs. Yes, the two eggs for Easter," she whispered as she rang the bell. Her eyes shone. A plump little rosebud of a girl opened the door. The woman smiled eagerly. "I've finished it," she gasped.

"Well, it's about time," scolded Miss Rosebud. "You had no business to keep me in such suspense. I've worried myself almost sick."

She took the bundle and hurried up stairs.

"Please," faltered the reprehensible person, "please, the money I worked all night"—

"Come some other time," said Miss Rosebud over her shoulder. "Don't bother me now."

The untidy woman went down the steps. Her lips trembled, but Miss Rosebud had the loveliest dress of all the lovely new dresses in the big church on the avenue that morning. At least that's what one young man in the congregation said, and he ought to have known.

THE CHRONICLES OF MARTIN HEWITT

BY ARTHUR MORRISON

THE CASE OF THE MISSING HAND

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson and Bacheller.]

CHAPTER VI.

Then my uncle and Mr. Hardwick turned on Martin Hewitt with doubts and many questions. "Why do you call it suicide?" Mr. Hardwick asked. "It is plain the Fosters were with him at the time, from the tracks. Do you mean to say that they stood there and watched Sneathy hang himself without interfering?"

"No, I don't," Hewitt replied, lighting a cigar. "I think I told you that they never saw Sneathy."

"Yes, you did; and, of course, that's what they said themselves when they were arrested. But the thing's impossible. Look at the tracks!"

"The tracks are exactly what revealed to me that it was not impossible," Hewitt returned. "I'll tell you how the case unfolded itself to me, from the beginning. As to the information you gathered from the Ranworth coachman, to begin with, the conversation between the Fosters which he overheard might well mean something less serious than murder. What did they say? They had been sent for in a hurry and had just had a short consultation with their mother and sister. Henry said that 'the thing must be done, and at once;' also, that as there were two of them it would be easy. Robert said that Henry, as a doctor, would know best what to do. Now you, Col. Brett, had been saying—before we learned these things from Mr. Hardwick—that Sneathy's behavior of late had become so bad as to seem that of a madman. Then there was the story of his sudden attack on a tradesman in the village and equally sudden running away—exactly the sort of impulsive, wild thing that madmen do. Why then might it not be reasonable to suppose that Sneathy had become mad—more especially considering all the circumstances of the case, his commercial ruin and disgrace and his horrible life with his wife and her family? Had become suddenly much worse and quite uncontrollable, so that the two wretched women, left alone with him, were driven to send in haste for Henry and Robert to help them. That would account for all. The brothers arrive just after Sneathy had gone out. They are told in a hurried interview how affairs stand, and it is decided that Sneathy must be at once secured and confined in an asylum before something serious happens. He has just gone out—something terrible may be happening at that moment. The brothers determine to follow together at once and secure him wherever he may be. Then the meaning of their conversation is plain. The thing that must be done, and done at once, is the capture of Sneathy and his confinement in an asylum. Henry, as a doctor, would know what to do—in regard to the necessary formalities. And they took a halter in case a struggle should ensue, and it were found necessary to bind him. Very likely, wasn't it?"

"Well, yes," Mr. Hardwick replied, "it certainly is. It never struck me in that light at all."

"That was because you believed to begin with that a murder had been committed, and looked at the preliminary circumstances, which you learned after, in the light of your conviction. But now to come to my actual observations. I saw the footmarks across the fields and agreed with you (it was indeed obvious) that Sneathy had gone that way first, and that the brothers had followed, walking over his tracks. This state of the tracks continued until well into the wood, when suddenly the tracks of the brothers opened out and proceeded on each side of Sneathy's. The simple inference would seem to be, of course, the one you made—that the Fosters had here overtaken Sneathy and walked one at each side of him; but of this I felt by no means certain. Another very simple explanation was available, which might chance to be the true one. It was just at the spot where the brothers' tracks separated that the path became suddenly much muddier, because of the closer overhanging of the trees at the spot. The path was, as was to be expected, wettest in the middle. It would be the most natural thing in the world for two well-dressed young men on arriving here to separate so as to walk one on each side of the mud in the middle. On the other hand, a man in Sneathy's state (assuming him, for the moment, to be mad and contemplating suicide) would walk straight along the center of the path, taking no note of mud or anything else. I examined all the tracks very carefully, and my theory was confirmed. The feet of the brothers had everywhere alighted in the driest spots, and the steps were of irregular lengths—which meant, of course, that they were picking their way; while Sneathy's footmarks had never turned aside, even for the dirtiest puddle. Here, then, were the rudiments of a theory.

"At the watercourse, of course, the footmarks ceased, because of the hard gravel. The body lay on a knoll at the left—a knoll covered with grass. On this the signs of footmarks were almost undiscoverable, although I am often able to discover tracks in grass that are invisible to others. Here, however, it was almost useless to spend much time in examination, for you and your man had been there, and what slight marks there might be would be indistinguishable one from another. Under the branch from which the man had hung there was an old tree stump, with a flat top, where the tree had been sawn off. I examined this, and it became fairly apparent that Sneathy had stood on it when the rope was about his neck—his muddy footprint was plain to see; the mud was not smeared about, you see, as it probably would have been if he had been stood there forcibly and pushed off. It was a simple clear footprint—another hint at suicide.

"But then arose the objection that you mentioned yourself. Plainly the brothers Foster were following Sneathy and came this way. Therefore, if he hanged himself before they arrived, it would seem that they must have come across the body. But now I examined the body itself. There was mud on the knees, and clinging to one knee was a small leaf. It was a leaf corresponding to those on the bush behind the tree, and it was not a dead leaf, so must have been just detached. After my examination of the body I went to the bush, and there, in the thick of it, were, for me, sufficiently distinct knee marks, in one of which the knee had crushed a spray of the bush against the ground—and from that spray a leaf was missing. Behind the knee marks were the indentations of boot toes in the soft, bare earth under the bush, and thus the thing was plain. The poor lunatic had come in sight of the dangling rope, and the temptation to suicide was irresistible. But at that moment he must have heard the steps—probably the voices—of the brothers behind him on the winding path. He immediately hid in the bush till they had passed. It is probable that seeing who the men were and conjecturing that they were following him—thinking also, perhaps, of things that had occurred between them and himself—his inclination to self-destruction became completely ungovernable, with the result that you saw.

"But before I inspected the bush I noticed one or two more things about the body. You remember I inquired if either of the brothers Foster were left-handed, and was assured that neither was. But clearly the hand had been cut off by a left-handed man with a large, sharply pointed knife. Far well away to the right of where the wrist had hung the knife-point had made a tiny triangular rent in the coat. So that the hand must have been held in the mutilator's right hand while he used the knife with his left—clearly a left-handed man.

"But most important of all about the body was the jagged hair over the right ear. Everywhere else the hair was well cut and orderly—here it seemed as though a good piece had been, so to speak, torn off. What could anybody want with a dead man's right hand and certain locks of his hair? Then it struck me suddenly—the man was hanged; it was the Hand of Glory!

Can't Find Her.

No trace of Mrs. Harriett P. James, who suddenly disappeared Tuesday afternoon, has yet been secured. She went to visit a neighbor a short distance from her son's home near Washingtonville, and after leaving there at 3:30 in the afternoon has not been seen since except at Scotch Plains for a short time. She wore a satteen dress, with little ruffles and tucks and cloth slippers. She left home a year ago very mysteriously, but returned in a couple of days.

EASTER PLANTS.

How to Care For Lilies, Azaleas, Hyacinths and Pansies.

The custom of using a growing plant as an Easter gift has become almost universal and has largely increased the florists' Easter trade. Some of the favorites seem difficult to care for, among them the Bermuda or Easter lily. Their culture is said to be easy, provided the plants are not forced. Let the Easter lily bloom until it is through blooming, then take it out of the pot, remove the young shoots and plant the old one in rich soil where it will get both sun and shade. It may, if it has not been forced, bloom all summer. Keep it well watered. Put the young plants into pots and set in a closet or cellar, without water, for the season. In the fall bring out and care for as usual. This makes winter bloomers. In the same way young plants may be kept all the winter in the dark for summer blooming.

After azaleas are done blooming, if they look stunted, repot them in well drained pots. Water sparingly until the plant begins to grow, then abundantly. Lessen the supply of water as the new shoots harden. Take into the house if the early fall is wet. Water in the house as little as possible until the plant buds. Then give it lots of water. Syringe the foliage often.

Hyacinths are real Easter time plants. When the flowers begin to die, cut off the stalks and stop watering, letting the plant get so dry that the bulbs shrivel in the earth. Lift out old and new bulbs and put away, labeling with color of flower for convenience. If for gardens, plant in rich loam in the fall, leaving three inches of earth over bulbs. Cover ground with a mulch of straw, hay or leaves, removing it when shoots appear. The old bulbs die out in a few years and will not bloom. The young ones ought not to bloom the first year. If so, pinch off buds. For house growing put into pots about January, with water and sun in abundance. Rich soil, good drainage and plenty of air and sunlight ought to bring them into blossom for the next Easter. They can also be grown in water in hyacinth glasses. The water is kept sweet by a few bits of charcoal.

Keep Easter pansies until May indoors, then set out in a good, well drained soil, in southeast exposure if possible. Hot sun is bad for the pansy; also earth that dries quickly. Sandy loam, mixed with leaf mold and rotten manure, is best. Keep plants well watered. Young plants give larger blooms than old ones. Pansies can be multiplied by pegging down new shoots—that is, fastening them under the earth by a wire or pegs and covering the place with sand. The tops project. When growing well separate from old plant. Seeds can be sown in fall for winter blooming and in April for summer blooming.

How Paris Observes the Day.

In the great Catholic churches a beautiful old custom is revived. The men of the congregation form a procession during an interval in the mass and with lighted tapers in their right hand move slowly toward the altar, slowly chanting the hymn "Christ Is Risen." The altar rails are decked with fine cloth and garnished with flowers and greens. Behind them are a number of priests in stately robes, who administer the sacrament to the members of the procession as, in passing, they kneel down on the communion steps. It is a great democratic demonstration, in which the deputy elbows the blouse man and the petty storekeeper fraternizes with the senator. After vespers the "grande pelecrinage" to Montmartre takes place. Hundreds and thousands of men, women and children toil up the steep streets in solemn procession to worship at the shrine of the Sacred Heart and receive the benediction from the loggia of the Basilica.

Emblem of the Resurrection.

The Easter egg is in Germany a national institution, an inheritance from the heathen Teutons, sanctioned by Martin Luther, who pronounced the egg "an emblem of the rising up out of the grave of our Lord Jesus Christ."

"In the same manner as the chick, entombed, as it were, in the egg, is in due time brought to life, so did our Lord arise from the grave to give us life," said the great reformer.

Easter Chickens.

"Oh, what pretty chickens!" exclaimed Mabel, looking at some whose fluffy feathers had been dyed different colors.

"Yes," explained 7-year-old Madge. "They were hatched out of Easter eggs."

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

WORDS OF THE CROSS.

Plainfield Congregations Unite in a Beautiful Service.

A beautiful expression of the liberality and unity which pervade the evangelical churches in Plainfield was evident last evening, when all denominations gathered under one roof and joined in meditation on words from the cross where Jesus was crucified for sinners 1863 years ago.

The union services were held in the First M E. Church, in which a large congregation had gathered.

The services were opened by Rev. Dr. C. E. Barnes, who spoke a few words appropriate to the occasion. He said that to think rightly is to live, and it is therefore better to turn our mind and efforts from the daily pursuits of the world on the observance of this holy day and enter the Gethsemane of life.

Rev. Dr. Richards, of the Crescent Avenue Church, read the Scriptural lesson from the twenty-third chapter of Luke, after which he offered prayer. The fifty-first and fifty-second Psalms were then read responsively by the congregation.

The first word from the cross was taken by Rev. G. Kennedy Newell of Hope Chapel. It was "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do". These words, he said, showed His love for His persecutors, and evinced that forgiving spirit which characterized the life of Him throughout. For the joy set before Him in preparing a way that all might be saved, He was willing to suffer.

Owing to illness, (an attack of the grip), Rev. C. E. Herring of the First Presbyterian Church was unable to be present, and in his place Rev. Dr. Barnes spoke of the second word, "Verily, I say unto thee, today shalt thou be with me in paradise". He said that no matter how one has sinned, how memory scars one's heart, how we weep or wail, how grevious our sins of past torture may be so long, as we recognize in Him some other form than ourselves, and cast our burden on Him, then we are home.

Rev. Cornelius Schenck of Trinity Reformed Church took up the third word, "Behold thy son, behold thy mother". He thought this was a beautiful expression of the filial love of Jesus. As the mother stood at the cross and saw the crucifixion and heard these words, she must have understood Simeon's words of 33 years before, when he said that a sword should pierce her soul.

Rev. Dr. E. M. Rodman of Grace P. E. Church talked on the fourth word, "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken Me!" These words conveyed the desolation and solitude which the Lord was undergoing, and yet His first thought was the saving of others. It is impossible to compare the sufferings of Jesus when He gave voice to "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken Me", with those of any other man.

The fifth word, "I thirst", was considered by Rev. J. W. Richardson. He said that not until the last redemption price had been paid and the pearly gates opened for all, did Christ give expression to His sufferings. In these words we find an exhibition of the Master-man which only belongs to the divine and which comes in touch with our nature.

Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes talked on the sixth word, "It is finished". This finished work was not the work of the crucifiers who had accomplished their desire in getting Him out of the way; it was not the feeble cry of a man whose death ended all on earth; but it was a death to accomplish something committed to His hands—a way for salvation.

The seventh and last word, "Father, into Thy hands, I commend My spirit", was dwelt on by Rev. C. L. Goodrich. The first and last word of Christ on the cross was "Father". Men that live in conscious fellowship with God know that death cannot end all. Mr. Goodrich spoke more of Him as a man than as a divinity.

The meeting was brought to an end by Rev. Jocelyn Johnstone of the Church of the Redeemer offering prayer.

AT REST.

Hattie M. Christensen.

Hattie M. Christensen, daughter of John Christensen of Woodland avenue, was laid to rest in Hillside Cemetery yesterday. She was in her sixteenth year, when attacked by the disease that caused her untimely death. Last Spring she was confirmed by Bishop Scarborough, becoming a member of what is now St. Stephen's Church. Up to her last illness, she had been a devoted member of the Sunday-school and sewing class of that church, and her coffin was covered with flowers sent by her associates. She was ill nine days, and in all that time she repeated in the delirium of fever the Apostles Creed and the Commandments many, many times. The pall-bearers were Superintendent Phillips of the Sunday-school, Warden Guion, and Vestrymen Finch, Sturtevant, Leake and Beale.

I recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm for rheumatism, lame back, sprains and swellings. There is no better liniment made. I have sold over 100 bottles of it this year and all were pleased who used it. J. F. Pierson, druggist, South Chicago, Ill. It is for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.

David Pangborn Shoots Himself in the Head.

FOUND DYING IN AN OUTHOUSE.

Removed in an Unconscious Condition to Muhlenberg Hospital—He Was an Old Soldier, and a Notable Plainfield Character.

Tired and weary of life, despondent and homeless, David Pangborn endeavored to take his life last night by putting a bullet into his brain. But he was unsuccessful in bringing to an end his career instantaneously, though word comes from the Muhlenberg hospital that he will probably not survive the attempt at ending his existence.

About 7 last night Lewis Bartholamew, who resides on Richmond street near Putnam avenue, was working about his yard when a sudden gust of wind carried a piece of clothing into the adjoining yard, which is in the rear of the vacant house standing on the corner of Richmond street and Putnam avenue. Bartholamew climbed over the fence to recover the missing article, and as he neared the outhouse, which stood at the end of the lot, he thought he heard a grunting sound. Going to the structure he saw through the half opened door the body of a man curled up as if in a drunken slumber. In fact that was what he thought the condition of the man was.

Calling Robert A. Prine, who resides in the same house, the two endeavored to open the door and find out who it was. But the body lay in such a position that the door would only swing a few inches in. Deciding that whoever it was he must be drunk, they asked Mr. Lay, who was coming down town, to notify the police of the circumstance and ask them to come and remove the man.

Policeman Hartpence and Mattox went to the scene about 8. On their arrival there they saw at a glance, without investigation, that he was in no condition to be removed without a wagon. One of them went to Dr. Murray's office on Watchung avenue and sent a telephone message to Chief Grant asking that a carriage be sent to remove him. In the meantime the other officer and Barthol amew and Prine had broken open the door to the outhouse. As they went to lift the individual up they found a small 22-caliber revolver lying on the floor, under his body, and the right side of the face and body covered with blood, which had oozed forth from a wound in the ear.

Quickly recognizing him as Pangborn and discovering that he had attempted suicide, Policeman Hartpence started down town at once to notify Chief Grant of the fact and the need of something more than a buggy to convey him to the hospital. The two officers met on the way, and as soon as the Chief learned of the condition of Pangborn, he immediately notified Dr. Simpson, who, in company with Dr. Murray, soon came to the scene of the attempted suicide. After examining the wound the physicians ordered that he be taken to Muhlenberg Hospital. The platform wagon of Harry Krymer was secured and Pangborn carried to that institution, where his injuries were dressed. He has been unconscious ever since, and is not expected to live the day through.

How much time had elapsed after Pangborn had shot himself before he was discovered is not known. The blood which was on him when found was dry so that he must have lain there for some time. No one in the neighborhood heard any shots or saw anything that would indicate that anything was wrong until he was discovered. Mrs. Nevius, who resides next door on Putnam avenue to where the suicide occurred, knew nothing of the affair until this morning when a DailyPress reporter called there in search of the facts, and told her of the case. Very few other people in that section were aware of anything being wrong.

Pangborn has always been a man of a roving nature and unsatisfied disposition, and especially so since the death of his wife three years ago, when his home in North Plainfield on Steiner place was broken up.

Through ill health he was never able to hold a position any length of time, and this condition of affairs seemed to keep him in a constant state of despondency and discouragement. His last job was as a teamster for the city, which he gave up two years ago on account of illness. After that he entered the soldiers' home, but only remained there four days, leaving without any particular reason, except that he was dissatisfied.

He came back to Plainfield and was finally compelled to become a city charge, living on the poor farm kept by Noah Terry. Previous to this during the intervals that he was out of work he usually made his home with his niece, Mrs. Chas. W. Smith, on Richmond street. Since he has been on the poor farm he frequently came to the city and remained with Mrs. Smith two or three days at a time. Last Saturday he came down from the farm and asked Mrs. Smith if he could stay with her for a few days, stating that he did not like it there and he was anxious to secure work again.

He came in and out every day, and up to Wednesday evening seemed to be in a pleasant frame of mind, more so than usual. Thursday he appeared to have that despondent feeling again, going about in a dejected manner, and acting very reticent. That evening a little after 6 he came in and went out immediately. That was the last the family saw or heard of him, until they were notified last night of the attempt to kill himself.

Mrs. Smith told The Daily Press man this morning that Pangborn had frequently threatened to take his life. Only a few days ago he said that if he did n't get a job pretty soon he would take some arsenic. However, he had talked that way so often that little attention was paid to his remarks. In his pockets was found a pawn ticket for a watch, on which he received $1, and with which he probably bought the revolver.

He is about 70 years of age. He leaves no immediate relatives.

OPENING BIDS.

That the Borough Council's Chief Occupation.

CRUSHED STONE AND FLAGGING.

The Bids Referred to Committee for Investigation—Dr. Carman Reappointed Borough Physician—Memorial Day Fund Undecided.

An adjourned meeting of the North Plainfield Borough Council was held last evening, all the members being present except Mr. Lounsbury.

A short private conference was held previous to the meeting, to talk about salaries.

The minutes were not read. Clerk Arnold presented a communication from Secretary Asa Collier of the Memorial Detail, asking the Council for $50 as an appropriation to help observe Decoration Day. It was received and filed, and brought up later in the evening, when Mr. Valiant said that last year the appropriation was not made because the borough counsel had informed them that it was illegal thus to use borough funds.

The Mayor stated that last Winter a law was passed which would give them that privilege, and he thought it would be well to take advantage of it. The matter was laid over till the May meeting.

A. M. Grant and others asked for a crosswalk on Summit avenue, and I. L. Randolph and others asked for a crosswalk on Duer street at the intersection of Duer street and Linden avenue. These were referred to Committee on Streets and Public Health.

A small batch of claims was presented and audited, and warrants were ordered drawn for payments.

Mr. Valiant of the Committee on Laws, Ordinances and Elections stated that the borough counsel had told him that the borough was not liable for the accident which happened to Mr. McCready on Manning avenue, but that the owner of the property in front of which he fell was liable. The report was received and filed.

Progress was reported by Mr. Schutt on the matter of settling the borough and township division.

An ordinance was introduced on first reading which fixes for three years the salary of the Assessor at $600 a year, and that of the Collector at $1,000. Mr. Valiant moved that it pass to its second reading, and be laid over one month, subject to amendment. This was carried.

The bond of Collector H. N. Spencer for $15,000 was presented, with Jacob Voehl, A. I. Smalley and Justus H. Cooley as sureties; and also the bond of Overseer of the Poor D. R. Weaver for $500, with J. P. Humble and A. J. Winckler as sureties. They were both referred to the Committee on Laws, Ordinances and Elections, who later recommended that the bonds be accepted, which was agreed to.

Bids for crushed stone, crosswalks and sidewalks were then presented, as follows: A. I. Smalley—Crushed stone, all sizes, 2½, 1½ and 1, with dust, 75 cents a ton; delivered 93 cents a ton, with dust. J. H. Wilson—Crushed stone, top dressing, 90 cents a ton; No. 1, 82½ cents; No. 2, 80 cents; tailings, 75 cents; delivered, at the crusher, 10 per cent. less. A. Lazzie—Crosswalks, 3 or 4 inches thick, and 2 feet wide, for 39 cents a lineal foot; flagging, 60 cents a lineal foot. J. A. Thickstun—Crosswalks, 2 feet, 5 inches thick, 80 cents; 6 inches thick, $1; flagging, 4 feet, 2 inches thick, 64 cents; crossings, 3 inches thick, 50 cents; all lineal feet, to be laid in sand. M. Powers—crosswalks, 2 feet wide, 25 cents a square foot, sidewalks, 4 feet wide, 1½ to 2 inches thick, 13½ cents a square foot. P. Kiely—all walks 39 cents a running foot, the borough to furnish the sand.

The bids were referred to the Committee on Streets and Public Health.

The Mayor stated that Overseer of the Poor Weaver had brought to his attention the fact that one of the borough's poor subject had died, and they had no burial place. He had told the overseer to arrange with the township for burial in their plot. He advised that the borough secure a portion of the township plot, and that the matter be attended to at once.

Mr. Smith said that the borough and township had jointly purchased the plot and both were entitled to its use.

Mr. Howell moved that it be referred to the Committee on Streets and Public Health, which was carried.

Mr. Valiant said that as soon as an affadavit accompanied J. W. VanHorn's bond, he would recommend its acceptance, and the clerk was given the bond to have this done.

Mr. Schutt moved that Dr. J. H. Carman be appointed Borough Physician, which was carried. Mr. Smith said the Committee on Streets and Public Health had decided it was not advisable to contract the work, as Dr. Mattison had asked for at the previous meeting.

The Council adjourned.

TROLLEY EXTENSION.

An Injury to Some, a Benefit to All.

It has been stated that the trolley is an annoyance in Plainfield homes, and an injury to property. Let us see if this be so. It is not so in Detroit, the finest city in the West. Its fashionable residence street, Woodward avenue, contains very busy trolley lines, on which cars are run with a headway not exceeding two or three minutes.

Plainfield has the population of a single Detroit ward, and Plainfield's trolley cars have a headway of twelve minutes, and are not in a hurry at that.

Now, if our trolleys are an annoyance and an injury, there are plenty of people who can tell us the sad story. Call witnesses. Bring from the homes in Somerset street, or West Front street, or Grant avenue, or Seventh street, people that have experienced month in and month out our type of trolley. Let their statements go along with the statements of people from West Fourth street and Woodland avenue.

If property on Somerset street, or West Front street, or Grant avenue, or Seventh street, has become less valuable, name at least one lot or one house and lot that has been sold for less, or assessed on a lower valuation, or that is offered at a lower price. We do not ask for much proof—just something more than the phantoms of the brain with which we of late have been oversupplied.

Who in the streets named has become more nervous because of the trolley—who is annoyed by it—who in those streets ever minds the occasional car as it goes by? Wanted, in other words, one Plainfield witness of actual Plainfield experience, who will say that the trolley in his street is a personal annoyance, and an injury to his property.

WILD HUNT FOR OIL

Excitement in Petroleum Fields at Fever Heat.

Derricks Being Built Wherever There Is the Slightest Possibility of Discovering Petroleum—What Is Going To Become of the Market the Question Now Asked.

Pittsburg, April 13.—As an indication of the activity in the hunt for oil, it may be said that there were 1,401 new wells drilling and rigs in course of construction on the 1st instant, as against a monthly average of 232 last year. It is estimated that about $6,000,000 is being expended in new work in all the fields. Men are in the field day and night looking for possible developments. Derricks are being built wherever there is the slightest possibility of discovering the greasy fluid, and the Standard Oil company people are ready to buy any wells and leases at good figures. The excitement is at fever heat.

Oil the Only Question.

Oil City, Pa., April 13.—What is going to become of the oil market? That is the question that above all others is now agitating the minds of the people who have some oil paoduction or a little money to lose or make more with in a speculative deal. About two years ago oil was selling around fifty-three cents a barrel and the supply was so much greater than demand that production fell off on account of the low prices. Things have changed wonderfully since then and oil has been gradually creeping up in price. At the opening of the present year the dollar mark was reached. Thursday it sold for $1.80 per barrel.

Demand Exhausted Supply.

The decrease of the stocks and the continued drain of production had begun to excite comment, and the world awakened to the situation. It was seen that an enormous demand had been created for Pennsylvania oil which demand had exhausted the supply, outgrown the ability of the country to satisfy, and on the heels of a failing production. The stock of oil on hand at the present time is 5,000,000 barrels.

May Last the Balance of the Year.

It will be seen, therefore, that the supply on hand, if no more were produced, would not run two months. But the production of the various fields in Pennsylvania is about 2,000,000 barrels a month, so that at the present rate of production and consumption the stock will last the balance of the year. However, this is not really a test, for the present consumption is lighter than for months before, and at the rate of consumption that has prevailed all winter the stocks would barely run to midsummer.

What Will It Reach?

What will oil go to is a question that is supreme above everything just now. The wise man who has followed the market through its previous surprises confesses that he does not know. The confident man has an opinion. Some predict wildly high prices, while others, taking a conservative view, say that $2.00 will be the limit. Many old wells are being re-drilled and they say perhaps new territory may be found. Should oil continue to go higher there is one thing else that will tend to lessen the consumption and keep the production sufficient. Foreign countries take great quanties of American petroleum, which has no equal anywhere in the world. No doubt when a certain point is reached in the price of the American article it will become too high for the foreigner, to whom price is considerable of an object, and the miserable Russian oil will take its place.

THE DELAWARE SENATORSHIP.

Massey To Be Supported by the Addicks Faction.

Dover, April 13.—There is a probability that the present deadlock for United States senator to succeed Anthon J. Higgins will be broken within the next few days. The ground for this prophecy is the statement made by Senator Hanby, leader of the Addicks faction, in which he said that the next United States senator would be George Y. Massey and that he would be chosen within three weeks. Since the death of the late Gov. Marvil there has been a disposition on the part of the Higgins and Addicks followers to unite on some one favorable to both factions. The statement of Senator Hanby that Massey will eventually be elected looks as though the Addicks people are weakening, as it has been known all along that Addicks was very bitter against Massey because the latter allowed his name to go before the legislature. The 109th ballot resulted as follows: Higgins 9, Addicks 5, Massey 4, Pennewill 1, Ridgley 9, Bayard 1.

He says that Lord Cromer, the British minister, is planning a fresh expedition to Dongola in order to create a complication and afford an excuse to maintain the British occupation of Egypt, and concludes with the assertion that the natives look to France for a solution of the present situation.

KEEPERS ARE BLAMED

Perry's Escape Due to Violation of Rules.

McGuire Fashioned Keys from Metal Spoons Carelessly Left in His Possession—Aided in Unlocking His Cell by Another Patient—The Recapture of Quigley.

Newburgh, N. Y., April 13.—Dr. Allison, superintendent of the Matteawan asylum for the criminal insane, has given out the following statement regarding the manner in which the escape, Wednesday night, of five inmates was effected:

Attendants Violated Rules.

Upon the return of Quigley, who was captured yesterday afternoon in a box car at New Hamburg, a statement was obtained from him showing that the escape was due to a violation on the part of the attendants of the rules of the institution and also to carelessness in the manner of locking up. A portion of the inmates of the isolated building were allowed to go to the diningroom to their meals, but McGuire and Perry, among several others, received their meals in their rooms.

Gave Them Metal Spoons.

Their food was given to them upon a metal spoon. The regulations are that utensils of this character should always be counted in and out, so that nothing could be secreted in the room. By a neglect of this precaution, McGuire became the possessor of two spoons with which he was enabled to fashion keys to the outer door.

McGuire Made Keys.

It is not certain how he obtained the pattern or the key, but he evidently worked in conjunction with another patient of the ward, to whom he passed the keys of the door. This patient, on the way to supper, unlocked the lower lock, which was entirely beyond the reach of any patient confined in the room, and this fact led to the suspicion that the doors could not be opened without collusion on the part of some outsiders.

Assisted by a Patient.

This was true, but the assistance was afforded by means of the patient in the ward and the neglect of the attendants to properly try the doors that evening. The lower bolt not being properly thrown, it is said, McGuire was enabled through the observation opening in the door, to reach the upper lock. It is not known certainly whether McGuire was able to reach the upper lock through the observation opening of the door, or whether he was assisted in a similar way by the patient Davis.

Waited in Perry's Cell.

At any rate, after the visit of the night watchman, McGuire left his room and opened Quigley's door, and the two entered the room of Perry, where they remained until the roundsman's approaching visit. When reaching the door, the watchman was suddenly set upon and secured in the manner that has been related by the press, and as he was found.

A Reward for Perry's Capture.

Albany, April 13.—Gov. Morton has issued a proclamation offering a reward of $1,000 for the capture of Oliver Curtis Perry, who recently escaped from the Matteawan asylum for insane criminals.

HIS SALARY INCLUDED

President Cleveland Fills Out His Income Blank.

Decides To Leave It to the Proper Officers Whether the Payment of the Assessment Is in Violation of the Constitution—Puzzled as to His Place of Residence.

Washington, April 13. — President Cleveland has filled out his income tax blank and will probably make his return to-day. In it he has included his salary of $50,000 as chief executive, on which the tax will be $920, deciding to leave it to the proper officers to determine whether the payment of the two per cent. assessment will be in violation of that provision of the federal constitution which says the compensation of the president shall not be increased nor diminished during the term for which he shall have been elected. As to the payment of the tax, Mr. Cleveland has until the first of July to do it, and as the constitutional question affecting his salary will undoubtedly have been passed on before that time, the president will wait for the disposition of the matter.

Undecided as to His Home.

Private Secretary Thurber was asked whether the president would make return to the collector of internal revenue for the southern district of New York, but Mr. Thurber would give no information on the subject. The tariff law directs that the income tax shall be paid by individuals "to the collector or a deputy collector of the district in which they reside." It is said that Mr. Cleveland is uncertain as to whether he should claim Buzzards bay or New York city as his place of residence, and that for this reason it is not unlikely that he will send in his return to the deputy collector at Washington.

GENTRY COMMITTED.

Will Probably Plead Insanity as His Defense for Murder.

Philadelphia, April 13. — James B. Gentry, the actor who shot and killed his fiance, Margaret Drysdale (Madge Yorke), the actress, in this city on February 17, was arraigned before a coroner's jury yesterday afternoon, and formally committed to prison to await the action of the grand jury. Gentry has practically recovered from the wounds he inflicted upon himself in the attempt at suicide after the murder. His defense will probably be insanity.

ACTED IN SELF DEFENSE.

Cincinnati, April 13.—After hearing witnesses the coroner of Covington, Ky., rendered a verdict of self defense in the killing of J. L. Sandford by Senator William Goebel. The preliminary hearing of Goebel before the police judge it set down for to-day, when the friends of the dead banker state they will produce evidence to show a cause of assassination.

SHOOTING LONG PLANNED.

Li Hung's Assailant Thought Him the Disturber of the Orient's Peace.

San Francisco, April 13.—The following advices were received by the steamship Coptic, from Tokio March 29: The young man who shot Li Hung Chang is the son of a member of the prefectural assembly of Gamma prefecture, in the north of Japan. Having watched the course of events for some years back Rokunosuke had come to the conclusion that as the control of China's interference in Corean affairs was vested in Viceroy Li, on him also rested the responsibility for all of Corea's foreign complications. There could be no permanent peace in the Orient so long as the viceroy lived, hence he determined to kill the old statesman, and had even projected a voyage to China for that purpose, but his means proved insufficient. By great economy he had succeeded in traveling the 600 miles to Simonoseki. He procured in Yokohama the old six-shooter with which he shot the envoy.

NEARLY SEVEN MILLIONS LOST.

What the Rise in Beef Means to the Consumers in New York.

New York, April 13.—On a basis of 1,350,000 pounds of beef daily distributed in this city by the Big Four—Armour & Co., the Swifts, Nelson Morris & Co. and Schwarzchild & Sulzburger—the United States Dressed Beef company and Joseph Stern, the rise of two cents, if maintained until July 1, will cost the consumers of New York about $3,313,000. But the best judges of the condition of the cattle market declare that the high price will continue until Oct. 1, the extra tax on this city for this one article of food will reach the enormous sum of $6,717,000.

STEVENSON'S LAST NOVEL.

He has the manuscripts of the author's last works, which he is taking to England to be published. They include a novel, "St. Ives," complete with the exception of two chapters, and the "Vailima Letters," written by the novelist to Sidney Colville, at the British museum. FATAL FIRE IN WORCESTER.

One Fireman Killed, Another Fatally Hurt by Falling Bricks.

Worcester, Mass., April 13.—The most serious fire which has visited this city for a number of years did $50,000 damage last night to the five-story block owned by the Kinnicutt estate on Main street, killing one fireman, probably injuring another and slightly injuring three others. They were in the rear of the building, pulling up their ladder, when a corner fell off the roof and they were buried beneath the mass of bricks.

They themselves had narrow escapes.

The Thunderer on Our Income Tax.

London, April 13.—In a leader praising the United States supreme court for its income tax decision the Times says to-day: "If we were under the United States constitution, Sir William Harcourt's budget would have been declared unconstitutional. Populist leaders in America must envy us the freedom of dealing with other people's property, enjoyed in this motherland of liberty."

TOWN AND HOME FAVORITE.

DETECTIVE SAGACITY.

The Sleuth Had to Think Twice, but He Hit It the Second Time.

When Hiram Noodlehead went to sleep on the night of March 10 he had $20 worth of gold in his teeth. When he awoke on the following morning, which was Monday, there was no gold in his teeth. It was the most peculiar robbery on record. Mr. Noodlehead occupied a room in a leading Lincoln, Neb., hotel, and before retiring had bolted the door securely and had seen that the window and transom were fastened. In the morning everything was apparently as he had left it, but the gold was gone from his teeth, and there were aching voids where it had been.

Mr. Noodlehead didn't worry so much over the loss of the gold, but he is a man who detests mysteries, and he knew that he could not sleep until he knew who had robbed him and how he had been robbed. Consequently he sent for Old Swayback, the great Lincoln detective, who happened to be with me when he was telephoned for. Together we went to Mr. Noodlehead's room, where the circumstances were explained to us. Old Swayback examined the room carefully, and a say by the knitting of his brows that he was puzzled. When he had concluded his examination he threw himself in a chair and studied, while Mr. Noodlehead and I stood in a corner admiring him and thinking what a wonderful man he was. Suddenly he raised his head and said:

"Mr. Noodlehead, are you a somnambulist?"

"No; I never walked in my sleep in my life."

"That destroys one theory; I thought perhaps you had got up in your sleep and removed the gold from your teeth yourself. Nobody entered this room while you slept; that I'd swear to. Ah!"

The great detective uttered this exclamation as his eyes fell upon a medicine bottle upon the washstand. He seized the bottle eagerly, applied it to his nostrils, and smiled in a way that told us the mystery was solved.

"You are afflicted with that tired feeling, Mr. Noodlehead?"

"Yes, and I have been taking medicine for it. I took a dose before I went to sleep last night."

Old Swayback poured a few drops of the medicine on a link of his gold watch chain and the link immediately dissolved. "This medicine," said the great detective, "will dissolve any mineral and ruin the human stomach, yet men are fools enough to take it, even when it melts the gold in their teeth. Now, aside from my profession as a detective, I am agent for Dr. Swinkum's Elixir of Goose Eggs which will relieve that tired feeling, build up the system, remove distress after eating; it is purely vegetable and has thirteen ingredients—"

Mr. Noodlehead at once purchased one thousand bottles.

Sorry She Spoke.

A certain Scotch minister is wont to relate how, having been out all day visiting, he called on an old dame well known for her kindness and hospitality. After some conversation she began getting out her best china and whatever delicacies were at hand to honor her unexpected guest. As he sat watching the preparations his eye suddenly fell on four or five cats devouring some cold porridge under the table.

"Dear me, Miss Black," he observed, "what a number of cats! Do they all belong to you?"

"Na, na, sir," was the innocent reply; "but mony a time I say that a' the hungry brutes in the parish come tae me, seeking a meal o' meat."

Then the good woman bethought her, and in her embarrassment nearly dropped a tea cup.—Harper's Magazine.

Beware of ptntments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

A Narrow Escape.

Mrs. Todd of East Front street accompanied Mr. Stevenson of the Riding Academy to Washingtonville a few days ago for the purpose of purchasing a horse.

When nearing their destination a small boy appeared in the road with a wheelbarrow. The horse Mr. Stevenson was driving became frightened and tried to run away. One wheel of the carriage was broken and Mrs. Todd was thrown out, but was not injured. She was taken in a house nearby and after the excitement was over brought to Plainfield.

Mr. Stevenson was not injured and he succeeded in holding his horse.

A Runaway Horse.

While driving in the lower part of the city yesterday afternoon about 1:30, the horse of S. C. Baker became frightened and started to run away. Mr. Baker jumped out of the wagon, and the horse ran up West Fifth to New street and then over West Front as far as Grove, where E. S. Jones was knocked down, but not injured. Arthur B. Horton and several bystanders caught the animal, and no further damage was done.

A STARTLING FACT.

Sixteen Per Cent. of Life Insurance Applicants Rejected on Account of Diseased Kidneys.

Dr. Lambert the General medical director of the Equitable Life Insurance Company, New York, is reported to have said: "We reject sixteen per cent. of the applications for insurance, and I have saved the entire expense of this medical department by the rejection of applicants who had diseased kidneys, and who died within two years after I rejected them."

This appalling statement should have the attention of our citizens. There is no reason today why people should allow kidney disease to get such a hold on them. Nature sends her warning in the slight pain in the back, poor circulation of blood, sediment in the urine When any of these symptoms appear, Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy should be taken in small doses at once, and thus drive the poison out of the blood and restore the kidneys to healthy action. To cure knowledge this is the only medicine that surely cures this almost universal complaint.

We note the recovery of Mr. Oscar Lambert of Perico, Mo., whose case has been talked of in the papers the world over. Quoting from his letter to the press, Mr. Lambert says: "I neglected the first symptoms until I found myself in bed with a complicated disease of the kidneys. No mortal ever suffered more and lived. My physician failed to help me. I then used Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. It relieved my kidneys almost immediately, and in a few weeks I was clear of all pain, and entirely cured.

Favorite Remedy has had more free advertising in the columns of the daily papers than anything we know of, from the fact that it does as is promised—cures disease.

EASTER THOUGHTS

ING, happy bells of Easter time!
The world is glad to hear your chime.
Across wide fields of melting snow
The winds of summer softly blow,
And birds and streams repeat the chime
Of Easter time.
Ring, happy bells of Easter time!

The world takes up your chant sublime—
"The Lord is risen!" The night of fear
Has passed away, and heaven draws near.
We breathe the air of that blest clime
At Easter time.

—Lucy Larcom.

HE full disclosure of resurrection—that is to say, the rising of the spirit, in all its amplitude and power, after the body is dropped—is the grand climacteric fact, but the preparation for it, which is a part of it and which leads to it, is going on in all this mortal struggle.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Does the sun dance on Easter days,
As the old faiths decreed?
Ah, no; in varying moods and ways,
With blue skies or with clouded rays,
Now golden bright, now veiled and chill,
Now black with storm, he comes, but still
The Lord is risen indeed!

—Susan Coolidge.

ND now comes Easter morning! What does it mean? Do you not see? Every old guess and dream and hope becomes suddenly lighted up with certainty. Lo, it is true! Death is not the end of all things.—Phillips Brooks.

Oh, freely swing and grandly swell,
Ye church tower bells, with merry din!
The darkness of our souls expel
And let the light of love come in.

Break brightly, glorious Easter morn,
Into these gloomy hearts of ours,
That they, too, may this day adorn
And shed a perfume like the flowers.

—Charles H. Crandall.

AM debtor both to the Greeks and to the barbarians, said the great apostle. And we Christians of a later day, who are not much better than Paul, although we hate to own it—we, too, are debtors to the old barbarians who invented the Easter festival for us. It is the survival of the fittest. Eastre, the old, or rather young—whoever heard of an old goddess?—Teutonic goddess of spring has been laid away in the museum, lo! these many years, but the festival, beautifully consecrated to holier ideas, we keep. God bless the barbarian, then!—Robert J. Burdette.

O dearest bloom the seasons know,
Flowers of the resurrection blow,
Our hope and faith restore,
And through the bitterness of death
And loss and sorrow breathe a breath
Of life forevermore!

The thought of love immortal blends
With fond remembrances of friends;
In you, O sacred flowers,
By human love made doubly sweet,
The heavenly and the earthly meet,
The heart of Christ and ours.

—Whittier.

RE not all things glad when the Easter morning breaks? Does not the sun, even to our dull vision, seem to rise with a grander meaning of triumph than on common days? Every wave of his light that bathes our being, does it not seem translucent, as if it had borrowed afresh the glory that lies forever on the sea of glass that surrounds the throne of God? Do not our hearts thrill with an intenser joy as we come from the gloom of the place where they laid him, to stand with his beloved ones, looking on the empty sepulcher, or seeing, with Mary, the stately, gentle and benignant form of the risen Christ?—T. De Witt Talmage.

The voices ring which once were stilled.
The pulses beat which once were chilled.
"Life is the victory of the grave.
Christ is Lord of the Lord of Death!"

—Helen Hunt Jackson.

HE first Easter morning was the daybreak of immortality, the dawning of the light of hope and faith and joy, never again to fade out of the skies.—Lyman Abbott.

The weary world to heaven ascends.
The Lord is risen! Blot from your heart
Old memories of sin and wrong.
The Lord is risen! Take now your part
In his eternal Easter song.

—Charles R. Burke.

GOFF'S PAY, $20,000

Lexow Counsel Not Satisfied with the Amount.

The Fee of $11,250 To Be Paid to Him by the State Is a Paltry Sum, He Declares—Would Rather Have the State Remain His Debtor Than Accept So Small a Remuneration.

New York, April 13.—Recorder Goff is by no means satisfied by the additional amount which it is proposed to pay him for his services as counsel to the Lexow committe. The fee suggested is $11,250. When seen this morning he said: "I don't care to discuss the matter until I have seen my colleagues. I said yesterday that the sum was a paltry one is settlement of my just claim, and that I would rather the state of New York remain my debtor than accept so small a remuneration. Beyond this I have nothing to say just now. I have not been officially notified of the amount, and can't really say anything definite upon the subject until I have seen my colleagues."

Compensation for His Labors.

Mr. Goff worked six months for the committee, and with the money paid to him from the sum advanced by the chamber of commerce and the amount from the state will make a total sum of $20,000 for his services. Besides this his election to the office of recorder was greatly aided by his success in the Lexow investigation.

Pretty Good Pay for Any Man.

Senator Lexow was spoken to last night about Mr. Goff being dissatisfied because the legislature only appropriated him $11,250 for his services as counsel to the committee. The senator said that as a matter of fact Goff got much more than that for his work. "The $17-500 which the chamber of commerce advanced for counsel fees was divided between Goff, Jerome and Moss," said Senator Lexow. "Goff got half of it, and the other two received one-fourth each. As Goff had to pay none of his expenses, he really made $20,000 during the six months which he worked for the committee, and I think that is pretty good pay for any man.

Sutherland Not Overpaid.

"As to the complaint of Parkhurst that Sutherland should have got about $37.50 instead of $7,500 which the senate appropriates for him, I can only say that Mr. Sutherland paved the way for Goff and his work at the beginning of the investigation which was of the highest importance. He took up the purity of the ballot box, and that interested the people throughout the state more than anything else."

WOMEN RUNNING THE PAPER.

Last Night's Work on the Elmira Advertiser Done by Fair Editors.

Elmira April 13.—The issue of the Elmira Daily Advertiser for to-day was edited last night by representatives of the women of Elmira for the benefit of the Y. M. C. A. The ladies had to go beyond the regulation twenty-four pages of the average women's edition and enlarged their borders to twenty-eight pages. Among their contributors are Amelia Barr, Louise Chandler Moulton, Delia Lyman Porter, Rachel B. Gleason and Annie Ford Eastman. The subjects treated cover a wide range of matter. The issue will consist of 50,000 copies.

Terrible Battle for Life.

Halifax, April 13.—A story of a terrible battle for life reached here at midnight from Catatina, N. F. Five men went out shooting in a boat. A squall upset it, but the men righted it. Time after time this occurred until the men could do nothing more than cling to the upturned craft, which was three miles in Trinity bay. One after another succumbed to the cold and high seas which were constantly breaking over them until, but one, Joseph White, remained. He was rescued more dead than alive, but will recover.

State Troops Called for.

Centreville, Ia., April 13.—The situation at Cincinnati has grown so serious that the sheriff has wired the governor for militia. It is reported that company B is now on its way there. The miners are still at work, but the strikers, who marched there to induce them to quit, threaten trouble.

Pastor Convicted of Adultery.

Waynesburg, Pa., April 13.—Rev. W. M. Williams, formerly pastor of the Mount Morris Methodist Protestant church, has been convicted in court here of adultery, but has not yet been sentenced. The penalty is $500 fine or one year's imprisonment or both.

Speed of Trolley Cars Limited.

New Haven, Conn., April 13.—The board of councilmen have passed an order limiting the speed of the trolley cars at street crossings to six miles an hour, and fixing the maximum speed allowed within a half mile of the city hall at eight miles an hour.

Tattooed by Her Husband.

Conscience Contribution.

Washington, April 13.—A conscience contribution of $25 from Cincinnati has been received at the treasury department and placed to the credit of the conscience fund.

A Society Leader Cremated.

Boston, April 13.—The body of Mrs. Horace Bloodgood, a prominent leader in Providence society, who died in that city recently, was cremated yesterday afternoon at Forest Hills.

Property of ex-Gov. Flower Burned.

Utica, N. Y., April 13.—The American block, Watertown, owned by ex-Gov. Flower, was destroyed to the extent of $60,000 by fire last night.

France and Britain Make Up.

London, April 13.—The report that the threatened breach between France and England had been smoothed over by Soveleum is well received here.

A Wide Range.

A preparation which enriches and purifies the blood and assists nature in repairing wasted tissue must have a wide range of usefulness.

Such a preparation is Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda. The uses of Scott's Emulsion are not confined to wasting diseases, like consumption, scrofula or anæmia. They embrace nearly all those minor ailments associated with loss of flesh.

THE CHRONICLES OF MARTIN HEWITT

By ARTHUR MORRISON.

THE CASE OF THE MISSING HAND.

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson and Bacheller.]

"Then, you will remember, I went at your request to see the footprints of the Fosters on the part of the path past the watercourse. Here, again, it was muddy in the middle, and the two brothers had walked as far apart as before, although nobody had walked between them. A final proof, if one were needed, of my theory as to the three lines of footprints.

"Now I was to consider how to get at the man who had taken the hand. He should be punished for the mutilation, but beyond that he would be required as a witness. Now all the foot-tracks in the vicinity had been accounted for. There were those of the brothers and of Sneathy, which we have been speaking of; those of the rustics looking on, which, however, stopped a little way off, and did not interfere with our sphere of observation; those of your man who had cut straight through the wood when he first saw the body and had come back the same way with you; and our own, which we had been careful to keep away from the others. Consequently there was no track of the man who had cut off the hand; therefore it was certain that he must have come along the hard gravel by the watercourse, for that was the only possible path which would not tell the tale. Indeed, it seems quite a likely path through the wood for a passenger to take, coming from the high ground by the Shepperton road. Brett and I left you and traversed the watercourse, both up and down. We found a foot print at the top left lately by a man with a broken shoe. Right down to the bottom of the watercourse where it emerged from the wood there was no sign on either side of this man having left the gravel. (Where the body was, as you will remember, he would simply have stepped off the gravel on to the grass, which I thought it useless to examine as I have explained.) But at the bottom, by the lane, the footprint appeared again. This then was the direction in which I was to search for a left-handed man with a broken-soled shoe, probably a gypsy, and most probably a foreign gypsy—because a foreign gypsy would be the most likely to hold still the belief in the Hand of Glory. I conjectured the man to be a straggler from a band of gypsies—one who probably had got behind the caravan and had made a short cut across the wood after it, so at the end of the lane I look for a patrin. This is a sign that gypsies leave to guide stragglers following up. Sometimes it is a heap of dead leaves, sometimes a few stones, sometimes a mark on the ground, but more usually a couple of twigs crossed, with the longer twig pointing the road. Guided by these patrins we came in the end on the gypsy camp just as it was settling down for the night. We made ourselves agreeable (as Brett will probably describe to you better than I can), we left them, and after they had got to sleep we came back and watched for the gentleman who is now in the lock-up. He would, of course, seize the first opportunity of treating his ghastly trophy in the prescribed way, and I guessed he would choose midnight, for that is the time the superstition teaches that the hands should be repared. We made a few small preparations, collared him, and now you've got him. And I should think the sooner you let the brothers Foster go the better."

"But why didn't you tell me all the conclusions you had arrived at, at the time?" asked Mr. Hardwick.

"Well, really," Hewitt replied, with a quiet smile, "you were so positive, and some of the traces I relied on were so small that it would probably have meant a long argument and a loss of time. But more than that, confess—if I had told you bluntly that Sneathy's hand had been taken away to make a mediæval charm to enable a thief to pass through a locked door and steal plate calmly under the owner's nose what would you have said?"

HE HAD ESCAPED!

"Well, well, perhaps I should have been a little skeptical. Appearances combined so completely to point to the Fosters as murderers that any other explanation, almost, would have seemed unlikely to me, and that—well no, I confess, I shouldn't have believed in it. But it is a startling thing to find such superstitions alive nowadays."

"Yes, perhaps it is. Yet we find survivals of the sort very frequently. The Wallachians, however, are horribly superstitious still — the gypsies among them are of course worse. Don't you remember the case reported a few months ago in which a child was drowned as a sacrifice in Wallachia in order to bring rain? And that was not done by gypsies, either. Even in England, as late as 1865, a poor paralyzed Frenchman was killed by being 'swum' for witchcraft—that was in Essex. And less atrocious cases of belief in wizardry occur again and again even now."

Then Mr. Hardwick and my uncle fell into a discussion as to how the gypsy in the lock-up could be legally punished. Mr. Hardwick thought it should be treated as a theft of a portion of a dead body, but my uncle fancied there was a penalty for mutilation of a dead body per se, though he could not point to the statute. As it happened, however, they were saved the trouble of arriving at a decision, for in the morning he was discovered to have escaped. He had been left, of course, with free hands, and had occupied the night in wrenching out the bars at the top of the back wall of the little prison-shed (it had stood on the green for a hundred and fifty years) and climbed out. He was not found again, and a month or two later the Foster family left the district entirely.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery and it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c."

WOMEN IN THE SPRING.

They Need Nothing So Much as Paine's Celery Compound.

In the spring women need Paine's celery compound.

The average American woman, says a well known writer, wears herself out twenty years before her time. She begins the wearing-out process as a child, staying up at night until the whole family retires; and keeps it up as a growing girl, staying awake till ten or eleven o'clock, when she should be asleep by nine; and as a woman she has so many things to do and to keep up with that she positively hasn't a minute to rest.

By and by her cheeks grow thin and haggard; languor takes the place of her old-time high spirits; she has a generally worn-out air; her nerves are gnawed by pain, and sleeplessness makes fearful inroads upon her health.

Her physician tells her simply that her nervous system is exhausted, and that help must come by feeding the brain and entire nervous tract, richly, rapidly, and completely. It is the experience of the most careful medical men in this country that nothing proves so uniformly successful as Paine's celery compound in cases of brain-weariness, nervous inability, failure of vital force, dyspepsia, sleeplessness, and for restoring health and vigor to the brain and body when exhausted by overwork or dissipation.

Every such weary, nervous, thin-blooded person should take Paine's celery compound. It makes such people well.

Paine's celery compound improves the general health by making new, ruddy blood and refreshing the nerves.

It reanimates the languid body, and vitalizes the important organs so that they work in harmony with each other.

The accomplished editor of the Oakland, Ill., Ledger, a portrait of whose wife is given above, says in his own paper editorially:

"Our leading druggist, Dr. W. G. Gregory, informs us that his sales of Paine's celery compound have been wonderful; in fact, he states that he has in six months sold more celery compound than all other medicines combined. There has been a constant demand for it.

"One of the noticeable cures that this medicine has made is the case of Mr. Phil Clintard, who last spring was republican candidate for county treasurer. Mr. Clintard's nerves were all unstrung; he had no appetite and was all run down. He commenced using Paine's celery compound, and today there is not a more well and vigorous citizen in this whole community than Mr. Clintard. Another case that comes closer is that of the wife of the editor of Ledger. Every one in Oak and knows that Mrs. Yeargin was confined to her bed for three whole months with neuralgia. At times her pains were awful, so much so that her hands would clinch and it took the united strength of two persons to straighten out her fingers. Dr. Garvey, the family physician, treated her for months, but all he could do was to alleviate the pains, not effecting a cure. Along last winter she commenced using Paine's celery compound.

"She commenced to gain in flesh at once. Her pain all went away; her vitality increased weekly, and today there is not a more healthy woman in town than she. Her neighbors all marvel at her complete recovery, and ask her the cause, and she has no hesitancy in saying that it is all due to Paine's celery compound. This is given voluntarily in the hopes that others who are afflicted may be profited by using this great medicine, which today is without a peer in the land."

EASTER IN PLAINFIELD.

Thorough Celebration of a Beautiful Day.

CHURCHES FINELY DECORATED.

Every House of Worship Adorned with Flowers and Musical with Anthems and Choruses—Special Choirs and Special Easter Sermons.

Easter Sunday, a day of sunshine and gladness, was richly celebrated in the Plainfield houses of worship.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

The services in the First Baptist Church were well attended. A large choir under the direction of E. J. Fitzhugh, organist, rendered a choice selection of Easter music. The choir consisted of Miss F. May Grant, Miss Bessie Blair, Miss Swain, Miss Emma Case, Mrs. Roe, Miss Spear, Mrs. Harold Serrell, sopranos; Miss Gussie Runyon, Miss Nancy Randolph, Miss Florence Kline, Miss Bertha Needham, Miss Grace Bonny, Miss Overton, altos; B. T. Barnes, Wm. Holmes, Stacey Reynolds, Geo. Snediker, basses; C. W. McCutchen, Mr. Smith, Mr. Douglass, Mr. Roe, tenors. At the morning service solo parts were taken by Miss Grant, Miss Kline, Mr. Smith and Wm. Holmes. In the afternoon at 3, the Sunday-schools of the First and Mt. Olive Baptist churches and East Third Street Mission met in the First Church and enjoyed a well arranged programme of Easter carols. Mr. Drake, pianist, and Mr. Gruett, violinist, rendered several selections, assisted by the organ. A feature of the service was the rendition of Phillips Brooks's "God's Garden on Easter Day", by Miss Addie Parker Jackson, with organ accompaniment by E. J. Fitzhugh. It was charmingly given and very impressive. An excellent address by Mayor Alexander Gilbert was greatly enjoyed by all. The decorations were beautiful, and consisted chiefly of Easter lilies and callas from the conservatories of C. W. McCutchen and L. W. Serrell, Sr. Reports were read by Secretary C. H. Smith of the main school, Superintendent M. C. Dobbins of the Mt. Olive school, and Superintendent L. W. Randolph of the East Third Street Mission, all showing improvement and growth in the various departments. There was no evening service.

CHURCH OF THE HOLY CROSS.

The Church of the Holy Cross was filled with flowers that were arranged with great taste, the altar being completely set with them, and over which the cross seemed to surmount with especial significance at that time. Rev. T. Logan Murphy preached a sermon in the morning that was particularly appropriate to the occasion. The children's service in the afternoon was the most important and interesting of the day, and there was a large attendance of the younger parishoners. It was commenced with a procession singing "We March to Victory", followed with prayers and vereicles. Before the lesson was read the Easter carol of "Christ the Lord is Ris'n Again" was rendered in a manner that evinced a well-trained choir. After the rendition "Ring Ye Bells" and "Sing Sweet Carols Night is Past" and creed and prayers had been said Rector Murphy addressed the congregation in a strain that was easily comprehended by his juvenile hearers, and gave to them a clearer understanding of what the celebration of the day betokened. The exercises were closed by singing "Alleluia, Christ is Risen".

ST. MARY'S CHURCH.

Easter was very appropriately observed at St. Mary's R. C. Church yesterday morning at 10:30. The decorations of flowers around the altar were simple and impressive, while over them were the words illumined "He is Risen, Hallelujah!" The musical part of the service, in charge of Miss St. Leger, organist, and M. J. Cashin, director, was finely rendered. The soloists were: Soprano, Miss May Flanagan, Miss Alice Keeley; alto, Miss Jennie Keeley; tenor, T. J. Cumerford; baritone, Wm. O'Connor. They were assisted by a chorus. The selections included Leyendecker's Vida Aquam; Gause's Second Mass in D; Offertory Cagliero; Regina Coeli. Especially noteworthy was the solo by Miss May Flanagan, "Et Incarnatus Est".

TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH.

Especially joyous for the people of Trinity Reformed Church was the celebration of Easter, for it marked the freedom of the church from debt. A liberal-hearted friend who modestly insisted that his name be withheld had donated the amount needed to pay the balance due, and all were rejoiced to note the prospects of continued prosperity. A detailed statement of the year's receipts and disbursements was read by Elder Robert Clark of the Finance Committee of the Consistory, previous to the morning sermon, showing wise disposition of the church treasurer's fund, which was $5,491.57. The church was freed from debt, and there was a balance of $22 23 in the hands of the church treasurer, George Gayle. The Easter services of the church were beautified by artistic floral decorations. White and green prevailed. Circling around the pulpit were potted blooming plants, lilies, roses, and beautiful ferns. At the left of the pastor, on the platform, stood a large white cross gracefully entwined with smilax. The effect was admirable, and was the result of no little labor of the flower committee of the Christian Endeavor society, Misses May Sheppard, Grace Berg, Carrie Mehl, Lizzie Dunlap and Viola Huff. The special Easter music was by Organist A. L. Titsworth and a choir, Miss Etta Krymer and Mrs. J. C. VanDyke, soprano; Miss Lizzie Dunn and Miss Emma Gillem, alto; Robert Clark, tenor, and A. J. Morse and F. S. Cutter, bass. Mr. Titsworth is entitled to much credit for his labors in specially training the choir, and for his superb organ music. In the morning Rev. Cornelius Schenck, the pastor, delivered a carefully prepared sermon, his subject being "Christ's resurrection is according to Scripture", and his text "He rose again the third day according to the Scriptures"—I Cor. xv:4. The evening service was in charge of the Sunday-school. It was an inspiring sight to see the Sunday-school march in from the lecture room, singing "Hail the Day", the song from which the title of the service was taken. The programme, including singing by the choir and Sunday-school, and responsive readings by all, was excellently rendered. Short addresses were made by Pastor Schenck and Superintendent Anthony. The singing by the primary department, and recitation by 10 little ones, were an enjoyable feature. Mr. Allen accompanied the organ with claironet playing. The attendance was large.

CHURCH OF THE REDEEMER.

The morning service at the Church of the Redeemer was notable because of the largest attendance yet recorded since its formation. Arranged about the pulpit was a beautiful display of Easter lilies, geraniums, yellow daisies and potted palms, while on the walls were specially designed banners with Scriptural quotations of an Easter purport. Early communion at 7:30 in the morning, at which the sacraments were administered, was well attended. Rev. Jocelyn Johnson preached his sermon from the Gospel of St. John, XXII: 9, which is "For as yet they knew not the Scripture that He must rise again from the dead". The Sunday-school Easter festival, with evening prayer and address by the rector, was commenced at 4:30, at which an artistic musical programme was rendered. The offerings of all services were used as nucleus for a contingent fund for the acquisition of a church property, recently established by the vestry, this being the first organized effort for the fund. The floral decorations were made by the members of the Ladies Guild, assisted by M. Hardslew.

ST. JOSEPH'S CHURCH.

In St. Joseph's church the altars were resplendent with floral pieces and decorations. Potted plants and palms, Easter lilies and cut flowers, entwined all portions of it and caused a happy effect for the eye, besides sending forth a fragrance that made the atmosphere sweet with odor of the blooming flowers. The 8:30 mass, by Weigand, was sung by a double quartette, closing with the Benedictus by the same author. An elaborate musical programme was rendered at high mass by the regular quartettes and chorus, under the direction of Choir Master James Bailey, after which Father Miller preached an able sermon on the significance to Christians of the resurrection of Christ. At this service the paschal candle—symbolic of the Lord—was lighted. In the evening the regular vespers were sung.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Lilies and palms were the principal floral decorations in the First Presbyterian Church yesterday. Palms were tastefully arranged along the edge of the platform, while Easter and calla lilies were grouped on the communion table or placed between the palms. Amaryllis, daffodils and other bright flowers added the requisite color to the display. In the morning the chorus choir of sixteen voices rendered the special Easter music. The first was an anthem "Christ is Risen", Aitken; in which the solo part was sung by Herbert Schutt. The offertory was "He is Risen", by Schilling, in which the solo parts parts were sung by Miss Catherine Glenn, Miss Charlotte Messersmith, Herbert Schutt and Mr. Peck. The organ selections were rendered by W. E. MacClymont in his customary excellent manner. Rev. C. E. Herring preached an Easter sermon, taking for his text the passage from John telling of the appearance of the risen Lord. In the afternoon the Easter services of the Sunday-school were held in the church proper. After an opening selection by the school "Awake, O Earth," The superintendent led in prayer and Scripture reading. Another song followed "Happy Easter Day" and then the recitation "The Easter Day" was rendered by Miss Margaret Cave, Miss Grace E. Overton, Miss Mabel Ladd, Miss Mary Lumley, and Miss Eleanor T. Van Deventer. Another song "Jesus Lives," after which the primary department, represented by eight little children, gave a recitation and all the ddpartment sang "Fair Lillies." A selection by the choir came next and included a solo by Miss Louise De Goiyer, and a duet by Miss DeGoiyer and Miss Charlotte Messersmith, the whole choir singing the chorus. Rev. Charles E. Herring then spoke a few words to the Sunday-school and told of the meaning of the word Easter and how this day came to be known by that name. After the selection "Lift up your Heads" by the whole school, Superintendent Lounsbury read a letter from the principal of a colored school in Carthage, N. C., that the Sunday-school has been assisting. The services closed with the hymn "Christ Triumphant". The evening service was very largely attended, the main body of the church and the gallery being filled to their utmost capacity. The service opened with an instrumental quartette composed of W. E. McClymont, organist; Mrs. B. T. Barnes, pianist; P. Ludwig Conde, violinist; and Firmin Feller, 'cellist. The selection was Adagio in F, by Nohl, and greatly delighted the vast audience by the especially fine rendering. The singing was done almost entirely by the choir. Their first selection was "Christ hath won the victory" by Hawley, in which Miss Catherine Glen sang the solo, while Messrs. Schutt, Miner, Peck, and Hazeltine formed a very good male quartette. In the next selection, "The Heavenly Message" by Coombs. Miss Glen rendered the soprano solo. Solos by Miss Glen and John C. Peck, and a chorus by the whole choir formed the next selection "Come see the place". "Christ Hath Risen" with Herbert Schutt singing the solo was the next anthem. The last selection was the anthem "He is Risen" with short solos by Miss Glenn, Miss Charlotte Messersmith, Herbert Schutt and John C. Peck. After another instrumental selection the service came to an end. Between the anthem. Rev C. E. Herring and Rev. Mr. MacPhie made short addresses. Everyone present greatly enjoyed the beautiful music and singing, and W. E. MacClymont, organist and choirmaster, deserves great credit for the musical treat he gave the congregation.

GRACE P. E CHURCH.

Easter was observed very appropriately in Grace P. E Church last evening. A beautiful children's service was given, which a large congregation enjoyed. The Sunday-school met in their rooms and marched to the church, where they were met by the regular church choir, and the processional hymn was sung as they marched up the centre aisle. Mrs. Freeman, organist, had charge of the musical part of the service, and the various carols and anthems were well rendered. A feature was a trio, organ, cornet and triangle, by Mrs. Freeman, Miss Mary Berg and Arthur Freeman. The church decorations were exceedingly pretty, and consisted of a large number of lilies which were sent from Bermuda especially for the occasion. They were tastefully arranged about the altar, in the centre of which was a memorial cross. Addresses were made by Dr. Rodman, Superintendent of Sunday-school Mr. Dunham, and Rev. Mr. Ferguson. Dr. Rodman stated that private subscriptions to the amount of about $400 had been received. An attractive part of the service was the making of offerings. A member from each class came forward with a potted plant and placed it on a stand made for the purpose, and at the same time handed in the offering for the class. $97.35 was realized from all the classes.

CHURCH OF THE HEAVENLY REST.

Rev. Isaac VanWinkle officiated yesterday in the mission church of the Heavenly Rest, which looked bright and Easter-like with all its plants and flowers beautifully arranged by loving hands. The music was well rendered, extra voices coming in to swell the regular choir, Miss Yaeger as usual pleasing everyone with her lovely soprano. Miss Graves presided at the organ. The Sunday-school added to the music three carols, in which they had been trained for weeks past. Instead of the usual Easter card all the children received a potted plant to their great delight. The youngest child laid the Sunday-school offering on the plate at the offertory, it having been previously counted in the parish house at the Sunday-school service, and placed in an envelope. The Woman's Friendly Society did the same and made a most generous offering to the Mission, as it represented the self-denial of weeks. Mr. VanWinkle congratulated the trustees and the people on having cleared off their debt on the parish house and on their having started a "Clergyman's Fund", which he hoped would succeed, as their other work had done. He said their perseverance, patience and faith excited his sincere admiration.

GERMAN REFORMED CHURCH.

Appropriate services were held yesterday at the German Reformed Church, including special Easter music. The decorations were simple and very pretty, and consisted of a choice selection of flowers which were arranged artistically around the platform.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

Beautiful music and beautiful flowers aided greatly in the special Easter services in the Congregational Church yesterday morning. The music was supplied by Mrs. B. T. Barnes, organist, Mrs. M. E Dwight, pianist; P. Ludwig Conde, violinist; and Firmin Ferrer, 'cellist, and the harmony resulting from their united efforts was most beautiful. The voluntary was an instrumental quartette by Nohl. Preceding the Scripture reading, Mrs. S. A. Collins, artistically rendered the vocal selection "Easter Morn" by Wilkinson. Another solo was sung by Mrs. Collins, "Easter Dawn", Woodman, accompanied by organ, piano and violin, as the offertory. Rev. Charles L. Goodrich preached a sermon appropriate to the day. He took as his text II Timothy 1: 10, "Our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death and hath brought life and immortality to light". The floral decorations were pretty; they consisted principally of palms and Easter and calla lilies with smaller flowers and plants intermingled. The Sunday-school held their special Easter exercises in the afternon. They consisted of a number of carols by the school and recitations. A large green cross was placed in the centre of the platform and seven young girls, Misses Kathryn Dwight, Emma La Boyteaux, May Parmelee, Clara Van Fleet, Allie Barber, Lulu Fuller, and Amy Emmons, recited, and hung wreaths of flowers on the cross, while three younger children walked around the cross, strewing flowers at the foot. There was another recitation by five little girls, Edith Robinson, Marion Sheldon, Agnes La Boyteaux, Hattie Messersmith, and Carrie Fuller, who each recited a verse with appropriate gestures. A number of the members of the Primary Department also gave a very pleasing recitation. There were also recitations by Arthur Robinson and Miss May Parmalee. A quartette, composed of Miss M. G. Morse, Mrs. A. C. LaBoyteaux, Horace J. Martin and Stacy R Reynolds, sang two selections, while Miss Agnes LaBoyteaux, assisted by a number of other little girls gave a pleasing selection entitled "What do you think the daisies say?" Miss Emma La Boyteaux and Miss Bessie Martin also sang "Sing, little birds." The instrumenal music was supplied by Mrs. B. T. Barnes, organist; Mrs. M. E Dwight, pianist; Miss Nella Whiton and P. Ludwig Conde, violinist; and Firmin Ferrer, cellist, who rendered the selection "Serenade" by Widor, as a voluntary, in a most artistic manner.

GRACE M E CHURCH.

The Easter services in Grace M. E. Church were simple but impressive. The pulpit platform looked bright and cheerful with yellow dasies, roses, potted palms and plants. In the morning Rev. Herbert F. Randolph preached from the text, "The Power of Resurrection". The essential thought of his sermon was that the final act of resurrection was to bring about consummation of the union between the divine and the human. In this was revealed the power of resurrection, which is evinced in influence on literature of the time, on human art, and in added cheerfulness in heart, as well as seriousness. The final idea of his talk was that a knowledge of power is not a historical or scientific knowledge, but a knowledge gained by personal resurrection from sin, which enables Christians to look at the grave not as a tomb, but as a tunnel through which pours the light of Heaven. In the afternoon a special childrens service was carried out, affording to the juveniles not only an interesting time but an added knowledge of Biblical history. "Something a Minister Ought Not to Know", was the text the pastor preached from in the evening.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Easter services of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church were held Saturday morning. After the organ voluntary by Miss Jessie Utter, the congregation sang the doxology, followed with a short prayer by the pastor. An anthem "Christ is Risen from the Dead", was beautifully rendered by the choir. Then came a hymn; reading led by Dr. Lewis, followed by a musical response by the choir. L. S. Bond sang a tenor solo, which followed the hymn "Praise God from whom all blessings flows." The choir sang a response to the reading of the lesson, and chanted a prayer after the pastor's prayer. The regular collection was taken, and during the offertory the choir rendered an anthem. The choir was under the direction of D. E. Titsworth, and consisted of Miss Mabel Mitchell, Miss Ernestine Smith, Miss Bessie Titsworth, Mrs. F. Clawson, Mrs. D. E. Titsworth, Miss Nancy Randolph, Miss Louise Lewis, Charles Randolph, L. S. Bond and Frank T. Clawson. The subject of the sermon was "Rolling away the Stone". Dr. Lewis said that as the angel of the Lord rolled away the stone before the tomb and sat upon it, so Christianity had rolled away from our civilization. He brought out two special points in his lessons, altruism, or our obligation to others, and personal immortality. He said: Civilization will never be lifted from the sin which rests upon it until these two ideas are more thoroughly understood and recognized; that civilization is indebted to Christianity for everything that it enjoys. After the sermon, the choir beautifully rendered another anthem, the solos of which were sung by Mrs. F. T. Clawson, Miss Nancy Randolph, D. E. Titsworth, and Lewis Bond. A short prayer, followed by the benediction, closed the morning services. The floral decorations were beautifully arranged by the flower committee of the Christian Endeavor society. In front of the pulpit was a large cluster of Easter lilies, and on each side was a profusion of palms, carnations and daisies. The larger plants were placed nearest the centre, and diminishing down to the smaller ones at the ends, and causing a very pretty effect.

FIRST M. E CHURCH.

The First M. E. Church held special Easter services yesterday. A large chorus choir supplied the vocal music. It was composed of: Mrs L S Bond, Misses Lucie Davis, Edna Harris, Florence Barnes, Maud French, Nellie Martin, Alice Jenkins, Lizzie Stafford, sopranos; Misses Cora Shepard, Eva Jenkins, Etta Raybert, altos; L S Bond, Robert Davis, Robert Douglas, tenors; George Rose, Raymond McGee, Arthur Crane, basses; D. E. Davis, organist. The floral decorations were very artistic and were principally composed of lilies of different kinds which were tastefully grouped around the front of the platform. In the morning Rev. Charles R. Barnes preached a sermon appropriate to the day, giving a vivid description of the crucifixion, death and resurrection of Christ. There was a tenor solo by L. H. Bond. In the evening the Sunday-school held their special services, following out the programme published in Friday's Daily Press. Quite a large number were present.

CRESCENT AVENUE CHURCH.

Potted plants and calla and Easter lilies were the principal floral decorations of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church, the front platform being filled with them. An extra number of voices were in the choir, and the music displayed great training on the part of the choirmaster. The excellent programme has already been published in The Daily Press.

PARK AVENUE BAPTIST CHURCH.

The rest of the choir were Misses Emma Fisk, Grace Remsen, Anna Wyckoff, Neva DeMitt, Mrs Nelson Runyon, Thomas Cuming, Mr. VanWinkle, Miss Cuming. The subject of the sermon was "Life and Resurrection". Pastor Richardson was very eloquent, as usual. The floral decorations were very pretty, being arranged in front of the pulpit. They consisted mostly of Easter lilies and palms.

Two bullets were found just under the skin, and another had plowed its way through the brain and lodged under the skin on the other side of the skull. It was the opinion of the physicians that he committed the fatal act Thursday night and had lain in the outhouse all day Friday.

The funeral services will be held tomorrow afternoon from the home of Chas. Smith on Richmond street at 2, and from Warren Chapel at 2:30. Rev. M. McKelvey will officiate. Delegations from both G. A. R. Posts will attend.

He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. AWOKE IN SMOKE.

Narrow Escape of E. P. Thorn and Wife from Death.

THEIR CELLAR CEILING WAS AFIRE.

Had Only Time to Seize Their Clothes and Run—Firemen Made a Quick Response to the Midnight Call, and Saved the House.

Mrs. George Thatcher and her daughter Mamie called on Mr. and Mrs. Edward P. Thorn at their home, 532 East Front street, yesterday afternoon, and towards evening Mrs. Thatcher went home leaving her daughter at Mr. and Mrs. Thorn's house. They promised to take her home early in the evening, and did so. They returned to their home about 9:30, and after Mr. Thorn had looked about the place to see that everything was all right, he and his wife retired, about 10 o'clock.

It was nearly 12 when Mr. Thorn was awakened with a choking sensation, and at once realized that there was fire in the house. He called Mrs. Thorn, who was naturally greatly frightened.

The house was filled with suffocating smoke, and they had barely time to seize their clothes and run to the back stoop, where they dressed.

Their cries for help aroused William Rockwell, Jr., who went to Mr. Bond's house, secured a fire-alarm key, and sent in a call from Box 16, about 12:15.

Hose wagons 1 and 2, No. 2 engine, and the truck, responded very quickly. The firemen found that the floor beams in the cellar were afire, and that the flames were under good headway, but the careful and excellent work of the department kept the fire below the first floor.

Mr. Thorn does not know how to account for the fire, but is inclined to believe it was caused by a leakage in gas. He says there was very little fire in the furnace. When Mr. and Mrs. Thorn awoke, they were almost suffocated with gas and smoke, and Mr. Thorn says that if they had not detected the fire as quickly as they did, both he and his wife would probably have choked to death.

The loss, Mr. Thorn was unable to determine this morning. He has $2,500 insurance on the house and $3,000 on the furniture, issued by several companies of which J. C. Pope is the agent.

In rendering this favorite story of the great novelist, the highest praise, in not a few instances, has come from men and women whose frequent reading has made them almost as familiar with the chief incidents of the narrative, as is the impersonator. Any one can read, but Mr. Underhill brings to his aid in illustrating and interpreting this beautiful tale, all the genius of the actor's art while presenting the different characters.

Going Out Into the Highways.

The Salvation Army held their second Sunday open-air meeting near Justice Nash's office on Park avenue yesterday afternoon, and attracted quite an audience by their earnest efforts. A gang of hoodlums stood on the Central tracks and endeavored to cause a disturbance by yelling profane and indecent remarks at them, but with their unostentatious ways the Salvationists paid little attention to the toughs.

The President Tells Chicago What the Nation Needs.

Chicago, April 15.—President Cleveland, in replying to the invitation of Chicago business men to address a meeting here, says the proprieties of his official place oblige him to forego the enjoyment. The president then goes over the financial situation, saying: "Disguise it as we may, the line of battle is drawn between the forces of safe currency and those of silver mono-metallism. I will not believe that if our people are afforded an intelligent opportunity for sober second thought they will sanction schemes that, however cloaked, mean disaster confusion, nor that they will consent by undermining the foundation of a safe currency to endanger the beneficient character purposes of their government."

PANIC AT A BULL FIGHT.

One Man Killed and Several Hurt at Barcelona.

The employes of the bull ring made an attempt to capture the bull, but could not get him, and finally a civil guard fired at him with his carbine, killing the animal and one of the spectators. As soon as it was known the bull was dead the spectators hurried back to their seats, and the entertainment proceeded as though nothing out of the ordinary had happened.

AGAINST THE YANKEE

Spanish Feeling in Cuba Running High.

Officials Putting Themselves Out of Their Way To Make It Inconvenient for Americans—The Virginius Case Constantly Thrown Into Their Teeth as an Incident of Cowardice.

Tampa, Fla., April 15.—A letter received from Santiago de Cuba says that Spanish feeling against the "Yankee" residents of Cuba is running high since the Allianca was fired upon off Cape Maysi. In Santiago and nearby villages and towns where the newly arrived government troops have been quartered army sub-lieutenants and lieutenants, and even members of the so-called home guards, seem to make it their business to cause resident or visiting Americans as much inconvenience as possible.

Indignities to Americans.

One is compelled to show his passport, in some cases half a dozen times a day, and is asked all kinds of impudent questions. If you are not sufficiently fluent in the Spanish language to explain everything to the satisfaction of these officials they draw their swords and march you off to jail as a suspect.

An American merchant doing business in one of these suburban villages, a station on the railway leading into the interior, lately put a flag pole on his building, intending to raise the stars and stripes should the occasion require, but was warned by a Spanish army officer not to do so, and accused of sympathy with the revolution. While in conversation, the Virginius case is almost every day thrown into the teeth of Americans as an incident of the Yankee government's cowardice, and as proof that Spain will never submit to Secretary Gresham's demand in the Allianca case.

This gain, however, was nearly counterbalanced by the sale last year (1893-4) of securities from its temporary investment fund, $33,062.28, leaving a net gain in actual receipts of only $2,446.77. The net debt of the society on April 1, 1894, was $87,987.60. The present debt, as the books close, is $132,140.15. During the year just closed, therefore, it has added to its debt $44,152.56.

SPRING FRESHETS.

The Connecticut River Twelve Feet Above Low Water Mark.

Hanover, N. H., April 15.—For forty-two hours rain has fallen here steadily. Every stream has overflowed its banks and is bringing down ice, logs and debris, and submerging fields and meadows seldom touched by spring floods. Highways are badly washed and in places they are several feet under water. The Connecticut river is twelve feet higher than its natural level, and is raising about one foot per hour. Boat houses hitherto untouched by freshets are in danger.

Her prow was lifted up by the rocky, shelving shore and was driven through the sea wall which surrounds the island, a distance of twenty feet. There was some excitement among the passengers at first, but all hands were soon taken off by a tug and forwarded to New Haven by rail. It will be a difficult task to float the steamer.

A MOTHER'S DUTY

TOWARDS HER DAUGHTERS.

Suggestions Which Bear Repeating, as Their Importance is Immeasurable.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Only a few years ago even the medical profession scouted the idea that young girls could suffer from the misery of uterus troubles.

That form of disease, it was claimed, came only to married women.

When Lydia E. Pinkham first sent out the news of her great discovery, there was no lack of harsh speech from those whose practice and opinions she set at defiance.

But when young girls by the hundreds were absolutely cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, then the tongues of the traducers were stilled, and faith was allowed to live in the hearts of the people.

Young girls are subject to this trouble. It robs them of the buoyancy of youth. It makes all effort distasteful.

It causes retention and suppression of menses, leucorrhœa, severe headache, waxy complexion, depression, weakness, loss of appetite and interest.

Certainly mothers ought to know that these are all symptoms of the one cause of nearly all the suffering that comes to women; and to save their daughters ought to begin treatment at once.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the surest and most natural remedy for women ever compounded. It will accomplish its work with certainty.

HER BODY IN A SPIRE

Another Ghastly Discovery in a Church Steeple.

The Pastor Under Arrest—Suspicion Also Directed Toward a Medical Student—He Is Superintendent of the Sunday School and May Be Guilty of a Double Murder.

San Francisco, April 15.—Another horrible discovery was made yesterday in a small room in the steeple of Emanuel Baptist church where the mutilated remains of young Minnie Williams were found Saturday. The church had been desecrated by a second murder, the victim being another young girl, Blanche Lamont, who had been missing since the 3d instant. She had been strangled to death, her clothes had been torn from her person and the body was almost nude when discovered. Her shoes and stockings were missing. The imprints of the assassin's finger nails were plainly visible on the murdered girl's throat, but there was no indication of further violence.

Pastor Gibson Under Arrest.

Shortly after the awful discovery was made Dr. George Gibson, pastor of the church, was taken into custody by the police. No charge was placed against him, but he will be held until the mystery is fully cleared. Miss Lamont was last seen alive in the company of Theodore Durant, a young medical student and assistant superintendent of the Sunday school connected with the defiled place of worship. Durant, who is said to have been engaged to be married to Miss Lamont, is suspected of having taken the life of the Williams girl, who is known to have been a warm friend of Miss Lamont. They were members of the church which they frequently attended together and were also in the same Sunday school class.

Miss Williams Knew Too Much.

Since the disappearance of Blanche, Miss Williams often said that she knew that her companion had met with foul play. This startling statement reached the ears of several members of the church and the girl was asked for an explanation, but she positively declined to reveal the nature of her information and the matter was dropped. The police are now inclined to think that Durant, knowing that Miss Williams was in possession of sufficient evidence to prove his guilt in connection with the disappearance of Miss Lamont, concluded to decoy her into the church and silence her forever.

An Eye Witness.

One of the most damaging witnesses against the young medical student is Charles Hills, who resides across the street from Emanuel Baptist church. Shortly after 8 o'clock Friday night he saw a man and woman standing near the street corner. They chatted together for some time, and finally started up the street toward the church. When the church was reached the man caught the girl by the arm and half dragged her to the gate leading to the pastor's study. After a few minutes' conversation the couple passed through the garden and finally entered the church through the side door. The description given of the man who accompanied the girl tallies exactly with that of Durant. A thorough search is being made for Durant.

RIVAL LOVERS FIGHT A DUEL.

Pistols Discarded and Nature's Weapons Resorted To.

Connellsville, Pa., April 15.—A duel between two Baltimore men, both rivals for the hand of a young woman in that city, took place yesterday near Stewart station, but did not terminate fatally. At the last minute the principals discarded pistols and resorted to nature's weapons. Three hot rounds were fought. The men were very evenly matched. It was slug from the call of time. At the end of the third round the battle was declared off, after the gallant sluggers had wasted all their energy and had done no damage. One of the principal's name is said to be Marshall and the other Carroll.

Circus Cars Smashed.

Chicago, April 15.—Hall's circus en route from San Antonio, Tex., to Evansville, Wis., was somewhat battered in a collision with a freight train which occurred while the circus train was being switched in the yards of the Chicago & Northwestern railway. Several cars were badly smashed, and Mrs. Hall, the wife of the proprietor, was seriously injured.

Serious Charge Against a Teacher.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 15.—The borough of Braddock, a suburb of Pittsburg, was thrown into a state of intense excitement Saturday night by the arrest of M. J. Ekin, assistant principal of the Braddock public schools. The charge against him was preferred by parents of over a dozen girl pupils.

Russian Petroleum in Japan.

London, April 15.—The Daily News correspondent in St. Petersburg says that in view of the fact that the specific gravity of Russian petroleum is higher than that of American, Japan has agreed, under the new commercial treaty, to tax Russian petroleum according to volume instead of weight.

Price of Steers Advanced.

El Paso, Tex., April 15.—J. H. Nations, one of the largest dealers in the southwest, says the price of steers has materially advanced recently, and although he is butchering many American steers, he is compelled to advance the price of dressed beef.

Brooklyn Woman Commits Suicide.

Brooklyn, N. Y., April 15.—Mrs. Fannie Dolan committed suicide at her parents home on Dean street yesterday. She placed a rubber tube connected with a gas jet in her mouth and wrapped her head in a blanket. No cause for the deed is known.

Whiskey Trust Rates.

Cincinnati, April 15.—The Cincinnati Whiskey trust distributers at their meeting Saturday fixed the basis for finished goods at $1.21.

TWO MORE CAPTURED

O'Donnell and McGuire Back in the Asylum.

Found at Pine Plains in a Hay Car—After One Shot O'Donnell Surrendered, But McGuire Tried To Escape to the Woods—Say Perry Struck Out for Himself.

Matteawan, N. Y., April 15.—O'Donnell and McGuire, two of the five convicts who escaped from the hospital here on Wednesday night, were captured at Pine Plains yesterday by James Coyle, a hospital attendant. Coyle saw O'Donnell looking out the door of a hay car, and fired a shot into the side of the car. O'Donnell then came out and gave himself up. McGuire, however, jumped from the other side of the car and ran. O'Donnell was delivered into the custody of the station agent, and Coyle then started in pursuit of McGuire, who endeavored to get under cover in the woods. When captured McGuire refused to walk, but, finding that he could not escape, he finally came along willingly.

Still in Asylum Uniform.

Both men were returned to the hospital, Coyle, in the meanwhile, having been joined by two other attendants who had been searching the neighborhood. The convicts had walked the track continually since leaving the hospital. They still had on the asylum uniform, except the coats, and, in addition, had in their possession a ragged coat and hat which they had secured somewhere along the track. They had entered no house and had had but little to eat.

McGuire made a statement, agreeing substantially with Quigley's, regarding the manner of the escape, except that he stated that the keys were partly made by another patient, who had been working in the isolation building before it was occupied, being engaged with attendants and others in finishing the floors.

Know Nothing as to Perry's Plans.

A broken end of a file and about two inches of a watch spring were found in one of the pockets of McGuire's pantaloons. The file, he said, had been secreted in the isolation building, while work was going on there, and the piece of watch spring had been obtained from the wreck of a watchman's box, which had been demolished some months before in the ward. The prisoners claim to know nothing as to the plans of Perry. They say he struck out alone after jumping from the roof.

BELIEVE IT WAS PERRY.

A House Robbed of Clothing and Food Near Wappingers' Falls.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., April 15.—The capture of Michael O'Donnell and Patrick McGuire yesterday morning has caused no little consternation in this vicinity. Thursday night entrance was forced into the residence of Emil Schoenfeld, at Hughsonville, near Wappingers' Falls, and some clothing and food were stolen. One of the perpetrators left behind a pair of socks, which were identified as Perry's, and two pine strips which he had used as wooden shoes. The socks were all worn out on the bottoms and discarded for a good pair which he had stolen. This is not the only clue to Perry's whereabouts, as it is almost certain that he was in this city Saturday night.

Tallies with Perry's Description.

About 7.30 o'clock Saturday night a stranger, unannounced, walked into the kitchen of Orlando Buger, on North Hamilton street, near the Philadelphia, Reading & New England railroad tracks, where Mr. Buger and his three children were sitting reading. The stranger asked for something to eat, and it was given to him. He held a large dark colored sombrero behind his back, and, Mr. Buger thinks, he also had a club in his hand. The description given by Mr. Buger tallies exactly with that of Perry. The stranger asked the way to the bridge road, and, when told, walked out. The police made a search, but no clue could be found.

The ballot reform and the appropriation bills are special orders in the senate.

THEY WILL BOOM CRISP

Georgia Democrats' Choice for the Presidency.

They Have Secured the Opinion of Legal Lights That the ex-Speaker Is Not Barred on Account of Having Been Born in England—It Is Said He Does Not Share in the View

Washington, April 15.—A special from Atlanta, Ga., received in this city, says: "Speaker Crisp is being freely talked of among Georgia democratic politicians as an available candidate for the presidential nomination. That the subject has been carefully discussed among Mr. Crisp's associates, if not in his very presence, is beyond question. Perhaps the most striking testimony is the fact that Mr. Crisp has had the question of his eligibility carefully examined by such legal lights as would secure him from trouble on that score. Mr. Crisp, it happens, was born in England, of American parentage, his father and mother having been members of a theatrical company.

Declare Him Eligible.

"When he was elected to the speakership there were those who predicted for him promotion to the white house. The fact of his foreign birth then came up, and it was recollected that in 1872, when the democrats desired to run General Meade against General Grant that the debate was dropped upon the suggestion that Meade had been born in Spain. But times change as well as men, and Mr. Crisp is now in possession of satisfactory legal opinions that he is entirely eligible, and that the only question ahead is that of availability. There is hardly a doubt but that the Georgia delegation to the next national democratic convention will present the name of Charles F. Crisp for the presidency."

Believes He Is Barred.

The statements in this Atlanta dispatch differ materially from the views expressed by Speaker Crisp's friends here. They assert that Judge Crisp is clearly convinced that he is barred from eligibility to the presidency by reason of his foreign birth, and the option thus conferred upon him of selecting another nationality, had he so chosen. Article II., Section 1, of the constitution of the United States provides that "No person except a natural born citizen, or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of this constitution, shall be eligible to the office of president."

Feels Its Full Significance.

No recognized constitutional lawyer has ever placed himself on record as holding otherwise than that the president of the United States must be an American citizen born on American soil. Speaker Crisp himself, in the most significant manner, has given his adherence to this construction of the constitution, and in such a manner as to indicate that he felt its full significance.

Constitutionally Ineligible.

At the close of the Fifty-third congress, in responding to the vote of thanks tendered him by his associates of the house of representatives, he said, with a distinct emphasis, the import of which was thoroughly understood: "Never in my life, no matter what may be its future, can I expect to attain to so high an office as that which I owe to your kindness, to your consideration, to your partiality." Everyone who heard that declaration interpreted it to mean that Speaker Crisp regarded himself as constitutionally debarred as a presidential candidate.

JAMES DWIGHT DANA DEAD.

Sudden Death of the Editor, Author and Scientist at New Haven.

New Haven, April 15.—James Dwight Dana, editor, author and scientist, and professor in Yale university, died at his home here shortly after 10 o'clock last night. The professor had been in excellent health notwithstanding his great age, until death came to him. When he was about to retire he was suddenly seized with an attack of dizziness and the family physician, Dr. J. P. C. Foster, was called. Before the doctor's arrival, however, life had fled. Death was due to an attack of heart failure.

Prof. Dana was born in Utica, N. Y., Feb. 12, 1813, and graduated from Yale in 1838. After graduation he served in the United States navy as instructor of mathematics and on various exploring expeditions until 1842. During the 18 years following his return from the navy Prof. Dana was engaged in studying the material that he had collected, making drawings and preparing reports for publication. He became Silliman professor of natural history and geology in Yale and entered on the administration of the chair in 1855. A widow, two sons and two daughters survive.

Cause of the Duel.

London, April 15.—The Daily News correspondent in Berlin says that the immediate cause of Saturday's duel between Leberecht von Kotze and Freiherr von Reischach was a newspaper article charging Reischach and several others with being the chief instigators of the anonymous letter scandal.

Friends of Mrs. M. M. Dunham will rejoice to learn that she has successfully passed the important operation performed today by Dr. Zeglio assisted by Drs. Fritts and Carman.

Street Commissioner Robert A. Meeker is confined to the house with a sprained ankle. Dr. Long, who is in attendance, states that it is a very bad sprain, and will confine Mr. Meeker to his home for some time.

I recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm for rheumatism, lame back, sprains and swellings. There is no better liniment made. I have sold over 100 bottles of it this year and all were pleased who used it. HAIL, GENTLE SPRING.

The vernal robin's primal note
Has not as yet been heard.
The robin, after all, is a
Discreet and foxy bird.
He doesn't risk pneumonia
By coming back to sing
Before it's time, and yet without
His tune we know it's spring.

There is a softness in the air,
And also in the mud,
That bids man blithely to rejoice
And purify his blood.
The buds are starting on the trees,
A haze lies on the hills,
'Tis time to pick out garden seeds
And take some liver pills.

The noonday sun is getting high,
Your coal is getting low;
Your outside windows are a bore,
The dust begins to blow,
The grass is starting here and there,
Life shows in everything,
And baseball betting has begun—
Hail to thee, gentle Spring!

A NEGRO'S MEMORY.

Able to Recall the Names of All the Members of His Company in the War.

A very confident young attorney was knocked out in the Federal District Court in Louisville the other day by a negro with a remarkable memory. John O'Neal, of Covington, was the lawyer. His client was on trial for making affidavit that a certain pension claimant was one John Harris, a member of Company C, 119th Regiment of colored volunteers. During the investigation of the claim it was developed that John Harris died in a military hospital at Camp Nelson, just about the close of the war. Mr. O'Neal believed that there were two John Harrises in the company and that his client had been honestly mistaken. As one witness after another testified, his theory seemed to be supported, and he began to think that his client would be acquitted, when the last witness came up to be sworn. This was a negro who had been a member of Company C and had messed with John Harris. He swore that he saw John die in the hospital.

"You remember that there were two John Harrises in your company?" asked Mr. O'Neal, blandly, but the witness was not caught napping and denied there were two John Harrises.

"How do you know there weren't?" asked Mr. O'Neal, sharply. "You remember only a few of the men?"

"Yes I do, sah," answered the witness. "I kin 'member a lot ob 'em."

"Well, name them then," said the lawyer.

The witness called off seventeen names and then halted. Mr. O'Neal smiled and told him to go on. The negro did so, and, with little hesitation, named ninety of the one hundred men in his company.

"If you'll gib me a little mo' time I'll tell you who de rest wuz," he said.

"Never mind," said the lawyer. "Isn't it likely you didn't know the others personally?"

"Yes, sah," was the answer. "Dere was a man named Miller and anothah whose name was Bates dat I nebber seed. Dey wuz detached foh special duty befo' I jined. Den dere wuz some dat died just befo' I 'listed. Come to t'ink 'bout it, I kin tell you all de names now."

"Never mind," said Mr. O'Neal, and even Judge Barr smiled. The clerk had had a copy of the company roster before him as the negro called off the names and had kept tab, with the result of showing that the negro was correct. The old fellow declared he had never seen a copy of the roster. Lawyers say that this testimony was the most remarkable feat of memory they had ever witnessed.

The press is the best instrument for enlightening the mind of man and improving him as a rational, moral and social being.—Thomas Jefferson.

Our better halves say they could not keep house without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is used in more than half the homes in Leeds, Sims Bros., Leeds, Iowa. This shows the esteem in which that remedy is held where it has been sold for years and is well known. Mothers have learned that there is nothing so good for colds, croup and whooping cough, that it cures these ailments quickly and permanently, and that it is pleasant and safe for children to take. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. LABRADOR ICEBERGS.

Seen by Moonlight and in the Flash of the Aurora Borealis.

The iron bound coast of Labrador is guarded by groups of islands—barren, hopeless and forlorn looking rocks, all the more desolate in appearance for the miserable fishing huts or tilts that have been thrown together on them. Entering through some narrow passage between these islands, the steamer anchors for the night in a rock bound basin, for it is too dangerous work to navigate the Labrador waters after dark. The narrow passages between the islands, both along the Labrador and in the Newfoundland bays, are called tickles, and aptly so, for it seems as if the sea had reached out foamy fingers and tickled the rocky ribs of the coast until it split its sides with grim, stormy laughter.

One evening we found one of these tickles nearly blocked by a huge iceberg which had drifted into it and grounded. We passed near enough to feel its chilling breath and to have thrown a biscuit on it, as the sailors say. We had hardly anchored in the harbor before we heard loud reports in rapid succession, like the firing of field artillery. Looking in the direction from which they came we saw above the heights that surrounded the basin the peak of the iceberg swaying slowly and majestically to and fro and finally disappearing, a peak of different shape rising up from behind the height and taking its place.

They say that an avalanche is sometimes so delicately poised that the vibrations from a shout or a hand clap will start it on its destructive course, and possibly the wash from our steamer had disturbed the iceberg's equilibrium. At night the moon rose and the Northern Lights throbbed in the sky, so that the iceberg's peak was at times bathed in silver, at times in a clear translucent crimson. It isn't often you find a combination of iceberg, moonlight and Northern Lights; and feeling that I might never again behold such an exquisite scene, I remained for hours on deck watching it.—St. Nicholas.

Apprehensive.

A youth who is yet classed as a small boy, in whose family there is a physician, came home recently from a visit to the M. D. and seemed to be full of knowledge.

"I am not going to play games with kissing," he announced to his own family; "no more kissing games for me."

He was pressed for a reason.

"Well," he responded with the air of a child having just made an important discovery, "there is so much disease going around, and most of it is caught by kissing; and who knows what the girls may have."—Washington Post.

Knew Her Failing.

The small son and heir had been sent into the garden to fetch a stick with which he was to be punished. After some delay he returned, saying, with a sigh;

"Couldn't find a stick, mover; but here's a little stone you might frow at me."—Harper's Magazine.

TWEED'S FAMOUS CLUB HOUSE.

Gold Coins in the Mortar, the Flagpole and the Famous Carpet.

Mr. E. C. Benedict's negotiations for the purchase of the Indian Harbor Hotel property at Greenwich, Conn., have recalled many stories about the Americus club and William M. Tweed. Among William M. Tweed's nearest friends it was known that two men used to accompany him almost everywhere as a sort of body guard. Tweed always had a horror of being stabbed and a feeling that some enemy was awaiting an opportunity to thrust a knife into his abdomen. These men were instructed to protect him, one on each side, and in walking in a crowd to keep a few paces in front of him.

One of these men was an oysterman, whose home was in Greenwich, and he was not only Tweed's faithful friend, but his valet as well. He died not long ago.

Not many of the guests who have wandered through the drawing room of the Indian Harbor Hotel in the last twenty-four years have known the history of the wonderful carpet beneath their feet and yet it is so famous that men interested in the production of such fabrics have traveled hundreds of miles to examine it. It was made in Brussels in 1870. It was one entire piece and the loom upon which it was woven had to be made expressly for its manufacture. With all the pounding and thumping and dancing of the multitudes that for nearly a quarter of a century have used it it is still bright and thick. There was a good deal of talk about this carpet in the palmy days of the Tweed ring and some members of the club did not agree with Tweed about the purchase of so expensive a floor covering. It was only Tweed's persistence and the carelessness with which he spent money that finally settled the matter.

"I want something on that floor," said he one day, "that will last as long as the building does. There shall be no seams in it, so that when it is cleaned it can be raised to the roof, edge up, and beaten from the windows."

It is said that this beautifully woven carpet has never been taken off the floor and that it lies just as it was originally tacked down in the spring of 1871. It cost a great deal of money and the import duty upon it was very large. No one but Tweed really knew what it did cost, except perhaps his secretary, Charles Hall, and probably he will never tell. The nap still gives beneath one's feet and the colors are as fresh and bright as when Tweed and his satellites made the room ring with merriment and sipped champagne beneath the glitter of the grand chandeliers. At the corners of the carpet are tiger heads and underneath one can still plainly read the letters A. C.

It was a queer freak that the club men had of touching every new thing with gold. Every new boat that was launched had its golden rivet and at the laying of the corner stone of the club house a peck basketful of gold and silver coins were buried in the mortar. Some search may be made for these coins. The club flagpole had a gold eagle nailed upon its apex and the knobs of the lockers of the yacht Mary Jane Tweed were decorated with quarter eagles. The yacht also had a gold eagle at her topmast. This was Tweed's favorite craft, and she often came bowling along toward home with Field Point on the lee shore, the gold at her topmast reflecting the sun with bright flashes.

It was this craze to make a free and strange use of money, and particularly gold, that led to nailing gold dollars in the eyes and teeth of the tigers in the carpet. It is said that a carpet tack was driven through the center of each dollar, and the constant wear of many feet all these years has kept the coins bright and glistening, although the casual observer might easily mistake them for golden spots in the web and woof of the fabric itself.

PERIPATETIC KNIFE GRINDERS.

Men to Whom Traveling is Natural and Who Wander All Over the Union.

Knife grinders retain the wandering instinct that has belonged to their craft from time immemorial. Being peripatetic, it is a simple and easy thing to prolong a day's walk to the next city, and so by degrees all over the Union. They are seldom native Americans, never negroes, and as often as not Germans.

Some of the knife grinders insist upon grinding with a dry stone, a custom that many owners of cutlery object to on the ground that it tends to spoil the temper of steel. The dry grinders have a deft way of turning the knife so that it does not become too much heated by being long upon the stone. Dry grinding is economical to the grinder, since it wears the stone slowly.

The characteristic ting-a-ling, ting, ting, ting-a-ling, ting, ting, of the knife grinder is traditional and unique. It is kept on a long time by a mechanical movement of the wrist that gradually gives the muscles involved great power. The movement of the bell is very slight and the muscular effort is so timed that the motion of walking shall aid in producing the sound. It is uniform and in time it becomes almost involuntary. A few grinders have substituted the voice of the bugle for the bell, but the traditional alarm is the most agreeable to persons that find pleasure in the conservation of trade and picturesqueness in its uniformity with the past.

A Formal Protest.

The average Englishman is public spirited, and for the public good denounces any imposition upon himself, no matter how slight it may be. Near the summit of the Right Mountain, in Switzerland, there is a hotel frequented by people who wish to see the sun rise over the Alps. A "complaint book" is kept, in which travelers record real or fancied grievances. Recently this book was found to contain the following entry: "I desire to call the attention of the management and the general public to the fact that I have been up here two mornings for the express purpose of seeing the sun rise from this mountain; and that on both occasions I have seen nothing whatever but clouds. One failure to keep the understanding with me—an implied contract—I might have passed over, but two failures I regard as a distinct imposition. J. Robinson, Liverpool."—San Francisco Argonaut.

The End and the Means.

Mrs. Kidder (coming in)—Gracious! Henry, what are you beating on the dishpan in that terrible way for?

Mr. Kidder (angrily)—Whatam I doing it for? Gosh blame it! for the same reason I've had to do it ever since you went out—to keep the baby quiet!—Puck.

THE FLORIDA RAZOR-BACK.

Of All Hogs There is None to Compare With Him.

"The Florida razor back is a natural pacer. He never trots or runs. He paces, and when he lets himself out there isn't any dog can catch him. They have exciting races between razor backs down there. I saw a big hog, untrained and brought right from eating four bushels of wild oranges, pace three straight mile heats, and the slowest one he made in 2:32! I believe if they would train those hogs they could get them down to a two minute record.

"And they can climb trees. I don't mean that they can go out and shin up the trunk of a tree a hundred feet or more like a bear, but a tree that has branches, say ten feet from the ground, they can get into easy. The first time I saw a razor back climb a tree I give you my word I was astonished. My host's wife had a big gray cat which took especial delight in teasing and worrying a particular razor back hog that used to come snooping around the place. One day this cat had been especially aggravating to the hog and the hog got mad and turned on it. The cat made for a tree in the yard, scooted up it and perched defiantly on the lower limb, which was not less than ten feet from the ground. Puss never had an idea that she wasn't entirely safe there from the angry hog, but she didn't know razor backs. The hog rushed at the tree, gave a jump at the foot of the tree at least half way to the branch and kept right on going with his four feet on the trunk. The impetus of his rush and the motion he kept up carried him clear to the branch, and he threw both forelegs over it and hung there. The cat was so surprised that she simply arched her back and spat in the hog's face. That was all. He gave one snap and had her by the neck. He dropped to the ground like a monkey, and in less than half a minute the cat was mingling with whatever of wild oranges and marsh grass roots the hog had engulfed.

"They're pretty tough, too, these Florida razor backs. At least their hide is. I was out after alligators one day, and, coming home, I thought I'd knock over a razor back. Coming in sight of one near the river bank, I hauled up and blazed away with my rifle, firing at the side of the hog next the woods. I heard the bullet strike the hog, and the hog raised its head and looked up as if it thought it might have felt something, but wasn't sure. I blimmed away again, and heard the bullet plunk on the hog, but he didn't seem to be a bit more disconcerted than he was before. I was just going to shove another bullet at him when a man came out of the bushes diagonally off to my left. He had his hat in his hand and was looking at a hole in the side of the crown.

"'Hold on dah, sah!' he exclaimed. 'Gad, sah! Plunk yo' balls on the fah side of the hog, sah, an' let 'em skive into the rivah, sah! Gad, sah! Fust thing yo' know, sah, yo' injuh somebody, sah!'

"My bullets had been carroming off that hog's hide like billiard balls from a cushion, and one of them had passed plumb through the crown of the man's hat. Nobody own's the razor backs. If any one wants some pork he goes out into the woods and kills the first one that suits him. And this is the way he does it: Having selected his hog, he walks up and places the muzzle of his rifle close to the inside of one of the hog's ears. Then he fires square into the hog's head by way of the ear. The razor back lifts his head, cocks one eye up as if he was pondering over something. Maybe he'll stand that way half a minute. Then he'll sit down on his haunches, still maintaining the pondering mood. After thinking the matter over in that position for half a minute or so, he seems to make up his mind that something has happened, and he quickly stretches himself out at full length on the ground, gives a contented grunt or two, and dies. He never squeals or makes any fuss, but always thinks the matter over carefully and calmly before deciding that the best thing for him to do under the circumstances is to die. People talk about razor back hogs, but they don't know their subject if they have never met the Florida razor back."

HISTORIC FOR ITS WICKEDNESS.

The Worst Place in America is Now Reclaimed.

The famous Five Points Mission taught the good people of New York one lesson, namely, that the only way to convert the heathen in our own community is to carry the Gospel right down among them and live there with them. When it started its wonderful career the Five Points was probably one of the wickedest districts on the face of the earth. It was situated where Paradise park now is and was a beehive of sin and crime. Murder, highway robbery, assault and more terrible crimes were of almost daily occurence. The malefactors of the old world and the new herded together and defied every advance of law and order. The mission opened in this district against the protestations of timid friends and relatives. It was composed of men, and particularly women, of a heroic mold, who went, taking their lives in their hands, with the single desire of spreading the light in a place of utter moral darkness. Their labor was very hard at first and at times seemed hopeless, but the laborers never faltered or despaired. They began to make inroads into the ranks of the vicious, to convert criminals and to win the sympathy of abandoned women and to gain the affection of the children of the neighborhood.

Their progress accelerated and finally they secured the old Brewery, where now stands a magnificent mission house. From that time on progress was rapid and in the course of a few years the place had lost its terrors and its gangs were a thing of the past. There is still great poverty, ignorance and degradation in that district. In this field the Five Points Mission finds more work than it has conveniences for. Although its buildings are large its accommodations are insufficient for the hundreds who apply to it for help, material or spiritual, for instruction and for sympathy. They have determined, therefore, to put up a new building worthy of being classed with the old, which will permit them to extend a helping hand to several hundred human beings.

Thoughtlessly Frank.

"I suppose you will be out again tonight?" remarked Sportington's wife, severely.

"I will," he replied with feeling, "unless I manage to hold better hands than I got last night."—Washington Star.

A DARK NIGHT

BY SARAH ORNE JEWETT

[Copyright. 1895. by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

CHAPTER I.

Many years ago two men were talking together one morning in the private room of a bank in the west of England. The senior partner of the house, a white-haired, sage-looking financier, was cautioning his companion, who evidently had their business enterprise very much at heart. There was something eager and adventurous in the younger man's appearance, in spite of the look that betrayed the country squire and lawyer that he was. The bank, personified by the elder man, was making an investment quite apart from its usual steady customs, to join the squire who was putting a good bit of money into a venture by sea. This money was to be forwarded to the port of Bristol to be shipped, and the two capitalists had received news from the captain of the vessel that he was sailing much sooner than had been his first intention. The difficulty was to find a proper messenger at such short notice, and the squire, who was something of a sportsman, had come to say that he had fallen in unexpectedly with a horse dealer, a very honest man, fearless and a good rider, whom he had known for many years, and who, fortunately, was on his way to Bristol the next day but one.

"The only defect he has is in being a stranger to the roads hereabouts; I mean between here and Bristol," said the squire. "But Rogers, you say, can go with him, and knows the way well. Weymouth has an English tongue in his head, but with so much gold to carry a man is sometimes glad to take a short cut, or a different turn, especially in these days where there is so much tramping and thievery. You never know whom you fall in with on the road. I must say I never liked the looks of Rogers—"

The squire turned quickly from the window where he stood with hands deep in his pockets, looking out in the street, and saw Rogers himself, who had come, soft-footed as a cat, from the outer room to stand behind the senior partner. The squire stared at him angrily.

"I knocked, sir," said Rogers, deferentially.

"I should hope so," answered the squire with coldness. But the clerk seemed to take no offense, and departed on tiptoe after handing some checks to his chief. The old man flushed a little and was disturbed. Rogers was his daily companion and made himself quite indispensable. To the squire he was only a subordinate, and apt to be presuming and curious.

"I don't like him, in spite of all you say," the squire grumbled to the senior partner a moment after the door was softly closed.

"Well, perhaps not as a companion," agreed the old gentleman with a smile. "I thought he looked crafty and sneakish myself at first sight, but he has been perfectly faithful and steady these six or eight years now, and I long ago gave up suspecting Rogers. He is curious, perhaps, but harmless, harmless."

"He'll wait forever for his chance, but he'll take it when he gets it," said the squire. "That is, if I know anything of human nature. I wish we had our money all in notes instead of so much gold, but we cannot risk the chance of our changing the notes in Bristol before the Mary and Bell sets sail. And my man Weymouth can hold his own, I'll warrant him. I hope he'll be prompt about starting. He as much as told me that it was not all business that keeps him here; he is paying attention to a young woman whom he hopes to marry. But he's a man of his word. 'Tis a good bit of work for him and money easily earned, as you may say, since he was going to Bristol a day later, at any rate."

The squire took his riding stick and gloves from the table and bade his old friend good morning. They shook hands heartily and had a cheerful word or two about their business and its probable success.

"See that they start at six o'clock Sunday morning, or even earlier," the younger man turned back to say. "The roads are heavy already with so much rain, and if I don't mistake the signs there's more coming. They can't get to Bristol at best before night. I don't know what sort of a mount Rogers will get. He'll soon worry a good horse out of his wits, I should think. Tell him that Fenderson is set upon sailing early."

"He'll wait a tide for his money," said the senior partner with assurance, tapping the arm of his chair. "He's a prompt man, is Fenderson, and an excellent shipmaster, but eighteen hundred pounds is a good sum to miss; his luck depends on getting it, you know. Still, I'll tell Rogers. Take a glass of Madeira before you go; will you join me, sir, 'tis toward noon!"

As night was falling two mounted messengers, spattered with mud from cap to stirrup, were riding wearily along a deep, worn country lane. They were in the north part of the county of Somerset, near the waters of the Severn. The lane itself, deserted enough that night, was a great thoroughfare for those who came from the south and west to cross over into Wales. By this immemorial stream of travel and the wearing of the weather it had been worn like a swift stream's channel, deep below the level of the country. One of the riders kept glancing fearfully at the bushy banks above him, as if he expected to see a head in the thicket peering down. The other man rode straight and stern in his saddle, and took no notice of anything but his horse and the slippery road.

As they came, riding northward side by side, to the top of a little hill, Rogers, who wore a strangely pale and craven look, gave a sigh of relief, and his horse, which limped and bore the marks of having been on his knees, whinnied as if in sympathy. The wide, gray Severn spread before them; the high headlands sloped gently away on the right, and fell off like a cliff on the left; below the land was edged by a long line of dyke which fenced the sea from marsh and meadows that stretched away from the coast. Over the wide water drifted low clouds of fog and rain, and in the southwest a dull red gleam of fading winter sunset lightened but little the cold and stormy color of the sky. High above the Severn, at the road's end, stood a group of low buildings perched on the headland together, like a convent or a place of military defense.

As the travelers rode into the yard of the old Black Eagle inn in the twilight, the inn itself and all its stables and outhouses seemed deserted. There was a bare and empty look everywhere. The sunset just struck a last whip of rain at the two tired men, and Weymouth called impatiently to the hostler, and then got stiffly to the ground and stamped his feet and stretched himself as he stood holding his horse's bridle. The creature dropped his head low and steamed in the cool air.

There were two windows in the inn itself, dimly lighted, as if by firelight, and in another window in the landward corner a candle flickered faintly. The whole place seemed dull and unfriendly with its stony walls and roofs. Rogers grumbled with a plaintive whine, his companion shouted again with a strong, honest voice, and presently a stable door was flung open and two men came out. Inside the light of an early lantern beamed comfortably, and the horses turned their heads that way, as if eager for their supper and warm bedding. There was no sound from within of stamping hoofs or cry of crowded and biting horses. The business was evidently at lowest ebb.

"Rub them down well and give them good feed as soon as you dare; full oats and scant hay. We must be on our way again two hours from this at least; we lost the road and were in haste at any rate," said Weymouth. "I'll come out and look after them in an hour. Mind they're not in the wind," he added. "Come, get down," he said in a colder tone to his fellow-traveler, who, through weariness or uncertainty, still sat his horse like a drooping statue. "Strike the mud off you; here, I'll help you, then," as the man gave a groan and tried to dismount. "After the first wrench you're all right. Come! you're none the worse for your dropper into clay and mud! Queer inn they keep here," he said angrily as they crossed the yard toward the door whither one of the hostlers had pointed them. They could hear a woman's scolding voice inside before it was opened.

As the mistress flung it open wide and stood on the threshold, she bade her guests good evening in a civil tone, but insisted somewhat ostentatiously that she desired no guests that night. She had ceased to keep the tavern since the travel had all gone, or been stolen away to the lower ferry. She had some people already whom she must make a shift to care for, old Welsh folk who had been put into the only room that could be used. She was giving up her lease to leave the place—

"We only ask for supper and a fire, 'tis but to rest our horses," said Weymouth, boldly making his way into the inner kitchen where the firelight looked cheerful. Rogers followed ruefully, limping and holding his shoulder as if he were badly hurt. When he sank into the corner of the settee his head dropped back as if he were ill, and his eyes shut as if their sight swam with giddiness. Such distress of weariness and squalor of mud and wet could not but appeal to the beholder.

Weymouth stood before the fire steaming like the horse he had just left and regarded his companion with pity and surprise. Then he gave himself another stretch, and yawned comfortably, and taking off his short cloak spread it carefully upon a bench. There was a stout leather wallet at his side which he unslung and put by the cloak at the fireside, handling it as lightly as he could, but not concealing the fact of its weight, or that such a broad-shouldered man as himself was glad to get rid of it. As he turned again he saw that the landlady had stopped her work among pans and crocks at the table and was watching him sharply, but Rogers groaned as if in his sleep and Weymouth repeated his contempt and harsh words on the way. His fellow-messenger had been officious in his pretense of knowing every turn of road that would bring them quick and safe to Bristol, but he had taken the worst of his mistake with so bad a fall, if the color of his face were any sign, and it grew plain that Weymouth must somehow or other find the rest of the way to Bristol alone. In his heart he flinched for a moment, knowing what he carried and that he was a stranger; yet for some reason he had all that day distrusted the smiling clerk and his bland and double manner, and wished more than once that he were riding with a better man.

"Get me some brandy," said Weymouth to the landlady, "and a glass for him when he wakes, a good stiff glass. When he wakes, you know, he'll need all that he can drink, 'twas a hard ride for so poor a horseman. I'll leave him here to-night; neither he nor his horse can go further. I must be on my way by ten or as soon as my horse is fit and has had his feed."

"Oh, no, poor lad!" exclaimed the woman, but there was something disturbed and dissatisfied in her tone. "He'll get to no Bristol to-night," she added, as she trotted off with more willingness than she had shown before and came back with a single clumsy-looking glass on a tray. Weymouth thanked her and took it in his hand and offered it again with much gallantry; but she shook her head, not displeased, and went back to her work.

Then the guest cast another glance at his fellow-traveler, who just at that moment stirred and groaned again, uneasily. Weymouth bent toward him, and shook him gently, holding the glass to his lips. The drowsy man was quick to know the welcome odor, and drank the brandy down with eagerness, opening his eyes wide and making a queer face as he finished.

"What's this?" said he.

"'Tis brandy," said Weymouth, laughing boyishly. "So you've forgotten how it tastes since noon!"

"'Twas not for him!" exclaimed the woman coming back from her cupboard angrily. "You might have choked a sleeping man!" she railed at Weymouth, and clenched her fist like a fury.

"Sleep, then," she said to Rogers, who laughed a little and gazed at her stupidly but much startled. "What's the odds, Betsy?" he faltered, as if he knew her well.

"Betsy me none of your Betsys," said the rough-mannered mistress of the house, sharply; then, controlling herself, she caught up the empty glass, and her tone changed. "Some other drink would have done for him just as well," she said, in a wheedling whisper, and, returning to her shelf, she filled a second glass. Weymouth observed that it was fuller than the first, and accepted it amiably. The cross-grained creature had meant to pay him a pretty compliment in pouring him her best grog, and he thanked her civilly, with a proper toast to her good fortune, as he raised the glass to his lips.

He was still standing before the fire; something crossed his mind at that moment. The woman was by her table where she could see him, and with his hand covering the glass he tossed his head back gayly and pretended to drink. She turned away with a queer sigh. Rogers had shut his eyes again, and quick as a flash Weymouth threw the brandy behind him into the ashes.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size, 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

EASTER ELECTIONS.

Church of the Redeemer.

The first annual parish meeting of the Church of the Redeemer was held last night. It was presided over by Rev. Jocelyn Johnson as chairman and A. E Faber, Jr., as secretary. The following were the officers elected: Wardens—George P. Dupee, J. A. Alexander; Vestrymen—A. E. Faber, Jr., H.B. Philips, G. T. Rhoade, F. A. Audsley, Thomas Loyd; Delegates to the convention—Geo. P. Dupee, J. A. Alexander, H.B. Philips; Alternates—A.E. Faber, Jr., G.T. Rhoade, F. S. Brown.

The treasurer's report showed a balance on hand over the current expenses and a contingent fund of $500. For charitable purposes $500 was expended, which is an excellent showing, considering the fact that the society has only been organized nine months. Starting with 61 communicants, it now has 109.

At the close of the meeting votes of thanks were extended to the women for their work about the altar; for the ecclesiastical and symbolical work of the Messrs. Audsley, and to the rector for his constant and efficient work in building the society to greater strength and success.

Holy Cross Church.

At the annual parish meeting of Holy Cross Church last night the following church officers were elected: Wardens—J. H. Carman, M. D., and Benjamin R. Western; Vestrymen—Robert S. Miller, Harry Bartling, Horsley Barker, Arthur T. Gallup, and William A. Westphal; Delegates to Diocesan Convention—Benjamin R. Western, Joseph R. Hall, and Clarence L. Murphy; Alternates—William L. Saunders, Thomas E. Warman, and J. Edward Turrill. Appropriate resolutions were passed concerning the death of Joseph B. Platt, and a copy of the same was sent to the family of the decedent and ordered placed on the minutes of the Parish record.

Grace Church.

At the parish meeting held in Grace Church, the following elections were made: Wardens—C P Bull, William E Lowe. Vestrymen — John B Dumont, Howard Fleming, E N Erickson, George M Randall, E L Finch, W B Cock, S A Cruikshank. Deputies to Convention—Messrs Dumont, Lowe and Bull. Alternates—Messrs Fleming, Randall and Cruikshank.

In the Casino Monday Night.

When someone in conversation with Thackeray was praising the courtly grace and dignity of "Col. Newcome", the creator of that much-admired character replied: "I love the dear old Colonel, and I am glad the public seems to, but after all 'Dan'l Peggotty' is the finer gentleman."

Making no pretense to gentility, the sterling character of the rough, tender-hearted old fisherman in "David Copperfield" gives him a higher rank than courtiers have. This is the character Mr. Underhill most admires in the story, and he invests him with an almost living personality.

Complains of High Prices.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—Hearing so much about the low prices for coal, lumber and mason materials at Metuchen, I drove over and investigated. I was amazed at what I learned. Hard Lehigh coal is delivered anywhere in the town for $4.50 a ton; lumber from two to six dollars a thousand feet cheaper than here; and other things in proportion.

How can we buy at home when we are so greatly overcharged? The combine is killing the goose that laid the golden egg.

MECHANIC.

Accused of Vandalism.

Chief T. O. Doane was in Elizabeth today testifying in the vandalism case of W. K. McClure against F. X. Schoonmaker. The plaintiff alleges that he held a mortgage on defendant's house on Putnam avenue, and that when Schoonmaker removed from it he carried away several of the interior fixings.

Talking About Great Mines.

The Comstock Lode of Nevada has been the gretest producer of gold and silver in the United States, but its output after all has been only about one-third that of the Cerro de Pasco of Peru. Thursday night a talk will be given in the Y. M. C. A. rooms on the great gold and silver mines of South America.

Death of an Octogenarian.

The death of Mrs. Jane Hall occurred Sunday at her home, corner of Rock and West End avenues, in her 81st year, from paralysis. Funeral services will be held tomorrow morning at 11 from her late home, and from the Second Reformed Church, Somerville, at 2:30.

Wrecked a Wheel.

E. P. Williams of West Seventh street had the misfortune to have one of the wheels of his carriage wrecked this morning while on his way to the train. The wheel was caught in the frog of the trolley track on West Front street near Somerset.

—Unity Lodge, K. of P., meet tomorrow night.

THE MERRY DANCE.

The Season of Spring Festivities Ushered in by Plainfield Society.

The lenten mantle was thrown aside last night, and the social season was ushered in with balls, parties, entertainments and other events that give evidence that the time of penance is past.

In T. A. B Hall on West Fourth street a jolly party of young people attended the dance of the Emerald Beneficial Association, a society of young men who conduct their affairs with a dash and completeness that always affords their guests a pleasant time. About two hundred were present, and they danced to the music of O'Rielly's orchestra until the small hours of this morning. The officers of the association are: President—W C White; treasurer—D J McNamee; secretary—J C Carney. The committee of arrangements for the ball consisted of W C White, P O'Keefe, E Kelly, P Cullen and D J McNamee. The floor manager was P O'Keefe.

Another social event that provided an evening of pleasure for those who attended was the dance of the Encore Circle in Red Men's Hall. About 60 were present. The grand march was led by Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Carty. The reception committee was composed of G. T. Scheelein and P.D. Plimm. The floor manager was J. T. Carty, with W. A. Boe as assistant. During intermission supper was served by the Circle.

Much amusement was provided those who attended the entertainment given in the Saengerbund hall last night, by listening to the following programme: Overture, orchestra; song, Gesang section choir, under the direction of R. Schroeder; zither and violin duet, M. Schoettlin and R. Schroeder; baritone solo, Charles Dreeselt; gymnastic exercise, Turn section, under direction of Charles Meyer; zither and violin duet, R. Schroeder and M. Schoettlin; song, Gesang section; sketch, Charles Dreeselt, H. Meyer and P. Postler. At the conclusion of the programme dancing was enjoyed.

Plainfield Knights at the Head.

A preliminary meeting to organize a K. of P. lodge will be held in Westfield Thursday evening, April 18. Grand Chancellor Donath and Deputy Grand Chancellor Stevens have the matter in charge. Crescent Division, Uniformed Rank, of this city, will attend in command of Capt. Flannery. A parade of the principal streets will take place before the meeting. The Westfield Fife and Drum Corps will head the procession.

Curiosities of Vision.

A cultured audience of women was present in the Casino yesterday afternoon, when Prof. J. H. Hyslop of Columbia College delivered a lecture on "The Curiosities of Vision". The sense of sight, he said, was early found to be the subject of illusion. His talk was illustrated by chalk drawing in order that his hearers could better understand the technical and scientific ideas and points he made.

New Jersey's Naval Militia.

Plainfield boys interested in military life will be pleased to know that Wm. C. Boyd of the provisional Battalion of the East, Naval Reserve, is now a member of the recruiting committee. A new division is now forming in Hoboken, and there are a few vacancies in the Second Division at Newark.

The U. S. Government has particularly favored New Jersey in that it loans the State a full-rigged and well-equipped ship.

Captain Green.

Capt. Edwards will hereafter drill the High School Cadet Corps every Thursday morning when the weather permits. The cadets have elected the following: Captain—Volney F Green; first lieutenant—Wilbur F Cornwell; second lieutenant—Edward O Clark; first sergeant—Thomas D Blair; second sergeant—John V Beckman; third sergeant—Carlos C Gallup.

Good Time with Arcanumites.

The Loyal Additional, an adjunct to the Royal Arcanum, was entertained last night by humorist Fred DeForest Crozier, of South Orange, whose dialect stories were very funny. An Elizabeth man gave a few sleight-of-hand tricks, and M. A. Korff rendered violin solos.

Needs Attention.

The condition of Liberty street is a constant menace to the safety of horses traveling over it. In numerous places are holes which are especially dangerous at night.

Ingrowing Nail.

A two-inch wire nail was pulled out of the frog of the hoof of one of the horses used by the United States Express Company, yesterday afternoon.

It will be an agreeable surprise to persons subject to attacks of bilious colic to learn that prompt relief may be had by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. In many instances the attack may be prevented by taking this remedy as soon as the first symptoms of the disease appear. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. SONS OF VETERANS.

Members from One Camp Enjoy the Hospitality of Another.

Captain W C Dobbins, Second Lieutenant Charles F Stephens, First Sergeant H J Martin, Sergeant Guard H S Thatcher, Chaplain Raymond McVoy, Corporal Guard Edward Smith and Camp Council Frank Clarkson, of John Hand Camp, No. 28 Sons of Veterans, were the guests of Col Hugh B Reed Camp, No 40, Sons of Veterans, of Somerville, last evening. The visitors were royally received and given a good time. Camp 40 had a muster which was given for the benefit of Camp 28, who were much pleased with the work.

During the good of the order excellent refreshments were served and several of the brethren made remarks. H J Martin gave one of his pleasing solos and H S Thatcher entertained the comrades with two recitations. Remarks were also made by Conductor Kleiner of the Central Railroad and Engineer Houston of the Royal Blue Line, both of whom are members of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Wouldn't Let Him In.

John Lacey, a machinist employed in the Scott Printing Machine Works, was arrested this morning on a warrant issued by Justice Nash charging him with breaking in and entering the house of Mrs. Jewett Scott on Richmond street. Lacey formerly boarded with Mrs. Scott, but owing to his having been on a drunk she refused him admittance this morning. Then he broke open the door, and, Mrs. Scott claims, assaulted her by striking her a blow in the face. The woman screamed and John Maier who owns a meat market next door, and a man by the name of Hoffman, rushed to the scene. A gentleman passing on the opposite side of the street says that the two men grabbed Lacey and threw him out of the house, and they fell upon him in the yard and brutally beat and kicked him. After he had been almost knocked into insensibility the pair threw him into Maier's delivery wagon, and while one held him down the other drove to the police station, where the arrest was made. City Physician Simpson was obliged to go to the police station this noon and dress the injuries Lacey had received from the pummeling he had undergone. Justice Nash held him in $100 bail for appearance before the grand jury.

Mrs. Sheppard of Elizabeth and Mrs. Drake of Newark were guests of the club yesterday, and assisted in the playing.

Those present were Mrs. F. A. Church, Mrs. O. M. Ulrich, Mrs. L. M. French, Mrs. Thiers, Mrs. Edward VanWinkle, Mrs. S. W. Clark, Mrs. J. F. MacDonald, Mrs. Albert Demarest, Mrs. J. P. Homan, Mrs. E. Framing Their Objections.

The committee appointed at the Board of Trade meeting Thursday night, consisting of Messrs. J. D. Runyon, J. B. Coward and L. B. Woolston, held a conference last night to formulate objections to the undesirable portions of the proposed building ordinance. Among those who were at the conference and argued against the ordinance was James E. Martine.

—It is indeed gratifying to see such deserved and unanimous good will expressed for the retiring Borough Chief Marshal, Wm N. Pangborn. His record is without a flaw, and commands encomiums from Democrats and Republicans alike. Mayor Hegeman has had occasion both as citizen and councilman to keep an eye on Marshal Pangborn's actions, and highly praises his personal worth and official career. Mr. Pangborn has brought North Plainfield into a splendid condition, so far as public order is considered, and has done much good work as a peacemaker in settling disputes and ending personal quarrels without arrest.

I recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm for rheumatism, lame back, sprains and swellings. There is no better liniment made. I have sold over 100 bottles of it this year and all were pleased who used it. OBITUARY.

Charles E. Runk.

The death occurred Sunday evening, April 14, in Oneonta, N. Y., of Charles E. Runk, formerly of this city. He was a young man of more than ordinary worth. When a boy he engaged with Professor Mapes of New York in the chemical and fertilizing business. From a moderate salary he saved money to establish himself in the coal business in Plainfield, which he put in charge of his father, who years ago lost all his property. He continued with Mapes & Co. until about two years ago, when he became the manager and proprietor of the Oneonta Chemical and Fertilizer Co., New York, with fair prospects. During this time he assisted, supported, and at their death buried a sister, his invalid mother, and his father.

About four weeks ago he was taken with a severe attack of grip. He recovered, was at his office, and even to the factory. About a week ago he had a relapse, pneumonia developed, and he died Sunday evening.

He married the daughter of D. F. Randolph of 502 West Seventh street, whom he leaves with one child.

His body will be taken to Bound Brook for burial Wednesday afternoon at 2:30; there will be a short burial service.

The annual election of the Home Building and Loan Association last night resulted as follows:

President—Isaac W Rushmore; vice-president—Warren F Bartlett; secretary—S B Struthers; treasurer—W F Arnold; attorney—W M Stillman; directors—S B Joseph, G E Stillman, F A Dunham, H E Gayle, all for three years. auditor—D M Runyon.

The fifteenth series was inaugurated and started with a subscription of 325 shares.

The directors holding over are: W H Sampson, L M Finch, W A Freeman and C H Rugg to serve one year longer; H C Nomer, C E Apgar, George Griffin and W T Kirk to serve two years.

The fifteenth series met with more liberal subscriptions than any other series for two years past. The taking of 322 shares is within 15 shares of the first month's subscription to the series commenced April, 1893.

$6,000 was sold on two loans at low premiums. The income of the association from dues and interest is nearly $4,000 monthly, thus offering ample accommodation to those desiring to use their money.

Their Second Birthday.

The Ladies Orchestra, which includes members from Bound Brook, Dunellen, New Market, and Plainfield, were entertained last evening by Miss Emma Nelson at her home in New Market, in celebration of the second anniversary of the organization. The rooms were beautified by a choice arrangement of potted plants and cut flowers, and the club's colors, white and yellow, were prominent. A feature of the evening was a pleasing programme of music, which was followed by dancing. A very fine collation was served, after which all joined in singing familiar songs.

Thursday evening, May 9, the club will give an entertainment in Friendship Hall, New Market.

Stole a Bunch.

The fruit store recently opened by Wm. H. Manning, and owned by Councilman Westphal, at 326 Liberty street, was entered during last night by thieves, and a large bunch of bananas was stolen. The burglars must have had a key that unlocked the door, because there was nothing broken about the place and the door was unfastened this morning when Mr. Manning arrived. He says that it was securely locked when he left the place last night.

The Chamois-Skin Factory.

Two of the capitalists interested in the erection of the chamois-skin factory near Evona avenue, exclusively announced in The Daily Press, were in town this morning, making arrangements for starting the work on the necessary buildings. The plans have been completed, though the contracts have not yet been awarded. One of the buildings will be 400 feet long.

—There will be special attractions at the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon, when Miss Sarah Wray of New York will speak Louis S. Bond will sing, and P. L. Conde's symphony orchestra will render selections.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

EASTER RECEPTION.

This Social Gathering a Veritable Tennysonian "Rosebud Garden of Girls".

Easter Monday, with its wealth of budding blossoms and springtime gladness, was a fitting day for a reception like that given by Mrs. E. B. Clark yesterday at her home, 131 Crescent avenue, to introduce her two daughters, Miss Clark and Miss Bertha McCullough Clark. The Easter time was suggested by the effective decoration of massed Easter lilies on the mantle opposite the parlor entrance; and roses, tulips, white lilacs and smilax added their beauty to the scene. Mrs. Clark, the two debutantes, and Mrs. Lukins, the married daughter from Elizabeth, received the guests, assisted by Miss Clark from Germantown, a sister of the host, Mrs Huntington, Mrs Knowland, Miss Williams from Hartford, Miss Hurd from Dover, Miss Middleditch, Miss Vail, Miss Annie Stewart, Miss Shreve, Miss May Shreve, Miss Haviland, Miss Gertrude Haviland, Miss May Bushnell, and Miss Marion Henderson.

The lights, flowers, music, the daintily-gowned girls, moving in and out among the kaleidoscopic groups of women and men, made a beautiful scene; and the gracious hospitality dispensed by the genial host, Mr. Clark, and all interested, made the whole reception one of the most delightful Plainfield society has known.

The dining room was decorated with pink roses, pink-shaded lights, and smilax; the menu was delicious, and the service excellent. Miss Betts and Miss Carrie Betts presided at the table. From 5 till 7 the rooms were crowded with guests, and at 8 the house filled again with young people invited for the dance, with which the brilliant occasion ended

Plainfield's Dandy Fire Department.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS: It was my good fortune to be very near the ground on the occasion of the sudden alarm of fire on East Front street late Sunday night. Besides myself, I doubt if there was an individual on the street within 1,500 feet of E. P. Thorn's premises. A young man in very scant attire vigorously manipulated the fire-alarm box on Richmond street, corner of Front, and, observing no evidences of fire, I wondered the cause of his action. In less than four or five minutes one or two hose wagons, steamer, and a truck, came rushing up Second street, up Richmond, and down Front to the house.

The moment they sized up the situation bang went the glass out of the cellar windows, and instantly two heavy streams poured from the opposite hydrant on the rafters and floors. Dense black smoke seemed to pour from every aperture above, and it was with great difficulty the firemen could determine just where was the fire. Finally the upper windows were broken into, and thick columns of black smoke poured out. The moment the house could be entered, streams were directed where they were thoroughly effective.

In conclusion, I desire to bear willing testimony to the remarkable skill and efficiency displayed by those in charge. No set of men ever got to a fire quicker, nor was water thrown to destroy furniture or property needlessly.

There was no boisterous yelling, foul language or disorder, but instead rapid, intelligent and good work, and the men acted like a lot of well bred gentlemen. Such a department is a credit to the city, and the people need not wish for better men. There were lots of axes, but the firemen did not rush around terrifying the owners, chopping, mutilating and wantonly destroying, as is too often the case by swash-bucklers who think they are firemen. Plainfield, with its fine water supply, perfect appointments for fire, and first-rate men can well be proud.

He was learning to ride a bicycle on Park avenue, and at the corner of Seventh street was unable to steer straight, with the result of falling into the direct path of a wagon heavily loaded with stone.

The teamster hauled up just in time to save passing over the prostrate body of the bicycle novice. Mr. Rockfellow was considerably bruised, necessitating his removal to Dr. Endicott's office, where he received medical attendance. He was finally taken to his home where he will be laid up for a week or two.

Aus der Alten Heimath.

Easter Monday was celebrated by many Germans in this city and the borough, and by none more than by the members of the Independent Gun Club and their friends at their grounds near Hyde's woods. President Joseph A. Blatz welcomed all. Rifle shooting and shooting at blue rocks from the traps, were a feature.

George Squier and a member broke 17 and 18 respectively out of 20, which was considered remarkable, as each only used one arm. A fine collation was served. There was a large attendance, and everybody enjoyed themselves.

Quarantine Against Mexican Cattle Modified.

The Agricultural Department Issues an Order Whereby It Is Expected To Check the Rise in Beef—Stringent Regulations for a Rigid Inspection Provided for.

Washington, April 16.—In view of the great rise in the price of beef and the reported scarcity of cattle, the chief of the bureau of animal industry, Dr. Salmon, has recommended to the secretary of agriculture the admission of Mexican cattle into the United States under stringent regulations calculated to ensure a rigid inspection of all cattle admitted. Dr. Salmon believes such a course may be safely pursued with the exercise of due vigilance, and that under the circumstances it is judicious. It is hoped by this means to check the tendency to excessive prices to the consumer without injuriously affecting the interests of the beef producers. In accordance with these recommendations Secretary Morton has issued the following special order:

Quarantine Regulations Modified.

It is hereby ordered that the regulations of this department issued February 5, 1895, defining the quarantine line on account of Texas or splenotic fever, and the regulations of February 11, 1895, concerning the importation of animals into the United States, be modified so far as they relate to the admission of Mexican cattle into the United States as follows:

For Grazing and Slaughter.

Mexican cattle which have been inspected by an inspector of this department and found free from any infectious or contagious disease may be admitted into that portion of the state of California, south and west of the said quarantine line, through the ports of Eagle Pass and Laredo, for grazing or for immediate slaughter.

For Slaughter Only.

Cattle may be admitted through the port of El Pasco for immediate slaughter only. In all cases where cattle are admitted for immediate slaughter they shall be shipped by rail or boat to the point of destination. On and after May 1, 1895, cattle will be admitted at the port of Brownsville, Tex., for grazing and immediate slaughter.

ANSWER TO MR. CLEVELAND.

The Bimetallic Committee's Chairman to the President.

Chicago, April 16.—Mr. W. H. Harvey, chairman of the executive committee of the Bimetallic league, has prepared a reply to President Cleveland's letter to the Chicago committee of business men. In it he says: "The committee that waited on you, and the persons who attached their names to the petition such committee presented, did not represent a majority of the business men and citizens of this city who take a deep interest in the welfare of this republic. They represented that class that owns money and securities payable in money—fixed incomes.

Not the True Merits.

"We respectfully submit that your letter does not present the true merits of this controversy. You call the attention of farmers and wage earners to the fact that rising prices, while enabling them to sell their products and labor at a higher price, will also cause them to pay equally more for what they may purchase, but you neglect to say that your statement is not applicable to debts. With prices coming down regularly and steadily since the demonetization of silver, our merchants, manufacturers and the people generally have been doing business on a falling market.

Ever Increasing Volume of Debt.

"This shrinkage in volume, added to the ordinary risk and expense of business, has led to an ever increasing volume of debt—to a money lending period—until it has increased all told, public and private, to about forty billions of dollars, or about two-thirds of the total value of all of the property in the United States."

AGAINST THE EMPIRE

Proclamation Bearing the Chinese Ruler's Name.

Alleged To Be the Work of Secret Societies—The Manifesto Describes the Empire as Ended and Asserting That the Emperor Is Unable To Govern Any Longer.

London, April 16.—A dispatch from Shanghai to a news agency here says that a proclamation bearing the emperor's name has been issued describing the empire as ended, asserting that he is unable to govern any longer, and that the officials he trusted are corrupt. The proclamation has caused great excitement, and there are signs of rebellion. The document is said to be the work of secret societies.

Work of Secret Societies.

Washington, April 16.—Little doubt is felt at the state department that the proclamation posted in Shanghai announcing that the Chinese empire is ended is really the work of secret societies, for there is no record in history of the voluntary abdication of a Chinese emperor. It is said that these secret societies, aimed at the existence of the present dynasty, are numerically strong in the central provinces, and it is apprehended that, upon the conclusion of peace, their ranks will be swelled by the disbanded soldiers, influenced by the Hunan, or war party, and that sporadic revolutionary movement may be expected in various parts of the country.

The Report Ridiculed.

In well informed circles the report is ridiculed as being too absurd to dignify with a denial. It is asserted in the first place that the Chinese emperor could have no purpose in abdicating, and in the second place his mother, the dowager empress, would not permit him to retire if he desired. The societies of China are hostile to the government, their aims and purposes being not dissimilar to those of the nihilists in Russia. If the proclamation be their work, it was probably written for the purpose of adding to the confusion in the empire, and to the embarrassment of the reigning powers. The whole story, however, is regarded as another Shanghai fabrication.

is almost universally followed by decreased vitality. Cod-liver Oil is the natural remedy for decreased vitality, but to prescribe plain oil to one whose digestion is impaired is likely to aggravate the difficulty. But there is a way to take Cod-liver oil and aid digestion at the same time.

This way is Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda. Scott's Emulsion not only presents Cod-liver oil in a palatable and easy form, but the Hypophosphites are themselves an aid to digestion and a remedy for the nervousness of many weak, emaciated persons.

SHOCKS AND PANIC

Death and Ruin from the Earthquake in Europe.

Scenes of Terror in Southern Austria—Buildings Laid in Ruins and Boats Overturned in the Harbor and Trains Rocked by the Shocks. Thousands Camping in the Fields.

Trieste, April 16.—Persons coming from Laibach give vivid descriptions of the scenes of terror during the earthquakes of yesterday. The first shock, shortly after midnight, was so severe that the whole population was aroused, and hundreds ran half naked into the streets. By three o'clock the streets were blocked with carts and carriages in which the sick and aged, and the children were conveyed to places of safety. A little later vans loaded with furniture could be seen on every side.

Knelt Praying in the Streets.

Men and women carrying clothing and boxes of valuables crowded the streets and often stopped completely the progress of the vehicles. Terrified groups knelt on the corners and before churches, praying for deliverance and begging the priests to pray for them.

Buildings Laid in Ruins.

The barracks, the museum, the distillery and half a dozen other large buildings were laid in ruins. Scores of others were cracked and half shaken from their foundations. At Fiume the audience in the Players' theatre had just risen to leave the building when the first shock came. All crowded madly to the exits. Many persons were injured in the struggle, but none fatally. All night boats filled with fugitives put out from the Fiume wharves to the shipping. There is hardly a vessel in the harbor without several Fiume families on board who refuse to return to land.

Boats Capsized in the Harbor.

During the panic in Trieste a frightened horse ran down a crowded street injuring twenty persons seriously and knocking down fifty or sixty. The harbor was agitated as if by a storm, and several boats carrying persons to the shipping were capsized. Six persons were drowned. Slight shocks have been felt here throughout the day.

Death and Destruction.

Vienna, April 16.—All the clocks in the city stopped at 11:20 a. m. yesterday. Persons arriving at the railroad stations reports deaths and damage to property in many towns besides those already mentioned. They say that along the railroad lines they saw thousands camping in the fields. The trains were rocked by the shocks. Some say that the rolling motion was as noticeable as on a ship at sea. All reports indicate that the shocks followed the lines from Florence to Botzen, Florence to Vienna and Serajeno, in Bosnia, to Stein-am-Angar, in Hungary.

TO EXTRADITE MRS. MACK.

American Officers Decide To Drop the Prosecution in Canada.

Hamilton, Ont., April 16.—Mrs. Mack, local manager of the Canadian Novelty company, was again in police court, charged with selling counterfeit United States stamps, but American officers, (Capt. Stuart and Capt. Porter) decided to drop the prosecution in Canada and have begun extradition proceedings. The officers now profess to know who Mrs. Mack is. They will not divulge her name, but it is said she is an old criminal. The detectives say they are not anxious whether the extradition proceedings are successful or not, as they know the woman's nature and feel confident that she would soon drift back to the United States again.

M'KANE A SORT OF FOREMAN.

Sutherland Will Not Be Permitted To Work Under Him in Sing Sing.

Sing Sing, N. Y., April 16.—Warden Sage has not decided in what department he will place convict Kenneth F. Sutherland to work for the state. He will probably be put to work in the clothing department or laundry. Convict John Y. McKane is acting as a sort of a foreman in the carpenter shop. Sutherland is anxious to work again under the supervision of McKane, but it is hardly thought that Warden Sage will permit him to do so.

The Jersey Politicians' Troubles.

New Brunswick, N. J., April 16.—Jas. Mullen, a special officer, pleaded not guilty in court here yesterday to an indictment for atrocious assault and battery upon Robert Ross. He was held in $500 bail for trial. Mullen accompanied George Berdine home on the night Berdine was attacked by one son of Miles Ross, the politician. Mullen drew his revolver.

Only Perry at Large Now.

Matteawan, N. Y., April 16.—The capture of Frank Davis yesterday in a barn at Wappinger's Falls leaves only Perry still at large of the five convicts who escaped from the asylum here last week. The officials are confident that Perry is in the neighborhood of Wappinger's Falls and that he will soon be retaken.

Cleveland Will Review the Parade.

Washington, April 16.—A delegation of colored men called on the president yesterday afternoon and asked him to review the Emancipation Day parade today. Notwithstanding it being cabinet meeting day the president consented, and will review the parade from the white house.

Judas Iscariot in Effigy.

Youngstown, O., April 16.—The Greek church here closed Easter in a grove near the city by crucifying Judas Iscariot in effigy. Then they amused themselves shooting at the effigy, which was filled with fire-crackers. Finally they set it on fire.

Sloss Murder Case.

New Haven, April 16.—Dr. George E. Whitton, of Auburndale, Mass., who was once jointly indicted with him, will be a witness for Dr. J. Edward Lee in the Sloss murder case. The case comes up for trial in the superior court to-day.

Saxton Opened the Fair.

Utica, N. Y., April 16.—Lieut.-Gov. Saxton opened the fair and bazaar of the Little Falls rifle corps last evening. There was a parade in his honor.

SEARCHING FOR ANOTHER BODY

Medical Student Durant Suspected of Several Murders.

San Francisco, April 16.—The report that an arm and other remains of a third woman were found in the Emanuel Baptist church is incorrect, though search is now being made for the body of Mrs. Forsythe, wife of a pressman with the Schmidt Label company, on the supposition that she was murdered by the same hand that slew the two girls. The principal reason for this theory is that she was a member of the Emanuel church and frequently attended there. She was known to have been in the company of a man who attended the church with her, and from this and a few other circumstances, it was thought she had eloped. It is now thought that Durant, the young medical student, now under arrest, was the man and that he killed her also.

Suspected of Other Murders.

There are reasons for thinking that Durant also murdered Eugene Ware, a young drug clerk, who was murdered a few months ago. Those who saw the scientific butchery displayed in both cases, coupled as it was with horrible savagery, immediately connected the cases. Ware and Durant were close acquaintances, and Durant frequently visited him at the pharmacy. He was seen with Ware on the night of the murder. As a motive it is said that Durant was jealous of Ware on account of his attentions to a girl. Ware was stabbed eighteen times with a double-edged dirk, and only two of the wounds looked as though they had been delivered at random. Others were about the heart and abdomen. Furthermore, Ware was murdered by a left-handed man. Durant uses both hands with equal facility.

OIL STILL GOES UPWARD.

Believed That the Standard Will Again Raise Its Offer.

Pittsburg, April 16.—Petroleum had another big advance yesterday and certificate oil on the exchange closed at $2.35 bid, an advance of thirty-six cents per barrel since Saturday. The Standard yesterday posted $2 as the price it would pay at the different agencies for Pennsylvania oil. This is twenty-five cents of an advance from Saturday's purchasing price. Many believe that the Standard will pay twenty-five cents more within the next day. On the local exchange oil opened at $2.05 bid, or an advance of six cents from Saturday's closing price. The first sale was at 2.15 and about 15,000 barrels changed hands. In a short time the market advanced to $2.25 with an occasional sale now and then. From $2.25 there was a reaction to $2.13 and then an advance to $2.24½. During this wide fluctuation in price but few transactions were made, the market being bid up and offered down. Near the closing hour the market got very strong and on the local exchange sales were made at $2.32. At Oil City as high as $2.35 was paid for certificate oil and the market closed strong at $2.35 bid.

MRS. PARAN STEVENS' WILL.

Her Estate To Remain Intact During Two Generations.

New York, April 16.—The will of the late Mrs. Paran Stevens has been admitted to probate. The estate is valued at $1,000,000 in personal and $500,000 in real estate. Outside of a bequest of $5,000 a year for life to Fannie Reed, sister of Mrs. Stevens; $5,000 a year for life to Arthur Paget of London, Eng., and $10,000 each positively to Harry Reed, a nephew, and Florence Reed, a niece, the estate goes to Florence and Harry Reed in trust for Mary Fiske Paget, daughter of Mrs. Stevens. On Mrs. Paget's death the estate will be divided among her children, who will receive the income for life, with the reversion of the estate to their children absolutely.

BISMARCK'S CONDITION.

One Report Says He Is Seriously Ill While Another Denies It.

Freidrichsruhe, April 16.—Prince Bismarck is seriously ill. His reception of the conservative electorial union delegation, which was fixed for Wednesday, has been indefinitely postponed, and his physician, Dr. Schweninger, who is temporarily absent, has been summoned by wire to the ex-chancellor's bedside.

Berlin, April 16.—Late dispatches from Friedrichsruhe give contradictory accounts of Prince Bismarck's condition. One says that he is not seriously ill and that he adheres to his intention to receive the conservative voters on Wednesday.

TREATY OF PEACE SIGNED.

Negotiations at Shimonoseki Said To Be Completed.

London, April 16.—The Times correspondent in Shanghai says: "Li Hung Chang's son-in-law telegraphs that the treaty of peace was signed in Shimonoseki to-day and that the terms are: First, the independence of Corea; second, Japan's retention of the conquered places; third, Japan's retention of the territory east of the Itao river; fourth, permanent cession of Formosa; fifth, indemnity of one hundred million dollars; sixth, an offensive and defensive alliance between China and Japan."

Dr. Buchanan's Petition In.

Washington, April 16.—J. J. Noah presented to the supreme court the petition of Dr. Buchanan, of New York, under sentence of death for wife murder. Chief Justice Fuller said the court would examine the papers, but the matter went over until to-day in order to give the district attorney an opportunity to be heard.

Death of a Prominent Cape May Man

Cape May, N. J., April 16.—Enos R. Williams, well known contractor and builder and a leading prohibitionist, Free Mason and a veteran of the Twenty-eighth regiment of New Jersey volunteers, died yesterday aged 53 years.

New London, Conn., April 16.—Geo. D. Whittlesey, postmaster under President Cleveland during his first term, dropped dead last evening from heart disease. His age was 68. He leaves a wife.

Because He Could Not Get Work.

To Dredge the Seneca River.

Albany, April 16.—Governor Morton has approved the bill appropriating $20,000 for dredging the Seneca river.

NEW ENGLAND FLOODS

Waters Higher Than in Many Years.

Bridges and Dams Swept Away and Railway Traffic Stopped or Impeded—Mills and Factories Shut Down—Towns in Darkness and Havoc Wrought in the Low Lands

Norway, Me., April 16.—The greatest flood since 1809 is now in full sway, and there will be no mails from the west for several days, as all the bridges between the Crooked river iron bridge and North Lowell, some ten or twelve, are swept away. The dam at the outlet of Stone pond, East Stoneham and Spear Hill, half a mile below, are swept away. The streams are falling, and the damage will be repaired in a few days.

Waters Rising at Haverhill.

Haverhill, Mass., April 16.—The river is rising at the rate of six inches an hour. The electric light plant went out at midnight.

No Trains Running.

Littleton, N. H., April 16.—Two and one-fourth inches of rain has fallen here since Friday night. The rivers are the highest since 1869. The Connecticut is still rising but the Ammonoosuc is falling. No trains are running owing to the large amount of track under water. Harris company's carriage shops and the Saranac glove works have been compelled to close.

Highest Ever Recorded.

Concord, N. H., April 16.—More than half a mile of the main line of the Concord & Montreal railroad near Bow junction was washed out last night. At midnight the water had reached the highest mark ever recorded, that of 1869, and was still rising at the rate of four inches per hour.

Passengers Brought in by Teams.

Rutland, Vt., April 16.—The water in Otter creek here and south of here is falling, but north of here it continues to rise. North of Proctor forty-two rods of track is gone, and the train from Montreal is stalled between the two breaks. The passengers were brought here by teams, together with mails and baggage.

Highest Ever Known.

Vergennes, Vt., April 16.—Otter creek is the highest ever known and still rising. Fences and trees are giving away on farm lands and filling the stream below. The first stories of the factory below the falls are flooded.

Business at a Standstill.

Woodsville, N. H., April 16.—High water prevails here and business is at a standstill. Houses and buildings are lying on the meadows along the Connecticut river all afloat.

Greatest Since '52.

Lowell, Mass., April 16.—The freshet in the Merrimack has reached extraordinary proportions at this point. At midnight the water stood eight feet and seven inches over the top of the dam, a height not reached since the famous freshet of 1852. The river is still rising.

Downs the Oldest Inhabitant.

Manchester, N. H., April 16.—Never in the memory of the oldest citizen had the water in the Merrimack and Piscataquog, the rivers affected by the big freshet, been so high as at present, it being ten feet four inches over the dam at Amoskeg Falls. Great damage is being done.

ENJOINED FROM THE TAX.

A Chicago Dry Goods House Must Wait for Final Decision.

Chicago, April 16.—Federal Judge Showalter, on application of Henry Siegel, granted an injunction against Siegel, Cooper & Co., the big dry goods corporation, to prevent it paying any income tax to the internal revenue collector until the law is tested again. When the attorney for Mr. Siegel presented the bill to Judge Showalter, the latter asked for an explanation of the application "This is the last day for the return of the income tax to the collector of internal revenue," said the attorney. "My client protests against his firm making any payments of the tax or any report. He maintains that the bill in its entirety is unconstitutional." By the issuance of the order of the court the firm escapes the payment of the fine, should the supreme court, to which the question will be carried, decides against the complainant.

Chilean Legation Robbed.

Washington, April 16.—Information was received at police headquarters last night of a daring robbery committed upon the Chilean legation in this city by a newly hired butler from New York, a Chilean by birth. The minister had gone to the theatre and left the house in charge of the butler and maid servant. During his absence the butler abstracted a diamond necklace valued at $10,000, and secured sixty dollars in money. He then changed his clothes and disappeared.

Alarm of a Paris Newspaper.

Paris, April 16.—The Echo de Paris advises Europe to form an economic and industrial defense against the United States. It declares that American intervention in Asia and Europe in regard to Armenia should attract the vigilance of Europe.

TOWN AND HOME FAVORITE.

LOADING A COTTON SHIP.

Those Who Do It Are the Highest Paid Negroes In the World.

It is a problem in mechanics to load a cotton ship—to fill every cubic foot of freight room with the awkward rectangular bales—and some men are so much more skilled than others in this science that it often makes a difference of 400 or 500 bales in a 2,000 ton ship and that amount of loss in the profit of the trip. Therefore the stevedores and screwmen receive big wages, perhaps the largest that are paid to negroes anywhere in the world, for most of the 'longshoremen on the South Atlantic are of that race. In New Orleans they are nearly all white men—Italians, Swedes and Irishmen—and the riots that we read about in the papers were due to the introduction of negro packers and screwmen from Galveston to take the place of the whites.

Each wharf and warehouse company has its own gangs of packers and screwmen, and there is a great deal of rivalry among them as to the bales they can get into the hold of a ship. The screwmen are divided into gangs of five, with a foreman, and the whole are under the direction of a chief stevedore, who is usually a white man and acts as superintendent of the dock. Each gang occupies a hatchway of the steamer, and five men are all that can conveniently work in such a narrow space.

The cotton comes from the plantation on the cars or upon flatboats. The bales as they leave the plantation are loosely packed—generally four feet high, and the first thing when they reach the dock is to tumble them into a hydraulic press, which reduces their bulk by one half and makes it possible to pack twice as many in the hold of a steamer. The work is done rapidly and skillfully, and when it comes out of the press the bale is as hard as a stone wall. Then an ebony truckman, with his woolly hair full of shreds of cotton, deftly inserts the iron prow of his truck under the bale and with a sudden jerk throws it into position and starts with it across the planking to the ship.

The truckmen pass back and forth between the pile of bales and the ship in a procession, rapidly and in perfect time, and it is an awkward and "wuthless nigger," the foreman said, who ever touches a bale with his hands. Some of them put on jaunty airs, strike attitudes and introduce fancy steps as if they were at a cake walk, particularly when spectators are watching, but this is unprofessional, and the serious and self respecting truckman "totes his bales" without trying to attract attention. They sing as they go, but for the life of me I could not catch the words, and when in an interval I asked one to repeat the verses he replied:

"Dey ain't none. Dat was jes' de truckers' song."

The refrain sounded like "Oh rio rily oh, oh rio rily oh," and was evidently nothing but gibberish. It appears that the several gangs have their own particular songs, and I judged from what the foreman told me that the words were usually without meaning, or simply a series of rhythmical sounds with terminations that rhymed, invented by some one of their number and sung to familiar airs.

The truckman drops the bale at the edge of the dock or tosses it by a jerk of the handles off his truck over the gunwales of the vessel; then a man adjusts a grappling iron and shouts a signal to the engineer at the windlass, who turns his lever and, hoisting the bale into the air, lets it swiftly down into the hold, where the five artists are waiting to pack it away. It is hot work below and the packers and screwmen are usually barefooted and naked above the waist, while perspiration rolls down their massive muscles. Each has a hook in his hand, and they seize and toss the 500 pound bales as a Japanese juggler plays with plates. Five hooks are in the cotton the instant it touches the bottom, and they seem to work like a machine, for one does not pull one way and another another, but by a united, simultaneous effort the great package is lifted and dropped into the very place where the boss wants it to go.

Then at intervals they get out a big jackscrew that must weigh 500 pounds and crowd the bales together until the hold of the ship is one solid mass. One end of the jackscrew is placed against a bale and the other end against a piece of heavy oak timber four or five inches square, which is notched to keep the screw from slipping and can be inclined against the side of the ship or one of its stanchions, so that a good purchase may be obtained. The screw is worked by a double crank and one man holds it in position while the other four turn. That operation is called "nosing up."

A DRESSMAKING LAWYER.

Has Feminine Ideas of Matrimony and Drums the Piano.

Miss Florence Hollister Dangerfield, who was the second woman to be admitted to practice law in New York city, was the only woman in a class of forty applicants. She is young, has a slight willowy figure and a face full of character and expression.

"I intend to make a specialty of surrogate and real estate law," said Miss Dangerfield when asked if she would begin practicing at once. "I have had a place tendered to me by an eminent man in such matters. I have also had an offer from one of the heads of the municipal departments," she continued, "and a most advantageous offer to go to Denver and practice. We women can practice right along here in New York city, and there's money in it, too, but it will be some time before we will appear frequently in court. The time isn't ripe for it yet. The general feeling is averse to women appearing in court in this city.

"As regards woman's suffrage, I am somewhat in doubt on the subject, but I go this far: I feel that women have the right to try the experiment, and where the experiment has had a fair trial it has succeeded, for instance, in Colorado. But I don't intend to battle for suffrage myself. My profession has my entire interest. I am not going into it to try to raise the standard. I think the profession is sufficiently exalted one as it is now."

Although fond of discussing abstract matters Miss Dangerfield is decidedly feminine in her tastes and ideas.

"How are you going to avoid matrimony?" asked the reporter. "It overtakes most women."

"I may not avoid it," was the laughing reply, "but if I marry it will be with the distinct understanding that I continue my practice. A congenial husband is not likely to interfere seriously with a woman's inclinations. Beside, I have noticed that the women who are to-day doing the most for their sex and contributing largely to literature, the arts and all the new movements are in nearly every case married.

"I am a lawyer," continued this vivacious young woman, "but I am also a woman and I am very domestic in my tastes. I am a great home body. I love to fix up a room prettily and comfortably and there's nothing I like better than sewing."

"That is an interesting revelation," commented the reporter.

"Yes, I know," rejoined Miss Dangerfield, "but sewing always rests me when I'm tired. I made this dress I've got on, and it's nicely made, too. I've made lots of dresses," she added, "and I'm fond of playing on both the violin and piano and of doing a good many other things that most women are fond of."

WAITING ORDERS IN THE NAVY.

A Species of Suspended Animation that Officers Do Not Like.

When the ordinary citizen meets a naval officer the former usually has some curiosity as to what ship the man-of-war's man belongs to, and is often a little astonished to learn that he belongs to none. The idea that a sailor is always at sea, or just ashore, or about going to sea, is strongly rooted in the public mind, and the landsman is even more astonished to learn that a naval officer may be neither at sea nor on shore duty, but unemployed. There are all sorts of reasons why men should be unemployed, and the record of every commissioned officer shows that a considerable percentage of his time was thus occupied. The naval orders from week to week report this or that officer on leave, with permission to leave the United States, which means nine times out of ten that the officer in question is about to take a vacation in Europe.

Much of every naval officer's time of idleness, however, is involuntary, or at least not directly sought on his part. After every cruise or tour of shore duty an officer usually has a period of waiting orders. This may be with a view to giving him a chance to catch his breath, as the phrase is in the navy, it being supposed that a man's respiration on duty is a bit hurried through the exigencies of the service. Such a time of idleness may endure for ten days or for six weeks or more, but the waiting officer must never be out of reach of orders, and must be ready if need be to start for his new post in twenty-four hours. He always keeps open his lines of communication with Washington, for a failure to respond promptly to orders may mean a court martial, and will certainly do him harm at the Navy Department. Few naval officers court a long term on waiting orders, for it means reduced pay and always the haunting sense of responsibility resulting from the necessity of being ready to go at once when the summons comes. No positive engagement can be made twenty-four hours ahead, and the officer must always keep pretty close to the skirts of civilization and a telegraph office. The department must know of his movements if they carry him far from his recorded address.

Mayor Strong and Tammany.

Mayor Strong, of New York, was waited on by several gentlemen recently, who urged him to retain certain Tammany men who are city marshals.

"I guess you'll all have to go, boys," said he. "That seemed to be the verdict of the people at the polls last November and I don't think there is anything left me to do but execute the sentence."

An Unfortunate Error.

From the Plunkville Bugle: "The lack of local news in our issue this week must be laid to the printer. Our best reporter, who interviewed Col. Hotpepper on the financial situation, wrote that the genial colonel spoke by the card. The fool printer put it up that the colonel spoke by the yard, and the colonel, in our absence, held the reporter responsible."—Cincinnati Tribune.

VERY TRUE.

Men who have studied and solved the problem of successful merchandising, who from their knowledge and experience of men and things have formed their convictions and developed their plans, and have had courage to carry them to a successful end—these men, who are acknowledged leaders, have set the pace and mapped out the course to pursue, and that course is bold, honest and true.

But some may say that selling goods on their merits is too old and tame for them; not enough excitement in it. It is certainly a departure from the mark-down methods of these many weary months, a method that has grown hoary and decrepit, and well nigh worn out in the service. It lacks, too, the excitement that false statements usually carry with them—the excitement that fear brings lest the fraud be discovered. But it is a good enough lead to follow just at present.

—From Dry Goods Economist, April 13, 1895.

WE ONLY SELL GOODS ON THEIR MERITS.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

Petitions to Be Sent to Organize the Turkish Army.

QUELLS REVOLT OF THE SECTIONS.

Regret That He Was Compelled to Kill Frenchmen—Joachim Murat Appears. The Sword of Count Beauharnais—Falls In Love With Josephine.

[Copyright, 1895, by John Clark Ridpath.]

IX.—BEGINNING OF ORDER BY THE SWORD.

The motive of Napoleon in refusing to accept an honorable appointment in the field gives rise to speculation. His action reveals both character and policy. He deemed it not expedient to change from artillery to infantry, unless to the independent command of an army. He now foresaw the tremendous opportunities about to be afforded to military genius. War was to be the order of the day, not only for France, but for all Europe. The field opening for the Army of the West was narrow. A general in that quarter must assail Frenchmen only.

In La Vendee there was no British flag—as at Toulon—to add provocation, and justify attack. Loyalism there was rampant, and General Hoche, who takes the place intended for Bonaparte, will find it hot work to reduce the insurgent Vendeans to subjection. The prescience of Napoleon in refusing the command lies in the question, What will become of Hoche? Moreover, the rapid changes in the military management of the Republic left little doubt in Napoleon's mind that his services would soon be sought. Finally, the striking of his name from the list of general officers was only from the list of those on active duty. Thus his rank was preserved with little injury to his future prospects.

For the present, the General awaited the abatement of prejudice. He was rejoined in Paris by Bourrienne, who had returned from Germany. His resources were small, and he was again reduced to distress. For three thousand francs, in assignats, he sold his carriage to Salicetti. He heard with mere envy that Joseph, down at Marseilles, had married Mademoiselle Clary, daughter of a rich merchant. He grew pessimist in his inaction. He declaimed against fortune. He sought the cafes and made sardonic remarks about the fops and dandies who, escaping the guillotine and the danger of it, again showed themselves in fashionable places. There was a brief period of gloom, melancholy, hatred of men, and contempt of public affairs.

On the 14th of September, 1794, Napoleon, partially restored to favor, was given the command of the artillery in a proposed expedition to Corsica; and this post he nominally held until March of 1795; but the period was without events. Meanwhile, finding himself with no command at all, he conceived what may be regarded as his first great project of statesmanship—a project the subject-matter of which, after a century, constitutes the so-called Eastern Question of to-day.

Bonaparte perceived that the ultimate enemy of the ascendency of France was England, and that one great arm of her power was her influence in the Eastern Mediterranean countries. This might be broken, mark it well! by the agency of Turkey. The thought of the Corsican was this: If the Republican administration of France will send Me to Constantinople, to organize and discipline the Turkish army, then the Ottoman power will be sufficiently strengthened and Europeanized to renounce the influence of Great Britain and, in full autonomy, to become a member of a possible coalition of European powers against the common enemy of all!

During the period of his enforced inactivity at Paris, Napoleon prepared a plan intended for the National Convention, outlining his purpose. It was a virtual petition that he be sent to Constantinople, with six or seven competent officers, to organize the military power of the Turkish empire against Great Britain in the East. Bourrienne justly remarks that if the clerk of the War Office had only written the word "granted" on Napoleon's paper, that one word would probably have changed the political fate of Europe for centuries to come! Nor may we pass from the consideration of the project without noting that in the paper of Bonaparte he makes no allusion whatever to Great Britain, but puts his scheme on the ground that Catharine II was at that time strengthening her union with the Emperor of Austria. For this reason, it was the interest of France to promote the military power of Turkey. Napoleon at this time was twenty-six years of age. His scheme was worthy of Richelieu, of Talleyrand, of Metternich, of Disraeli in his ripest years.

The word "granted" was not written. The French Revolution rapidly worked out its own results, and in doing so provided a place for Bonaparte according to the higher laws of destiny. After the overthrow of the Terror, the Convention went on, rather temperately, to complete the new frame of government called the "Constitution of the Year III." That instrument was adopted on the 22nd of August, 1795. It proved to be not sufficiently intense for the statesmanship of the Faubourgs. The Parisian centers of agitation began to resound with denunciations of the latent aristocracy in the new plan of government. For about a month the broil was kept up by democratic pamphleteers and orators who made the basements of St. Antoine vocal and smoky with their objugations.

Then the mobs began to rise in sacred right of insurrection. Several of the Forty-eight Sections took up arms against the Convention; and that great body was imperiled by the onrushing of a counter revolution. Matters [illegible] the beginning of October. The Convention had to protect itself by force of perish. Swift, swift was the work now necessary to be done. The stifled, but not extinct Jacobinism of Paris began to bellow, and mobs from the disaffected quarters of the city came on tumultuously to assail the Convention Hall and overthrow the existing government.

Never has history shown a more dramatic scene than that which now ensued. It was the 5th of October, 1795. In the peril of the hour the Convention drew to itself the troops that were still faithful to the established order. A commander was necessary. By a hasty decree this dangerous honor was conferred on Paul Francois Barras, president of the Convention. He was intrusted with the fearful responsibility of protecting the body and preserving, if possible, the half-ripe—but ripening—fruits of six years of legislative toil and travail. He had already shown himself capable in two preceding riots. This one, however, was more formidable. What he most of all needed in the emergency was a real commander, who had the courage and skill to extemporize, with all haste, a division of troops for the defense of the government. Barras arose in his place, and nominated as his lieutenant and second in command Napoleon Bonaparte. He had seen that officer at his guns before Toulon.

Napoleon himself was sitting, obscurely in the gallery when his name was presented for the perilous duty. He accepted, and immediately there was speedy work. A young officer, whom Napoleon knew, Joachim Murat by name—whom history will presently record as the great cavalry general of the empire—was sent with all speed out to the Champ de Sablons, to whirl in the batteries stationed there. In a few hours guns were planted around the Convention Hall, and at the near-by bridges of the Seine, commanding all lines of approach; and at the breeches stood grim gunners with lighted matches.

Here, then, was business for life or death. The insurrection rolled itself in great volumes along the streets. It might be seen coming on like the sea. The Section Lepelletier leads the van. The insurgents get possession of the church of St. Roch, nearby, and then of Pont Neuf, and then bristle up face to face with the guns of the Corsican. There is not a moment's hesitation. The order to fire is quick and sharp. The Convention Hall is suddenly shaken to foundation stones with the roar of artillery. The guns are loaded with grape and canister. Horrid gaps are cut in long bloody alleys through the insurgent mob. Men—Frenchmen—are blown by hundreds to horrid death. They go back before the hail of destruction. The National Convention is saved. General Bonaparte has the honor of suppressing the last mob of the French Revolution!

Strange to note what the effect of all this was on the man himself. He was in nowise jubilant. Indeed he had hesitated for a half hour before accepting the place of general against the revolted Sections. In his report he covered up his own responsibility—as the facts gave him opportunity to do—making it appear, contrary to his wont, that not he, but others, had put down the mob. He had acted only under orders of the National Convention and General Barras! Ever through life, moreover, he looked back with regret to this hour and event of his career. Doubtless, at bottom, he was a Jacobin himself; but he was an Imperial Jacobin. The two elements in his character did not consist; the one was at war with the other.

Thus much only is certain, that Napoleon would gladly have had his great triumph over the Parisian insurgents blotted from the record. No doubt he was at heart at one with insurrection; but he was also the friend of order. Long ago he had witnessed, on that memorable 10th of August, the great mob successfully assailing and sacking the Tuileries. Though no admirer of the King—though himself at that time a Jacobin adventurer—he nevertheless longed to see the mob blown away from the ancient palace with a blast from loaded batteries—and said that he would do it!

His success in restoring order in the capital may be said to have made Napoleon famous. He had already become an adviser of the Committee of Public Safety. Indeed he held that relation before his name was stricken from the list of generals in active service. Eleven days after the suppression of the Sections, he was made provisionally General of Division, and four days afterwards the "provisionally" was struck out, and he was appointed commander of the Army of the Interior, having as its central field of operations Paris itself.

Destiny reserved for the winter of 1795-96 another capital fact in the life of her devotee. Napoleon found Josephine. He first met her at the house of Barras. She belonged to the Societe des Victimes—"Society of the Victims." To enter this band of the new elite Parisiennes, one must have lost recently a near relative by the guillotine! Josephine had lost one—her husband. The Vicomte Alexandre de Beauharnais had married Marie Josephe Rose Tascher, the beautiful Creole of Martinique, in December of 1779. She was then in her seventeenth year. In 1780 the Vicomte came to America with Rochambeau. Afterwards he was a deputy in the States-General, and was twice president of the National Convention. He commanded, under Custine, at Mentz, in 1793, when that place was surrendered to the Germans. To surrender was death. He was haled to trial, condemned and guillotined only five days before the collapse of the Terror. When Robespierre fell, the Societe des Victimes was formed. The light creatures took wing like butterflies from the blood-pools of the Place de la Revolution. They still wore crepe on their arms when they began to dance anew in Greek sandals and chignons and classical scarfs girdled at the waist. Napoleon saw one of them, and admired and loved.

So he told Bourrienne, while pointing out Josephine one evening at a fashionable cafe. There was a swift courtship. A story goes that Eugene Beauharnais went to Napoleon to recover his father the Vicomte's sword, which had been taken at the disarmament of the Sections. The youth got the sword, kissed it, won the General's sympathy—and Madame de Beauharnais came to thank her benefactor. If this happened, she knew him already; and he knew her. The marriage occurred on the 9th of March, 1796. The disparity of ages was six years and two months. To close this chasm, the marriage certificates dated her birth forward four years, and antedated his by nineteen months. Documents must conform to the exigencies of the great!

A DARK NIGHT

By SARAH ORNE JEWETT

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

CHAPTER II.

Weymouth did not leave his place by the fire, but stood there innocently drying his muddy clothes. The fire had caught a fagot and was cracking and snapping bravely; suddenly it shot up a strange gleam at the side which nobody appeared to notice, though it shone full in the face of the landlady and showed her to be more serene and less excited, and presently she became unexpectedly talkative.

"I do feel proper disgraced to be found so shiftless by you gentlemen," she apologized to Weymouth, whose face was in a shadow. "Custom is so poor that there was no counting on anybody from week's end to week's end. We're giving up our lease to go to America and said that on Monday we'd harbor strangers no more, and since then I've had five companies of traveling folk lighting down, all crying for the best, and being thankful for the worst before they got away.

"You'll wait an hour for your suppers at best," she added; "I'd no eggs by me, but I've sent up the road a bit; I cooked the last I had for the folks that was just before ye. An' I ain't got but the one room to show ye; the chimney fell as belongs to the t'other side the house. He'd ought to get t' bed," nodding at the poor crooked-necked figure on the settee. "I make bold to say I want my kitchen to myself. There's a fire in thur—there's somebody in there a'ready, but she's stone deaf and crippled; an old Welsh body as was left wi' me by her son an' darter. They'll be getting a boat across 'arly, and I promised to mind her while they stepped along the dike to see friends they've got above. She's fast asleep, ye'll hear her snore from here, poor thing, and will neither trouble nor be troubled. I've drawed her curtains tight an' I've stocked the fire. You an' him can take a bit of rest" (persuasively)—"an' I'll do what I can for ye here."

The landlady's tone was peremptory as well as persuasive; she kept casting uneasy glances at Rogers, who seemed to be falling together in a heap in the settee corner. Weymouth hesitated, but when the woman crossed the room and opened a door, he got his companion to his feet and managed to shuffle and drag him to the inner room and put him on the nearest bed. Rogers waked only enough to protest in a weak, strange way, and, then fell off to sleep again, while his face grew very red as if the drink and hot fire had put him in a fever. Here there was a most depressing chill and dreariness. Weymouth hastened back to the kitchen for his cloak and wallet, declaring himself to need the better fire without and ready to insist upon the rights of a guest.

"'Tis newly lighted within, it burnt out and 'twas just made up new; 'twill soon be too much for you an' I'll hear complaints the other way!" the landlady answered him, good-humoredly. "You're not in a Lunnon inn, whatever you may think. Leave me your cloak an' I'll dry an' clean it. My own folks is coming in to their supper. Mind that poor soul ye brought, an' I'll do my best here."

At this moment there were loud voices in the yard and Weymouth stepped quickly toward the door full of a traveler's curiosity. "Stop!" said the woman in an insolent tone that made him confront her with wrath and amazement.

"'Tis but some teamsters, sir," she said, her eyes falling before his unspoken reproach of her manners, and going back to the wheedling tone she had taken earlier. "You're too heated, sir," she explained humbly, "an' 'tis wet without and blowing again. You'd best stay under cover while you may."

The inner room to which Weymouth returned was long and narrow with but one narrow window at each end. That toward the courtyard was shuttered and fastened on the outside and some of the glass was broken while there were cobwebs and dust that had long been gathering. The other window was high above the steep slope of the cliff and looked down at the dyke and the meadows and far over the gloomy water beyond.

The moon was rising behind the heavy mist and, though daylight was now completely gone, there was a strange dim light in its place so that Weymouth could presently see where he was, and he scanned the shadowy country with a growing belief in his heart that he was a prisoner and that he might be glad to escape from this not reassuring house of entertainment. Once or twice it had seemed from some look or gesture that they had been expected. Rogers and the landlady had undoubtedly betrayed the fact that they were not strangers to each other. If he had been a free man bound on one of his own journeys, nothing that had happened would have made him uneasy, but as the guardian of other men's gold he was more and more on the alert. Clearly the best thing now was to stay quiet for a brief time, for his horse's sake, and then to plead haste and push on. He would risk himself in a bit of fighting, even without his pistols which had been left in the saddle. For another half hour at least he would possess his soul in patience, then find his way to another inn less solitary and alarming. With a fresh horse and the night before him he could find Bristol himself. He clenched his fist and shook it at the man on the bed; their coming so far out of the way might perhaps be an accident, but Weymouth doubted more than ever the honesty of the man whom he had distrusted at first sight, and the drugged liquor was the surest proof of mischief. He found himself in a tight place.

As he looked down from the window into the misty night the great dismal plain of the Severn stretched away into the shadows of the distance. A fishing smack or small packet boat had crept up toward the headland and cast anchor under its lee. There was a lantern in the rigging and another dim light being brought upon the hill toward the inn. The wind was still blowing as if it had gone down with the sun, and risen less wild than before.

Weymouth left the window uneasy enough in his mind; he could not see his way to escape in that direction; it was evidently too high for a safe drop to the ground. Then he laughed; his own plan was best and nobody could with decency oppose it; he would call for his horse presently and ride away. Yet if it were known, as he suspected, that he was carrying treasure, it would still take courage to start out alone on a tired horse.

He sat down by the fire and looked about him. There was little furniture in the place except the two old beds, one with its closed curtains of thick stuff and the other, a poorly posted makeshift of comfort on which Rogers lay. The old Welsh woman breathed loud now and then, but Rogers slept as if he were dead. "Curse him," muttered Weymouth. "He should have known his roads or let an honest man alone."

There was a loud voice in the kitchen; the landlady could be heard now and then railing fretfully at some one, who was not slow to answer back. His thoughts, like those of a tired man, went back to the past and he seemed to himself curiously indifferent to the perplexities of the present. He had just left the woman he loved disappointed by her coldness. She was younger than he, they had not known each other long, but after a separation of some months he had joined her with the hope of marriage only to find that she had changed, that she put him off and spoke doubtfully of the future. She had confessed that it was no change in her own feelings, but that she feared to bring shame upon him, and the thought of her lonely figure as they parted returned to him like a vision. She had refused to see him again; this was two days before; and the journey to Bristol must be quickly over so that he might go back to plead with her. It was wrong to have parted angrily as he had done—if ever life was in a snarl it was now, but there were ways to conquer. He started to his feet and went quickly toward the kitchen only to discover that the door had been fastened on the outside.

He coolly let the latch fall and returned to his chair; beside it was the heavy pouch of notes and gold and he slung it over his shoulders and fastened the belt with steady fingers. The sudden wave of eagerness a brave man feels in the presence of danger and that brief space while the troubles of his own heart came uppermost both passed quickly; there was a single moment when Weymouth remembered that he was a tired and defenseless man at the mercy of his foes. Then his fears most nobly passed; he must not only escape to plead with Elizabeth Brent, but he was bound in honor to carry his wallet to Bristol to Capt. Fenderson, of the ship Mary and Bell.

He had a feeling that he was watched. What about the old Welsh woman? It was by no means uncommon for travelers to be crowded together in country inns, but the landlady had been almost too eager to forestall suspicion. And now glancing across the room he saw the curtains move. The landlady had told him to call her if the poor old creature spoke.

Weymouth left his chair again, lifted the latch of the kitchen door, and knocked boldly when it would not open. "Let me out!" he called, grumbling and growling. "Let me out! I want more brandy!" With sudden instinct he took on the behavior of a drunken man. "Let her think I am drugged if she pleases," he said to himself, and knocked again, scolding finely and asking for the brandy by turns. He could hear the voice of another woman now, as if in protest, but presently the door opened and the landlady appeared.

"You've had brandy enough now," she told him, roughly. "I locked the door because the latch is old and it flies open and keeps both fires a-smoking. Cease your noise; I'll call you for your supper." There were two rough looking men by the fireside and a woman stood behind the settee whose eyes met his at if they struck a flash of light. At the first sight of her face he stopped, for an instant he lost power of speech; then he went on with his drunken play and staggered toward the middle of the room.

The men laughed, the landlady scolded, and the slender figure behind the settee was half hidden in its shadow. Elizabeth Brent, the woman he loved and whom he had left so heavy hearted, for whose sake he was hurrying to Bristol and hurrying back, the woman he thought of by night and day, here before his astonished eyes! How in the world could she have also fallen into what looked like a den of thieves? How could he manage to get word with her?

His head dropped on his breast as Rogers, might have done, he was growing faint for want of food, the old woman's supper seemed no nearer ready than at first. The two men were watching him and chuckling together by the fire.

"Get me the brandy!" he called again, and they chuckled louder. "Drinks all round, you pretty pictur'!" he commanded the mistress of the house; and this time they laughed even louder, as well they might.

"I'll get it, aunt," said the younger woman unexpectedly, "which bottle then?" She came out into the firelight, not once looking at Weymouth, but her face was very pale and her eyes were shining. He could almost have touched her as she passed.

"'Tis there in the cupboard at the right hand, the small bottle if he must have it; my hands are fast in the dough," grumbled the old woman. "Half a glass'll be enough in all conscience," she added, in a lower tone, and Weymouth, as if with much effort and unsteadiness, got to his feet and followed to the cupboard, protesting as he went. At that moment a dog began to yelp and whine before the fire; a coal had snapped up on his poor back and burnt its way to the skin. The cupboard was at the far end of the room; there was half a minute of confusion and loud laughter while the two were standing side by side at the cupboard door.

"I'm not drunk. I must get away from this," whispered Weymouth, but she stopped his eager whisper. "The net, the net!" she cried, with strange insistence.

"Don't drink! the net and the farther window!"

"Don't waste it. You'll kill him if you give him more," said the old woman close behind them, but Weymouth held the bottle high in his hand and staggered past her to the bedroom door, muttering angrily, and shut himself in. There was a strong bolt inside which he slid, and pounded the door with his fist finely. He could hear the men laughing by the fire, and went back to his elbow chair. The wallet of money banged against the arm of it as he sat down.

"You're what they're seeking," he said under his breath as he put his hand on the leather bag. "Please Heaven we'll keep together till we get to Bristol," but the presence of the two men in the kitchen was significant enough of there being no hope of a peaceable departure on horseback. The certainty of a careful plot against him was impossible to be denied; it was in the very air; he was one against many, and a stranger in this strange and dismal harborage of thieves. Whether they looked for the ordinary purse of a traveler, or had been given news of that treasure he carried was a puzzle. In that moment a cold chill of horror stole over Weymouth's great frame; had the woman he loved much, who had suddenly repulsed him with so little reason or excuse, been the means of this danger and disaster? Had she and Rogers—no it was impossible—impossible! She might be, she was, the victim of misfortunes, but in her honest eyes and heart there was no possibility of such a fault. He whistled a gay shrill tune as he sat by the fire alone; it was a tune they had both known well the year before when they had seen each other first in Southampton. Please Heaven there were more happy days to come for Lizzie Brent and himself. He began to whistle the song again in broken snatches and the men laughed louder than before in the next room.

WAITE'S GREAT TROUPE.

Large Houses Attend the Production of His Splendid Plays at Popular Prices.

The presentation of the play "Beacon Lights" by the Waite Comedy Company in Music Hall last night was enjoyed by an audience that filled nearly every seat, a fact that testifies to the merit and continued popularity of these amusement-makers. The play last night was of the frontier style, though the tone of roughness was smoothed over by the comedy and pathos elements, combined together with dramatic skill so as to make an enjoyable and indeed instructive performance.

The principal characters were impersonated by David H. Woods and Carrie Louis. As the Western bully, Will Dawson, Mr. Woods, who off the stage is the energetic and brainy manager of the company, seemed to possess all the necessary requisites of roughness, toughness and repulsiveness of a "killer" who had a voice like a foghorn, but whose braveness depended on the number of firearms he carried about his person. Mr. Woods put his whole heart and efforts into the piece, and though the character was anything but a popular one with the audience, it was a necessary part, and his impersonation was realistic enough to win encomiums and bring success to the presentation. Mr. Woods is a finished actor as well as a genius of a manager.

Miss Louis was a bright, rollicking, sprightly and vivacious little piece of humanity, as Carrie Calhoun, the niece of Col. Clay Calhoun (Lee Sterett) who antedated before the late unpleasantness, but who was a gentleman still. In this character she was here, there and everywhere, and doing everything from stealing peaches to striking Dawson with a hatchet to keep him from abducting a child. Miss Louis plays with an enthusiasm that wins her way into the hearts of the audience from the start. Her singing specialties are a feature of each performance.

The parts played by Eugene Ellsworth, Walter Woods, Marguerite Crofton, T. J. Shearer, George A. Kimball, and Capitola Marshall were all well acted, and added much to the finish of the piece. The acting, singing and dancing of Little Ethel May were a continual delight to the audience.

The musical programme of the famous Waite premium orchestra is a feature that is well worth going miles to hear. The descriptive overture, "An Afternoon on Midway Plaisance", was beautifully rendered.

Waite's great company is in Plainfield for the week, and will give a performance every afternoon and evening. Splendid business is assured, and immense patronage is just what every show of Waite's deserves.

Faithful Little Workers.

The children of the Heavenly Rest sewing school will hold a sale in the parish house on Clinton avenue, Thursday and Friday afternoons and evenings of this week. It will be their Easter offering to the mission, and for it, they have worked and denied themselves all through Lent. During the Winter they have made over seventy-five garments, and they deserve the greatest credit for the faithful way in which they have gone through severe storms and bad walking every Saturday afternoon. It is to be hoped that every one will encourage them in this laudable effort, and help to make it a success. The girls themselves will all be behind the fancy and candy table, and do the waiting on the ice-cream and chocolate tables.

Spiritual Experience.

Rev. Charles U. Kinney and wife of Sing Sing, Rev. Mr. Pierson and wife, and Miss Ella Warren of Beracahah Home in New York, addressed the Christian Alliance meeting at 317 West Front street last night. The theme was the deeper spiritual experience of Christians. Arrangements are being made by the Alliance for lectures to be given in the near future by Rev. A. B. Simpson and Rev. Stephen Merritt of New York on foreign missions. It is probable that the Y. M. C. A. hall will be secured for the occasion.

Clubs for Working Girls.

Miss Woolfolk of the New York College Settlement will talk about Working Girls Clubs in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue Church, Tuesday, April 23, at 4 p. m., in behalf of a club to be organized under the auspices of the Ever-Ready Circle of King's Daughters. Twenty-five cents will be charged at the door. Tea will be served.

—In the Church of the Redeemer tomorrow evening, the Right Rev. John Scarborough, D D., Bishop of the diocese, will administer the apostolic rite of confirmation. All are cordially invited.

It will be an agreeable surprise to persons subject to attacks of bilious colic to learn that prompt relief may be had by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. In many instances the attack may be prevented by taking this remedy as soon as the first symptoms of the disease appear. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.

The police and Dr. Simpson were called to the West Fourth street row of houses near Plainfield avenue at 3:30 p. m. today.

Peter Sparks, laborer, age about 60, had attempted suicide. He cut his throat with a razor.

He was despondent through brooding over the death of his wife. He lived alone.

Sparks was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital. It's thought he will recover.

EASTER-TIDE.

Celebration and Election in All Saints Church, Scotch Plains.

The Easter-tide services in this parish were more than usually interesting and impressive. The beautiful church was very tastefully decorated with lilies and palms on Easter-day, and filled with people at the mid-day celebration of the Holy Communion. The choir was augmented for the occasion, Mrs. Force of Fanwood singing a very pleasing contralto solo at the offertory. The rector took pleasure in acknowledging his indebtedness to Frank W. Quereau the organist, and Miss Quereau, for their long-continued services in the music of the church. The young ladies of the Guild had charge of all the decorations, Misses Quereau and Bartlett being the special committee for the day.

In the evening, the Easter festival of the Sunday-school took place, with a large congregation present. Harry Robinson assisted the rector in the choral service and the general conduct of the festival, together with Charles H Kyte and Miss Kieb, the organist of the Sunday-school.

Carols were sung; a beautiful floral cross made up with bouquets from the children; and the missionary "pyramide" opened, which brought in over $18 for missions of the Episcopal church, a very generous offering for the scholars who only number thirty-eight, and it certainly showed their interest in this important matter. On every side there was heard expressed the conviction, that it was the brightest Easter that All Saints Church ever enjoyed.

At the annual election on Monday night the following were chosen vestrymen for the ensuing year: Senior Warden—Frank W Quereau. Junior Warden—William H Carter. Vestrymen — August Proctor, Charles H Bent, Edwin L Walworth, Louis E Kennedy, Thomas G Reynolds Planning to Celebrate.

There was a good attendance of members at the meeting of John Hand Camp, No. 28, S. of V., last night.

The Committee on Camp fire, which will be given by the Plainfield and Somerville Camps, reported that Monday evening, April 29, was decided on, and that it will be held in Somerville.

Plans for Decoration Day services were talked over, and the Camp decided to make the service in the morning at Scotch Plains a special feature.

An invitation was received and accepted from the Women's Relief Corps to attend the sociable to be given by them Friday evening. Wm. F. Barry Camp of Railway also extended an invitation to the Camp to be present on the same evening, but on account of the Camp fire it could not be accepted.

David Copperfield, Casino, April 23

The crowded condition of the Casino at the last Hospital Benefit was in the minds of many when the Underhill series was announced, and some stayed away from the first recital fearing the house would be "over-sold". Groundless fear! Such a deluge of patronage is like a spring flood, and happens but once a year. The King's Daughters of Washington Park are not soliciting funds, but are inviting the public to enjoy a series of high-class entertainments, and to come in such numbers that their treasury shall feel it after all the expenses have been met. The house ought to be full, but not too full.

The Building Ordinance.

The committee appointed at the meeting of citizens held by the Board of Trade last Thursday, to examine building ordinance now before the Common Council, have had a meeting of the builders and architects, and have formulated several important changes which they will present to the public meeting to be held Thursday in the Board of Trade Building, 119 East Second street. Everyone interested will be welcome.

Sewer Work.

A section of the new 15 inch sewers was started on Plainfield avenue yesterday afternoon between Seventh and Eighth streets, under the supervision of Civil Engineer Harry C. VanEmburgh. The soil in this section is of sand, which is particularly good for building purposes. It makes it comparatively easy for the laborers in the trenches.

—The Grenell system of fire protection sprinklers has been finished in the Babcock Building, and the company's employes are now engaged in piecing a similar system in the planing mill of Spicer & Hubbard, corner of Madison avenue and West Third street.

AS TO PUBLIC ROADS.

Some Facts From the First Annual Report of the New Jersey Commissioner.

Edward Burroughs, the New Jersey Commissioner of Public Roads, has, in this, his first report, supplied a mass of useful information and valuable data as to the working of the new law under which it is expected that New Jersey will become "a State of highways". He traces rapidly and concisely how the roads developed from the old Indian trails, and summarizes the laws and improvements which have marked the revived public interest in the subject during the last few years.

Much of the report refers more to the southern and south central counties of the State than to that portion in the immediate vicinity of New York, so that the practical benefits to be derived by the farmers and truckmen by an increase in the transport facilities are not touched on with that fullness which is desirable, but on the other hand the report abounds with statistics which will be found of great value to the practical road maker, and will serve as a guide to the various township and borough authorities which have road matters under their supervision.

The work can be had by application to Mr. Burroughs at Trenton, and will be found of great value to those who contemplate making roads, either public or private.

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

How Plainfield Youth Are Taught the Value of Books.

The following is posted up in the "Children's Alcove" of the Free Public Library:

A few things to remember about the library:

1. That a library book should be treated even more carefully than a book that belongs to you.

2. That to treat a book carefully means that it should never be handled with soiled or moist hands, nor be laid down in any but a clean, dry place.

3. That you should never moisten your fingers in turning over the leaves.

4. That you should never write in, or mark the books in any way.

5. That you should never mark the place where you have left off reading by turning down the leaf or putting in pencils or letters.

6. That you should never leave a book lying open.

7. That a book should never be placed lopsided on a shelf.

Remember, that the more carefully you treat the books, the more children's books there will be for you to read, for the less money that the Library is obliged to spend for re-binding and replacing books that have been carelessly used, just so much more money will it have to spend for new books. So as you use the books try to remember the rules which I have written down for you, and see if you cannot always bring back the book in as good condition as it was when you borrowed it

THE NEW CARPET.

Clever Local Verse by a Young Woman of 83 Years.

The following verse has just been issued in graceful booklet form from the pen of Mrs. Esther Kempeter Miller. The poetess is 83 years of age, and her brightness of spirits and intellect is well reflected in her poem:

THE NEW CARPET.

THE INVITATION OF THE ENTERTAINMENT REQUESTED EACH ATTENDANT TO CONTRIBUTE AS MANY PENNIES AS HE HAD LIVED BIRTHDAYS.

Come one and all, both old and young,
Open your purse, and use your tongue;
The purse that all of us may know
By coins that each one will bestow,
How many years of life you've passed;
For well we know all have been asked
To donate thus for Carpet.

Your tongues, of course, tonight you'll use,
With words and songs that will amuse;
Also of Birthdays you will tell,
And such you've had, we know full well,
For if you had not, we declare
That you tonight would not be here
To say we need a Carpet.

We've met to celebrate Birthdays,
And hope that every one will praise
The Giver of all good, that we
Recurring Birthdays live to see;
Some count but few, others count many
And for each one we give a penny
To swell the fund for Carpet.

Our boys and girls, who are so bright,
We welcome here with joy tonight;
Our young folks, too, we gladly greet
And always with them love to meet;
The middle aged we pass not by,
But welcome them as they draw nigh
To help us buy the Carpet.

The aged we will not omit,
For well you know they'll not permit
The wind or weather, cold or heat,
To keep them from their usual seat
In God's own house; though past four score;
And one is really five years more,
They ought to have New Carpet.

Then there's our Pastor, who, we know,
The Gospel light to us doth show;
Long, long, may he our leader be
And many birthdays live to see,
With his good wife to aid and cheer
Him in his work for many a year;
And both enjoy the Carpet.

Of Deacons also we must speak,
For they the Church's good do seek;
Deaconesses, too, whose constant care
It is the Pastor's work to share;
Trustees likewise have honors won,
For faithfully they've duties done.
All these deserve New Carpet.

Our Organist we must applaud,
For she much pleasure doth afford;
By skillful touch on Organ's keys
She doth the audience always please,
And the Precentor, whom we need
In sacred song doth us well lead,
May both long use our Carpet.

Of Ushers now we'll speak a word,
All of their courtesy have heard;
How strangers cheerfully they greet
And kindly lead them to a seat;
We thank them for their constant care,
And hope the time is very near
When they will tread New Carpet.

Leader and Teachers of Sunday-school
With scholars also as a rule;
And likewise Ladies' aid, whose plan
Is to do good where'er they can;
These join Endeavorers to procure
This comfort and success assure
By purchasing Church Carpet.

The Church, we say, for surely all
Should listen to its winning call,
Extend its influence on the earth
And keep in view its priceless worth;
Full fifteen years its course has run
And all its work has been well done.
It merits a New Carpet.

And now dear friends we'll close this rhyme,
Full well we know you'll say 'tis time;
Though you requested us to write,
It may be, what you've heard tonight
Has taught you all not to renew
Such a request, so now Adieu.
But not unto the Carpet.

To Carry the Mails.

James Frisbie was yesterday awarded the contract for carrying the mail between the post office and the North Avenue station. Frisbie will receive $380 for the service, and furnish a horse and wagon when necessary in inclement weather. When the bids were first filed the lowest offer was for $450, but the Government postal authorities sent in word that they would not award the contract at that price, but if any one would take it for $350 they could have the contract. Mr. Frisbie accepted the suggestion, and will continue to push the famous three-wheeled red cart.

Quietly Married.

Phillip Smith, employed on the drill engine of the Central Railroad, and Miss Ida Bittle of Elmwood place, were quietly married yesterday afternoon at Newark. Mr. Smith worked in the morning and slipped quietly away in the afternoon and brought his bride home to his boarding house at Dunellen in the evening. The couple intend keeping house in a few weeks. Phil was working as usual this morning.

Let Them Organize.

The Baseball Committee of the Y. M. C. A. who are endeavoring to organize a a team will have a meeting at 9:15 tomorrow night to consider the project. All lovers of this national sports are anxious to see a crack Plainfield team in the field this season, and if one is organized it would doubtless receive substantial support.

—Several adoptions of palefaces will be made by Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Tribe of Red Men at their meeting this evening. The anniversary entertainment committee will also make their report.

CARRIAGES FOR ALL.

The Trolley Needed by Everybody Who Doesn't Keep a Horse.

When the phantasms of certain scattered individuals are dissipated by the testimony of Plainfield people of Plainfield people of Plainfield experiences, and it is seen that the trolley as conducted here is not a source of annoyance, nor a source of danger to life or limb, and is not therefore a source of injury to property—when all this is clearly seen and appreciated, does not a common humanity, a sense of real charity, demand that no mere obstacle be conjured up to deprive those who are not able to keep a private conveyance of the customary conveniences of communication?

When a man in West Fourth street or East Fifth street, for example, says that no trolley line shall be extended from the railroad station by way of his street, what does he say in plain terms to his fellow creatures?

He says to scores of little children, "you shall sit through school hours or church hours in wet shoes or wet clothes, or both, after your tramp through storm, or perhaps slush. You have, I know, no carriage to ride in, but you shall not have the benefit of public conveyances that children use in almost every other city in the land. No matter if pneumonia or other disease be the result, I say you shall go afoot in this town."

He says to the weary business man returning home, "go afoot regardless of distance or the state of the weather. If you do not like it, go elsewhere to live."

He says to the women who do not own carriages, "go you also afoot if you have shopping or marketing to do, or if you go to and from the great city daily. If it rain, tramp a mile if need be, and don't expect to ride in this town, because I dislike the trolley, and do not happen to need it."

So through the list. The man who has located himself near the North avenue or Netherwood station cherishes the atmosphere of Self, and binds ninety-nine out of every one hundred to discomfort, perhaps to disease, certainly to loss of valuable time.

Gentlemen of the Council, shall a few men who hasten to forget humanity and the general good, control communication in this town?

Post-Lenten Society Event.

A delightful post-lenten social event was the tea given by Miss Nancy Lawson yesterday afternoon from 4 to 7 at her home, corner West Eighth street and Central avenue. The dining room presented a pretty view with two tables, one decorated with pink and one in yellow.

The flowers were dainty and fragrant jonquils, while the parlor wore an aspect of springtide with these flowers displayed about the room. Miss Walton poured chocolate and Miss Middleditch tea. They were assisted by the Misses Mary Whiton, Gertrude Andrews, Mary Bushnell, Emma Schoonmaker, Emma and Gertrude Haviland. About 75 were present.

Salvation.

Adjt. and Mrs. Wood will conduct great meetings at Salvation Army, 116 West Second street, Thursday and Friday evenings, April 25 and 26, commencing each night at 8.

Thursday night they will be reinforced by Captain Emily March and Captain Mimms, both of whom used to be stationed at the local corps here. The corps at Elizabeth is expected also. During the service ten local officers will receive commissions and a baby will be given away. After the service, a free lunch will be served to all present. Admission to this meeting by ticket 10 cents. Friday night there will be a special holiness meeting to which all are welcome.

Postmaster's Privilege.

Charles W. Dayton, postmaster in New York, has extended an annual pass for admission to the main postoffice building in the city to Postmaster John M. Hetfield of this city. The pass takes the holder in company with a guide, through all the departments of Uncle Sam's wonderful building. It is transferable, and Mr. Hetfield kindly loans it to his friends who desire to take in one of the principal sights of metropolis.

—Fair tomorrow, northerly winds.

—For fine confections and delicious ice-cream, go to Tier's.

HOW SHE DROVE THE HACK.

Entertaining Ballad in Which an Enterprising Woman Gives Her Experience at Earning a Dollar for the Library.

The recent entertainment for the benefit of the Scotch Plains Public Library proved to be very enjoyable. The women having the matter in charge, by a deft arrangement of the chairs in the chapel of the Baptist church, gave a cozy and homelike look to the surroundings of the "experience meeting", at which those who had earned a dollar each in some unusual and and if possible extraordinary way were announced to confess by what exercise of ingenuity this had been done, either verbally or in writing, in prose or in verse. Music and recitations (the latter by Miss Lewis of Plainfield and others) varied the disclosure of experiences, ranging from aiding a husband to put up a stove, to driving a hack from Fanwood station to the old village of Scotch Plains in active competition with the sufficiently wide-awake hackmen in normal charge of this route. The latter invention was conceived and carried into effect by a woman who described her experiences in verse as follows:

In an unguarded moment I pledged my word
And my pledge a number of ladies heard,
That I'd earn a dollar in some odd way
And relate my experience here today.
I thought of the things I might possibly sell,
And also of things I could do fairly well;
But this thought came to me again and again
Why not bring a few friends up from the train.

So I hastened up stairs for my gloves and my hat,
Then ran to the window to look out for Pat,
And I called, be quick Patrick, harness up Dan,
I must get to the station as fast as I can,
And now in my wagon behind my fleet steed,
I thought of the Library, and oft of its need,
Which gave me the courage I needed full sore,
And soon I arrived at the station door.

But when the passengers began to come in
I had not the courage to help swell the din,
And the clamor the orthodox hackdriver makes
When his stand on the front of the platform he takes,
But to gain of the patronage what was my share
I offered a chromo to each then and there,
And to all who would take their passage with me,
And it worked like a charm as plainly you'l see,

My friend Mr. N——l it pleased to a dot,
And he being first had his choice of the lot.
Mr. C——r came next. Then I took up the reins
And we started in fine style for old Scotch Plains.
I had ridden in hacks and knew just who to do,
So I made a great picture of putting Dan through.
While I said in an undertone, Don't go too fast,
Strike a nice gentle gait, you will get there at last.

Then I wrote to a friend who was staying in town,
That when she returned home, I'd carry her down,
And on the day set at about half-past three
Found my friend and her baggage awaiting for me.
Herself and her daughter, a bag and umbrella
A guitar and a camera, her friend and a fellow.
And surely, I thought, I shall make money fast,
The committee will wish that my business could last!

But I've earned my dollar and what man can say
That indeed I did not earn it in an odd way?
And I've but one regret now my mission is done
That it were not a thousand instead of but one!

AT REST.

J. B. Platt.

Owing to the sickness of Mrs. Platt, only a short funeral service was held over the remains of J. B. Platt at his late home, corner of West Front street and Waynewood place, at 10 this morning. At this service the youngest son, three weeks old, was baptized beside the casket of his father. At 11 a service was held in Holy Cross Church, Rev. T. L. Murphy officiating, which was largely attended, a number of acquaintances coming out from New York. The music was under the direction of Elmer Runyon.

The floral tributes were very liberal and beautiful, among them a large floral cross of white roses and lilies from Mr. Platt's associates in the New York office of the Berkshire Life Insurance Company. The bearers of the casket were Benjamin B. Western, Joseph B. Hall, Robert S. Miller, Dr Joseph H. Carman, and Horsley Barker. The remains were taken to Yonkers this noon for interment.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

CAMPOS AT SANTIAGO

Hearty Welcome Accorded the Spanish General.

Driven Under Military Escort to the Cathedral Where Mass Was Celebrated—He Declined an Invitation to a Banquet, Saying He Preferred Assistance in Restoring Peace.

Santiago de Cuba, April 17.—Gen. Martinez Campos, accompanied by Senor Dupuy de Lome, the new Spanish minister to the United States, was transferred to the warship Villa-Verde at Guantanamo, and arrived here at 5 o'clock last evening. The forts and Spanish warships and the British warship Mohawk fired a salute in his honor, and shortly after his arrival a reception committee, composed of Gen. Lachambre, Gen. J. S. Moreno, chief of staff, and the Archbishop of Santiago, boarded the vessel and greeted the general and Minister de Lome.

Enthusiastically Received.

After an exchange of courtesies Gen. Campos and Senor de Lome were taken ashore in a rowboat. The neighboring wharves were crowded with people. The party were conducted to carriages and were driven under military escort to the cathedral where mass was celebrated. The streets were elaborately decorated with bunting and several handsome arches added to the general effect. Subsequently Gen. Campos reviewed the troops at the government building.

Preferred Assistance for Peace.

Shortly after his arrival Senor Campos was invited to attend a banquet to be given in his honor, but he declined the invitation, remarking that he preferred the assistance of the public in the work of restoring peace to the island.

WARSHIPS FOR CUBA.

Four Fighting Vessels Will Leave Spain To-day.

Madrid, April 17.—The Spanish government has abandoned the negotiations looking to the purchase of the cruiser recently built at Kiel for China, which was not delivered owing to the fact that the purchase money was not forthcoming. The builder of the cruiser demands £60,000 for his vessel, and this figure the Spanish authorities consider exorbitant, the government having recently paid only £43,000 for a cruiser of the same type that was built in Spain. The torpedo gunboats Martin Alonzo Pinzon, Janez, Galicia and Filipinas will sail for Cuba to-day. Other vessels are being got ready in case they may be required.

DEMOREST LEFT $1,100,000.

The Fortune Goes to His Widow and Four Children.

New York, April 17.—Letters of administration have been granted by Surrogate Fitzgerald to Ellen L. Demorest on the estate of her husband, the late William Jennings Demorest. The deceased left $1,000,000 in real estate and $100,000 in personal property. Besides the widow the heirs of Mr. Demorest are his four children—Vienna D. Gano, Henry C. Demorest, William C. PEACE IN THE ORIENT

Articles Signed by China and Japan.

A Dispatch Received by Mrs. Foster from Her Husband, Li Hung's Adviser, at Shimonoseki—Still Some Doubt About the Accuracy of the Reported Terms.

Washington, April 17.—Mrs. John W. Foster, wife of ex-Secretary of State Foster, has received a dispatch from her husband, who is confidential adviser to the Chinese peace envoy, confirming the report that articles of peace have been signed between China and Japan. The dispatch said that the agreement was signed Monday and that Mr. Foster would be home on June 1.

Bare of Details.

The dispatch from Mr. Foster came from Shimonoseki, where he remains with Li Hung Chang, although recent reports have stated that he had gone to Pekin. The message was in cipher, according to a code in use between Mr. and Mrs. Foster. Although very brief and absolutely bare of details, Mrs. Foster regards it as a finality, as her husband has not cabled the incidental proceedings, it being understood between them that only in the event of something final and authoritative would there be a cable dispatch.

Will Await Ratification.

Tokio, April 17.—The newspapers here say that at the conference between the peace commissioners Monday Viceroy Li Hung Chang submitted China's reply to the propositions of Japan, whereupon an agreement on the subject was reached. The conference of the peace commissioners will not meet again until ratifications of the treaty of peace are exchanged.

Notification in London.

London, April 17.—The Japanese minister here in an interview said that he had received information that peace had been concluded on the terms stated in the dispatch from Shanghai, namely: 1. The independence of Corea. 2. Japan to retain the places she has conquered. 3. Japan to retain the territory east of the Liao river. 4. The island of Formosa to be ceded permanently to Japan. 5. The payment of an indemnity of $100,000,000. 6. An offensive and defensive alliance between China and Japan.

Doubts Its Correctness.

The minister said that the dispatch omits several particulars which he knew Japan had advanced, notably the favored-nation treatment and other commercial concessions. He also said that the amount of indemnity was very small, but he believed that the clauses referring to the independence of Corea and the cession of the island of Formosa were correct. Clauses two and three, the minister said were difficult to understand; while an offensive and defensive alliance between China and Japan, referred to in the sixth clause, was, in his opinion, hardly reconcilable with the present requirements of Japan.

The Report Confirmed.

Washington, April 17.—Secretary Gresham received a cablegram from Minister Dun, at Tokio, Japan, confirming the press dispatches that a peace treaty had been signed by China and Japan. The message was terse and simply stated that "peace negotiations between Japan and China were concluded."

ANOTHER JUMP IN OIL

May Options Pushed To $2.50 a Barrel.

Believed That the Price Will Soar Still Higher—An Advance in the Refined Product, Which Indicates That the Present Flurry Is Not a Plan of the Standard.

Pittsburg, April 17.—The oil market opened active and feverish yesterday. The Standard made another advance of 25 cents in its price, putting it up to 2.25. The May option opened at 2.40 bid, and the first sale was at 2.50. It then dropped down ten points, and the third sale was at 2.40. Then it started back up again, and sold at 2.47½, but soon broke and at 10.30 was offered at 2.43. The continual upward movement has inspired confidence in operators and producers, and no one now cares to predict when it will stop. Field operations are progressing rapidly, and "wild-catters" are prospecting with great eagerness for new territory.

Advance in Refined Oil.

The Atlantic refining company announced another advance of two cents per gallon in refined oil which makes a total rise of three cents per gallon for the refined product in the last two weeks. The advance aggregates $1.50 per barrel. The fact that the price of refined oil is going up with crude is considered by many as evidence that the present flurry is not, as has been claimed by some, a plan of the Standard for the purpose of squeezing the independent refiners. So long as the price of refined is kept up in proportion to the price of the crude the independent refiners are not put to a disadvantage.

Corresponding Increase in England.

London, April 17.—The English manager of the Standard Oil company, when questioned regarding the advance in the price of petroleum in the United States and the situation here, said that the price of oil in England had been advanced to correspond with the price in America. A few weeks ago the price was 6d. (8 cents) per gallon and it is now 7½d. (15 cents) per galloon. As yet there had been no general complaint against the advance upon the part of consumers, but it had been a great surprise to dealers. He added that the advance in Scotch oil was not in the same proportion to that of American oil. He considers the situation due to under-production rather than to speculation.

Same Advance in Russian Oil.

Nobel Brothers, of St. Petersburg, the great Russian oil firm, say there is the same advance in the price of Russian oil as that recorded in petroleum in the United States. They say that the Standard Oil company has not yet purchased any oil in Russia.

Two More Big Verdicts as a Result of the Hackensack Disaster.

Trenton, N. J., April 17.—Andrew Roslefs, clerk in the Garfield National bank of New York city, recovered a verdict of $7,500 against the D., L. & W. railroad company in the federal court yesterday. He was seriously injured in the Hackensack bridge accident in January, 1894. Mrs. William Clark, whose husband, W. A. Clark, was killed in the same accident, received a verdict for $8,000.

Two More Mines Resume Operations.

Pittsburg, April 17.—The resumption of the Finleyville mines of Henry Fleersheim and the Shaner mines of the Criterion Coal company at 60 cents a ton were the developments of the miners' strike yesterday. None of the mines are operating full, but the operators say they will have many more men at work before the end of the week.

Philadelphia, April 17.—About 500 employes of Seville, Schofield & Co.'s woolen mills went out on a strike yesterday and their action will eventually throw out of employment 1,200 to 1,500 hands. The cause of the strike is the demand for the old rate of wages.

BUCHANAN DIES MONDAY.

Argument of the Wife Murderer's Appeal in the Supreme Court.

New York, April 17.—Warden Sage, of Sing Sing, has about completed arrangements for the execution of the wife murderer Dr. Robert Buchanan, who, unless his lawyers at Washington secure further delay, will be electrocuted Monday morning next. G. W. Gibbons, counsel for Wife Murderer Buchanan, notified Warden Sage that the judges of the United States court would hand down a decision on his application to-day. Warden Sage then told Buchanan of the message. The condemned man is very anxious but hopeful, and thinks Mr. Gibbons will succeed in saving him. State Electrician Davis will arrive at Sing Sing Thursday and make the tests of the chair and apparatus, if the judges decide against Buchanan.

WAGES RESTORED.

Fall River Operatives Break the Recent Iron Clad Agreement.

Fall River, Mass., April 17.—The manufacturers' association voted yesterday afternoon to increase wages 12 1-2 per cent., the new rates to go into effect April 22. The vote is a practical breaking of the iron clad agreement, of which so much was written during the strike last fall, and is also a determination to restore the wages paid previous to August 20, 1894. The increase voted is the result of a voluntary increase made to operatives in the iron works mills by M. C. D. Borden last week. To weavers it will be an increase of from 16 to 18 cents per cut for standard printing cloths. To mule spinners it will mean an advance of about 6 1-2 per cent. To all others it will mean an advance of from 10 to 12 1-2 per cent., according to the departments where the operators are employed. Besides increasing wages the manufacturers practically agreed to close their mills Thursday night for the remainder of the week.

DURANT IS ACCUSED.

Formally Charged with the San Francisco Butcheries.

San Francisco, April 17.—Theodore Durant has been formally charged with the murder of Minnie Williams, one of the mutilatad women found in the Emanuel Baptist church. The coroner's inquest was begun during the afternoon. Mrs. Ella Forsyth, another member of the church, is missing. The city is alive with rumors and the people are greatly excited. George King, organist of the church, made a statement to Chief of Police Crowley which tends to fix the murder of Miss Lamont also upon Durant. King found Durant, pale and weak, on April 3, not far from where the body of the young woman was discovered.

THE CAPTURE OF PERRY

He Had No Weapon and Made No Resistance.

Sprained His Ankle While Running from the Officers The Reward of $2,250 Will Go to a Weehawken Policeman and a West Shore Railroad Detective.

Hoboken, N. J., April 17.—The arrest of train robber Oliver Curtis Perry at Weehawken yesterday settled all reports of his having been seen at many points between the Matteawan asylum and Amsterdam since his escape from Dr. Allison's custody on Wednesday in company with four other convicts confined in the Matteawan institution. Perry was confined in the Hudson county jail, Jersey City, last night awaiting the arrival of New York state officials. As he is a fugitive from justice, extradition proceedings were unnecessary.

Discovered with Tramps.

Perry was discovered, with other tramps, about a fire in Weehawken, near the terminal of the yards of the West Shore railroad, by detective Edwin Clifford, of the railroad staff. Something in the man's appearance led the officer to think of Perry, for whom all the Vanderbilt railroad detectives have been on the alert.

Fell and Sprained His Ankle.

With Policeman McAleese, of the Weehawken force to assist, at attempt was made to nab the suspect, who had at once left the group around the fire and started up the hillside in an endeavor to escape. The chase extended for quite a distance up and down the rocky slopes surrounding the West Shore yards, and the fugitive finally came to grief by stumbling over a ridge above the tracks and then falling on some ragged rocks distant from fifteen to twenty feet. The accident gave him a sprained ankle, and was doubtless, owing to his uncertain footing, due to badly blistered feet. His predicament gave his pursuers the advantage they needed and he easily became their prisoner.

Had Had a Hard Time.

Perry, who had evidently had a hard time since leaving the asylum, was at once taken to the Weehawken lockup, where he passed into the custody of chief of police Simon Kelly. Perry was clad in a soiled salt-and-pepper coat, a dark vest, brown trousers and a blue shirt. On his feet were a pair of well-worn, heavy brogans, which were broken out at the sides, or had been cut open to ease the wearer's weary feet.

At First Denied His Identity.

When examined by Chief Kelly, he said he was John Morton, or Martin, 31 years old, and "a plain tramp," looking for work. Kelly advised the New York police of the man's capture, and a detective from the Mulberry street headquarters came to Weehawken with a photograph of Perry. The identification was apparently certain, but was made sure when the captive told Chief Kelly that he was Oliver Curtis Perry. The chief then wired Dr. Allison at Matteawan that he believed his captive was Perry and asked that officers be sent to make positive the identification. As a result of his request Attendant James Coyle was sent from the asylum.

Spent One Night in New York.

As to his whereabouts since leaving Matteawan Wednesday night Perry declined to say, beyond admitting the fact that he spent Thursday night in the woods. New York reporters tried without success to interview him. Perry finally did tell Kelly and Clifford, however, that he was in New York Sunday night at Jerry McAuley's mission, where he was given a card to a hospital to have his feet doctored. The reports as to the hospital at which he was treated conflict, and he does not make that point clear.

Transferred to a Secure Jail.

Fearing for the safety of his man in the Weehawken jail, Chief Kelly transferred him to the keeping of Sheriff Toppey at the Hudson county jail. The transfer was made in a coach, the prisoner being manacled to Detective Clifford. When the party reached the jail the clerk's office was filled with newspaper men, but beyond hearing the prisoner give his name as Oliver Curtis Perry, his birthplace as Amsterdam, N. Y., and other particulars of his pedigree, nothing could be learned, as he was at once locked up in a cell. Perry had $2 in money only when registered by the warden. The $2,250 in rewards offered for Perry's capture will go to Detective Clifford and Policeman McAleese.

Proud of His Notoriety.

As Perry stood in the crowd that had gathered in the station house he was evidently very conscious and well pleased with the interest he was exciting. "All I am ashamed of," he said, "is my condition—that is, the condition of my clothes, but I prefer to travel as a tramp. I could have got tools and arms if I had wanted to, but I did not want to go to my friends. They always watch your friends, you know, and I have many political friends, whom I avoided. See? It was because," he said, "my friends were not allowed to see me, and to intercede for me, that I decided to make the break. Now I am satisfied, for I have attracted attention and maybe people will look into the isolation and ward business."

Hall last night, at which the following were present: Misses May and Maggie Flanagan, Tessie and Alice Keeley, Sarah Conover, Julia Day, Nellie Kelly, Miss Smith, Miss St. Ledger, and Mrs. Wm. At the conclusion of the supper a handsome baton was presented to Choirmaster Cashin, as a testimonial to his efficient musical instruction. A Study in Grammar.

A Cincinnati teacher in one of the lower grades of a city school was endeavoring to impress upon her pupils the fact that a plural subject takes a verb in the plural.

"Remember this," she said; "girls are, boys are; a girl is, a boy is. Now do you understand it?"

Every hand in the room was raised in assent.

"Well, then," continued the teacher, "who can give me a sentence with girls—plural, remember?"

This time only one hand was raised, and that belonged to a pretty little miss. "Please, ma'am," she said, with all the assurance of primitive reasoning, "I can give a sentence. 'Girls, are my hat on straight?'"

Gladstone's Tremendous Talks.

I remember once asking a friend of Mr. Gladstone what kind of arts he used to employ to bring over hesitating colleagues or wavering partisans. "No arts," was the reply. "He never wheedled; he simply overwhelmed." The amount of energy, and even of rhetorical skill, which Mr. Gladstone would throw into these informal colloquies was often prodigious. "Good heavens! good heavens!" said a well known politician once, as he wiped the perspiration from his forehead and sank exhausted into his chair. "Good heavens! there is nothing left of me!" "Why," asked his friend, "what have you been doing?" "Talking with Mr. Gladstone for an hour," was the reply.

HONOR IN BUSINESS.

Some Remarkable Examples of Honesty When Unlooked For.

Some people pay their debts, some do not; some go in for liquidation, while others again are content to go through the process of being whitewashed, and after paying a certain sum, more or less (generally less), never allow such a trivial matter as an unpaid balance to again trouble them.

There have been, however, striking examples of commercial honesty and integrity, instances when men have, owing to adverse circumstances, "come a cropper," but have afterwards (many years afterwards, some of them) paid their debts in full.

A notable case was recorded recently, none the less striking because the man owed but a small sum. Some six years ago a young man had a tobacconist's business in a town in the West. Things went wrong with him, and eventually he left the town suddenly. His debts, including 2 quarters' rent, amounted altogether to $500. Recently he has returned and not only paid all the money he owed with interest up to date, but he insisted on giving a supper to his creditors.

An equally noble example is furnished in the history of the firm of Messrs. Ickringill. Failing in 1878 for a large sum, the partners were released from all their obligations on payment of a composition of 50 per cent. on the dollar. Since then they have had to overcome many unlooked for difficulties, but, that notwithstanding, they have called their old creditors together, and, at an outlay of over $50 000, have paid the 50 cents owing on every dollar they were indebted.

Such an instance as this deserves to rank as honorable as that of Sir Moses Montefiore, who, it will be remembered, made up for having failed by eventually paying all his creditors, with 5 per cent. interest.

A later instance of honorable generosity is related of a certain well known gentleman. A small company in which he was interested went to the bad, and not satisfied with bearing his own loss, he felt it his duty to pay in full the balance to make up the amount invested by the shareholders.

A pleasant story is on record in connection with a West of England building society, which a few years ago came to grief. The cause of this was the defalcations of an official who had won the unlimited confidence of the whole board of directors. The culprit was taxed with the robbery, and, probably because there was no other way out of the difficulty, admitted his guilt and offered to make restitution, so far as lay in his power. The secretary and the directors, however, were not satisfied with this, and to save the credit of the society, as well as to make it impossible for the shareholders and depositors to suffer, they subscribed between them every shilling of which the society had been robbed.

Another building society official, the secretary this time, acting on a sudden impulse, departed one night with $500 of the society's money. The society's headquarters are in a town on the south coast. Recently the directors have been pleasantly surprised by the receipt of $250, inclosed in a letter. It was from the former secretary, the money being an installment toward making good his defalcations.

A delicate method of making good a failure in early life was that employed by the late Mr. Neville, the great baker. Mr. Neville's first venture in business ended in bankruptcy. Failure made him try harder to succeed, and eventually he became wealthy. Then he invited each of his former creditors to dinner, and under the cover set for each was placed a check for the balance owing, with compound interest up to date.

In 1882 a large firm of merchants failed for a considerable sum. They paid forty cents on the dollar. Recently one of the partners (the one who was perhaps least responsible for the failure) returned from America, and after considerable difficulty succeeding in tracing every creditor, to whom he has paid the balance due. This, in spite of the fact that after so doing he was left with less than £200 with which to start the world anew.

VERY TRUE.

Men who have studied and solved the problem of successful merchandising, who from their knowledge and experience of men and things have formed their convictions and developed their plans, and have had courage to carry them to a successful end—these men, who are acknowledged leaders, have set the pace and mapped out the course to pursue, and that course is bold, honest and true.

But some may say that selling goods on their merits is too old and tame for them; not enough excitement in it. It is certainly a departure from the mark-down methods of these many weary months, a method that has grown hoary and decrepit, and well nigh worn out in the service. It lacks, too, the excitement that false statements usually carry with them—the excitement that fear brings lest the fraud be discovered. But it is a good enough lead to follow just at present.

—From Dry Goods Economist, April 13, 1895.

WE ONLY SELL GOODS ON THEIR MERITS.

SILKS.

Every day our silk business grows. Must have the right sort or they would not sell so well We tell of four lots that will interest you—30 inch Swivel silk, cream, pink and cardinal, price 27c; 50 pieces as many styles of fine wash silk, 39c a yard, well worth 50c; 30 inch wash silk, beautiful effects, 43c—a week ago they sold freely for 60c; 20 inch black Bengaline silk 59c, former price $1.

CAPES.

There will be no doubt in your mind where you will buy that cape. It's see ours and you buy. The price is right and they say that there is a style and fit about our garments that all don't have.

DRESS GOODS.

Take time and see our stock of dress goods. See what others have and then see ours. We know where you will buy.

WASH GOODS.

Never such an assortment under one roof and the smallness of the price is as surpassing as the largeness of the stock.

27 inch crepons, the latest 19c; 30 inch dimities, the latest 9c; Toille du noir dress ginghams 8c; 10c dress ginghams 6c; 30 inch crinkles 7c; 30 inch percales 6c; 32 inch French satine 15c.

UNIVERSAL BEAUTY.

LAZINESS AND POVERTY MEANS NOTHING.

No Excuse Will Be Taken. Custom Now Demands Fat, Smooth Necks and Delicate, Rosy Skins From Every Woman. How to Get Them Without Cost.

There is no excuse in these days for a woman to be ugly—laziness and poverty, the chief factors, are so plainly remediable. It is a broad statement that poverty can be remedied, but there are so many channels now open to woman to make money that she has not the excuse of some twenty years ago that there is no work to be found.

Exercise, good healthy exercise, is intensely swell. Clothing sensibly made—those blessed knickers instead of countless petticoats—known rules of hygiene, which are easily followed; simple styles of dressmaking, which with care and attention, and even a very slight amount of cleverness, can be copied, are just a few of the things which help the much quoted fin de siecle girl to look beautiful even when not blessed at the start of her career with regular features, a pefect figure and a rose leaf complexion.

A fine carriage of the head makes a plain woman effective even in a drawing room of beautiful women. The head thrown back, the chin and shoulders held straight, give an air of distinction, of presence which, alas! English women realize much better than do our own country women.

A few Delsarte or physical culture lessons are well worth the money spent on them, for in the unaided effort to attain the above results sometimes most surprisingly hideous effects are arrived at. Poking the bust forward, resting the chin in the hollow of the throat and walking with shoulders quite square, is simply a caricature of grace and elegance.

Women are not naturally graceful, but they are adaptive. American women especially, and a few lessons in the art of walking, standing and holding themselves properly are all that is necessary.

A perfect neck is not often seen. The shoulders may be well rounded and the skin white and fine, and yet ugly hollows and distinct shadows of the collar bones completely spoil the contour. This can all be remedied and that easily. Let any girl who has such a neck try the effect of gymnastics fifteen minutes every night and morning for a month. The result will surprise her.

The gymnastics consist of pushing the arms straight out in front of the body with a jab for four times, then the same movement with the arms straight up in the air. Then from the side, and finally backward, always with the shoulders thrown back, head erect and chin well in.

The object of these exercises is to develop the muscles of the neck, which, unless a girl has been brought up to all sorts of exercise, particularly rowing and swimming, have never had full play. A month's trial will convince any one of the merits of the prescription. Massage with cocoa butter is a capital thing to make the neck and shoulders fat and smooth, but it is a far more expensive method.

Singing lessons often improve the throat as much as the voice itself, and many women who have no talent for music consider the money they spend for vocal instruction is "well worth it" when they see the change in their appearance.

The arms are a sore trial to many a woman, for a rough, beefy look on the upper arm seems impossible to overcome. Time, patience, a nail brush and massage above all things will remedy this worst of ills, which comes from imperfect circulation in almost all cases. The arms share, of course, in the daily bath, but that part of them does not receive the necessary washing and rubbing, hence, the rough, reddened appearance of the skin.

Massage will work the desired results much more quickly than will anything else, but let the woman who cannot afford massage be her own masseuse for a time and with the aid of bath brush and unscented soap try what she can do. The rough treatment will not harden nor coarsen the skin as might be thought, but, on the contrary, will render it wonderfully smooth and white.—New York Herald.

THE NEWS IN NEW YORK.

Items of Universal Interest Chronicled By the Great Dailies.

Off the Battery at 9 A. M. the battle of tide and blast sent high into the clear sunlit air countless fountains of spray on which the sunshine painted rainbows.

Not a person was arrested in the twenty-four hours beginning at midnight on Wednesday by the Elizabeth street police.

Now the honey man, recently a familiar figure in the German quarter, has turned up on the west side, where his elf like face and confident smile lend a new grace to the region.

The English cook of a well to do lady who lives on the upper west side refuses to drink the tea provided for the household. She buys an article which she says is much better.

Two small, decently clad young men, each with a stick in hand walked rapidly down Madison avenue the other day arm in arm, laughing and talking with much gaye y and good fellowship. Nobody seemed to realize that the men were blind.

The Baptists hereabouts have always claimed that no one ever suffered harm from baptism in the coldest water. In this neighborhood a short time ago, the thick ice upon a pond was broken through and both men and women were plunged into the pond for baptism. And we have heard of no evil results.

William Pfeifer, 17 years old, of No. 546 Tenth avenue, was brought before Justice Simms in the Jefferson Market Court the other morning and committed to Bellevue to have his sanity inquired into. His mother says he thinks he is an actor. There are others.

There is the succulent peanut. Maybe you think it doesn't play a large part on the industrial stage, but if you do, you are mistaken. The yearly production of peanuts in this country is about 88,000,000 pounds, Virginia, Georgia, Tennessee and North Carolina harvesting most in the order named. But, after all, the American crop of peanuts is small compared with that of Africa, which in 1892 shipped 200,000,000 pounds of peanuts to Europe.

While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Cheap Cash Grocery House

Like ours, we are the originators of low prices in groceries throughout the state. Our experience of thirty five years has taught us how to trample down the old fogy system of buying on credit. We buy and sell for cash only, whereby three profits are saved, which others are obliged to pay and the cash buyer pays for the losses of the credit buyer. Our motto is and always will be, Cheap for Cash and One Price to All. We defy any retail grocery house in the city to buy as cheap wholesale as we sell at retail.

INDIAN SIGN TALK.

STICKS AND STONES THAT ARE FULL OF MEANING.

Devices by Which Indians Communicate with One Another. Trees and Twigs Give Them Information and Carry Their Messages.

If Indians were deaf and dumb they could communicate readily by their sign language and make themselves easily understood by signs. The writer had occasion once to hire an Indian guide from the Los Pinos agency in southwestern Colorado to take him to the Salt mountains in northern Arizona. The trip was over one hundred miles through a wilderness. Although the Indian had never been over the trail before he set out with perfect confidence in his ability to lead the way. He had received some general information regarding the mountains and streams and depended entirely upon the signs left by other Indians for the trail. He made no mistake, but reached his destination without for a moment wavering as to the true direction. His feat was the more remarkable from the fact that the trail was crossed by many others and several times forked so as to mislead any one who had no means of knowing the proper direction.

While hunting on the Republican river the writer once came upon a cluster of buffalo skulls peculiarly arranged: Sixteen skulls were set in a semicircle, with their noses pointing down the river. In the center of the circle was a single skull upon which were painted thirty-six red lines. Near the skulls were two small sticks upright in the ground, at the upper end of each of which were tied two small bunches of hair. A Pawnee Indian explained that thirty-six Pawnees had camped there. They had made a raid against a Comanche village of sixteen lodges and had taken four scalps. They were now returning home down the river. The ordinary observer of this arrangement would have supposed that some one had been amusing himself by placing the skulls in that manner.

Indians use signs of this kind for several purposes. The most common is guidance, but they are also used to indicate departure, intention, condition, warning and claim or demand. Once in a hunt with a party of Utes in southern Colorado a rendezvous for meeting was made before separating. On reaching the appointed place it was found that one of the party was not there, but the Indians gave the matter no concern and started back without waiting for their companion. They said he had gone on ahead, and showed a long stick with a bunch of grass on the end. The stick had been stuck in the ground leaning toward the camp. A similar pole had been placed in position on top of every elevation between the rendezvous and the hill from which the camp could be seen.

Probably the most unique use of signs among Indians is the way one Indian duns another for a debt. In such matters an Indian has delicacy that puts to shame the way some civilized people have of hounding a poor debtor. When an Indian thinks the debt has been owed long enough he does not harass his debtor with importunities, but quietly slips to his debtor's teppe by night, and leaves at the door a bundle of sticks. The sticks have rings painted around one end, and are in number equal to the number of articles owed. Sometimes the debtor ignores this gentle hint, and then the creditor waits with patience until some more propitious time, when he again tries the sticks. When the dun is ignored, it is taken for granted that the debtor is not in condition to pay up or he would do so.

The very nature of an Indian's surroundings compels him to be constantly on the lookout for information regarding the country through which he is travelling, and to this end he studies every rock, bush and tree for signs that may enlighten him. If other Indians have gone that way it is always possible that he may find something which they have left that will give him information that may be of value to him. Should he discover something that would interest or instruct his friends, he is sure to leave a bent twig, displaced stone, or tangled bunch of grass to be his silent messenger to those who come after him. Army officers have often received information from their Indian scouts which has seemed marvellous, but had they known that this information had been entirely received by their scouts from other Indians who had passed along ahead of them it would not have seemed so strange.

During Gen. Crook's campaign against the Chiracahua Apaches the writer was with a lieutenant and an Indian scout crossing a ridge on a short trail away from the main body of troops. The scout bent forward in his saddle and examined a little hillock. On it seemed nothing except a few bits of twigs, some tangled grass, and a heap of stone. He said that nine Apaches had gone across the trail and were leading three ponies, which they had stolen. They had raided a Mexican sheep herder's camp and had killed two Mexicans. They stole the ponies from another place and were hurrying to get out of the country before the soldiers came. All this information was conveyed by the arrangement of sticks, grass, and stones which had been placed in positions by the fleeing Indians for the information of their companions who might come over the trail. The scout was thoroughly versed in their signs and told at a glance where the Indians had got their plunder and where they were going with it. The information thus gained led to the capture of these marauders and the recovery of the stolen stock.

Greatest Personage He Knew.

Mrs. Mary A. Livermore is a woman revered alike in her family and neighborhood, yet her greatness does not always appeal to a certain small boy who belongs in the vicinity. He was one day found by his sister swinging on the gate. When she reprimanded him for doing what he was forbidden the irreverent youth remarked:

"I don't care for ma, nor pa, nor you, nor the ox, nor the ass, or anything that's anybody's."

"Oh, Willie!" exclaimed the shocked little girl, "do you know who wrote those words you use so?"

"Don't care," was the reply, "Mrs. Livermore, I s'pose." — Boston Home Journal.

Do You Blame Her.

"I declare that's convenient," remarked the old gentleman as he entered his seat at the theater and hung his hat on the Psyche knot of the young woman in front of him; "guess I'll hang my overcoat on it, too." Oh, but wasn't she mad? —Boston Transcript.

SHE CARRIED THE DOG

The Nerve of a Pretty Girl Overcame the Street Car Conductor.

The New York Sun tells how a Madison avenue car drew up in its own leisurely, unimpassioned manner before the Grand Central depot the other day and came to a full stop. Before long a young girl entered it and seated herself. She was a pretty girl and well dressed and she carried a big valise. From under one arm there peeped the pointed nose and bright eyes of a small terrier. As soon as the conductor noticed the terrier he came forward and said:

"Excuse me, miss, but you'll have to get off. We ain't allowed to carry dogs in this here car."

"But I can't get off," answered the young girl, her blue eyes opening very wide, "for I'm going 'way, way uptown and I've got this heavy valise and the dog both to carry. I just can't get off."

"You can't ride in this car," repeated the conductor, firmly but respectfully. "Leastways not with that there dog. It's against the rules."

"Please show me your rules," said the girl, with a sweet smile.

The conductor hesitated.

"Well, miss; I haven't got the rules with me," he said. "I don't carry them round, you know, but——"

"If you can't show me the rules how am I to know that you're telling me the truth?" exclaimed she of the blue eyes.

"You'll have to get off," repeated the conductor, returning, man like, to his original proposition.

By this time all the other passengers had become interested in the affair. Even the driver thrust his head into the car and abruptly demanded:

"What's up, Bill?"

"This lady here has a dog?" was Bill's reply.

"Dogs ain't allowed in these cars," observed the driver, sententiously.

Meanwhile another car in the rear had been obliged to come to a standstill, and its driver soon leaned forward and shouted:

"Hello, what's the matter there?"

"You'll make me lose my place," said the conductor to the girl.

"I should be very, very sorry for that," she answered, sweetly, "but really you must see that I simply couldn't carry that valise and this dog all the way up town."

The conductor of the rear car now came running up to find out the cause of the delay. This added to the interest of the situation. It was edifying to learn that however long it takes a Madison avenue car to pass a given point there are limits even to its patient procrastination.

"Why don't you move on?" asked conductor No. 2.

Then conductor No. 1 went out on the car platform and told the other conductor all about it. And after a brief confab the other conductor marched boldly into the car as though he were going to pitch the young girl, big valise, small dog and all, right out of the window. But when he saw how pretty she was and observed her quiet, demure manner he for some reason or other beat an abrupt retreat. Then he shook his head solemnly, muttered something in conductor No. 1's ear and finally went back to his own car, whereupon conductor No. 1 rang up for the driver to proceed, and pretty soon the blocked procession of cars was making its way up Madison avenue with all the customary speed.

"You didn't take my fare," remarked the young girl to the conductor as that officer received a nickel from a neighboring passenger a few minutes later.

"I can't take your fare, miss," said the conductor in a more in sorrow than in anger sort of tone.

"Why not?" asked the girl, with her 5 cent piece suspended a la 'Disc Thrower.'

"Because you're breaking the rules. No, miss, your nickel ain't no good to me. You hain't no right to carry no dog in this here car, but if you'll do it, miss, and won't get off, why I can't take your fare. No, nor ring you up, neither."

The girl lowered her blue eyes, snapped her purse together and said nothing. 'Way, 'way up town she arose, small dog, big valise and all, and made for the door.

"Thank you very much," she said to the conductor as she reached the platform. "You've been awfully kind. I'm sorry, though, that you wouldn't take my fare."

And, strange to say, the conductor seized the pretty girl's valise, helped her off the car and smiled all the while just as delightedly as though she hadn't been a wicked, mutinous lawbreaker after all.

Most Absent Minded Man On Record.

Professor Blank, although a very dignified and courtly gentleman, has fits of absent mindedness amounting almost to mental aberration. This failing has placed him in many embarrassing positions. It seemed to the professor and his family that the climax had been reached one evening when the professor after filling his bath tub for a bath plunged in with all his clothes on. But a deeper, because public, mortification soon followed this alarming mental lapse. The professor sometimes speaks in public, and a few days after the bath room episode he was asked to be one of three or four speakers at a public meeting. His brief address was received with great applause, which to the professor's surprise and chagrin was followed by broad grins and even unrepressed tittering on the part of many in the audience. No sooner was the professor out of the house after the meeting than he turned to his wife and asked:

"My dear, what was the occasion of all that smiling and actual giggling after the generous applause that followed my address?"

"Don't you know?" asked his wife, a little sharply. "I never felt so mortified in my life. Why don't you keep your wits about you when you are in public? It was dreadful!"

"Why, Helen, what did I do?"

"Do? You sat up there on that platform before all that great audience and applauded your own speech! That's what you did!"—Harper's Magazine.

A Sharp Detective.

The Marquis of Waterford once showed remarkable detective skill. A robber, who had broken into the Marquis house at Curraghmore, Ireland, was pursued by him and followed into a public house four miles off.

The robber had seated himself among a number of men who were drinking and smoking, and not one of them would betray him. The Marquis, however, was master of the situation. He insisted upon feeling of their hearts, and as he was their landlord and the great man of the county no one dared to refuse. The man whose heart was still beating was the robber, who had just ceased running. Tit-Bits.

LOST IN SLAVERY.

ATTEMPTS OF NEGROES TO FIND LOST RELATIVES.

Parents and Children, Husbands and Wives Torn Asunder at the Auction Blocks Seeking Reunion by Advertising.

One of the most distressing features associated with the system of slavery was the destruction of all home and family ties. Under the slave code the sanctity of the martial relation was not recognized.

Slaves were not expected to marry and give in marriage, in the ordinary sense; they were supposed to take up with one another and to live together as long as their owners found it profitable and convenient to permit such relations to exist. A throw of the dice box, a turn of a card was sufficient to break up a whole plantation of slaves and to scatter families of people all over the South, the parents going in one direction and the children in another, never to meet again, perhaps, until the final judgment.

The children of slave parents always followed the condition of the mother. Under the operations of this law hundreds, yes thousands of, children and adults were sent to the auction block, and from thence to the rice swamps of the Carolinas or the miasmatic death traps of the Mississipi Valley.

The agony which these separations of slaves caused was enough to make demons of a race of angels; the tears which they forced from the eyes of the agonized was sufficient to float a navy. They not only demoralized but brutalized the slave population, and laid broad and deep the foundations of that morality which the Christian and philantrophic people of the North have labored industriously to neutralize and root out during the past 30 years, to which those who are primarily responsible for its existence never tire of pointing as incontrovertible evidence that the Afr -American race is hopelessly degraded, vicious and irreclaimable. But it is true in all ages that as the twig is bent the tree inclines.

One of the most gratifying and surprising phases of the race problem ought to be that instead of persisting in the horrible condition fostered by the slave trade and system, the slave population took steps immediately after the war, when the Freedman's bureau was established under Gen. Oliver O. Howard, to legalize the promiscuous and illicit relations existing between the sexes when emancipation was thrust upon them, and that, 30 years after slavery had been abolished, the marriage institution has obtained as general and firm a footing among the black and colored people as among the whites of the country.

But, as Shakespeare has said: "The evil that men do lives after them; the good is oft interred with their bones." This question of demoralizing relations under the slave system has been kept fresh in my mind by reading for a long series of years the colums of the Christian Recorder, the official organ of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. In the last issue of that paper I found three colums of letters written by persons seeking for information of their lost relatives.

And these will give place, another week to others equally solicitous; and so it will keep on from week to week through the years as it has gone on through all the weeks since the shackels of the slaves were broken into the plough shares and prunning hooks of freedom and opportunity by the pen of Lincoln and the sword of Grant.

Let us examine a few of these inquiries.

Minder Latson of Brenham, Tex., wants information of Jennie, Moses, Mela Selina, James and Felix Fields. The first three are his sisters, the fourth his brother and the fifth his step father. "They all belonged to Charles Baren," he says. "My sister Jennie and myself were sold to Jack Felder; my sister Jennie was sold again to Buchanan.

Pleasant Beale of Paragoula, Green county, Ark., writes: "I want information of my father, mother, brother and uncle. My father's name was Carlisle Slater; my mother's name was Nancy Slater; my brother's name was Peter Slater; my uncle's name was Moses Slater. We all lived on Main street, Richmond, Va. My uncle had a caste in his eye. My father was very bright with blonde hair. My mother was dark; my sister was dark; my uncle was dark. I was separated from them just before the war and sold to a man named John A. Beale in Alabama; so my name was Pleasant Slater until I was sold, and now I go by the name of Beale."

Joseph Green of Fifth avenue, Chicago, says: "I want to find my brother, James Green. I left him in Washington after the rebellion. We went through the war together. Our home was in Richmond. Had two brothers, John and William, and two sisters, Sarah and Diana. My father's name is Joseph Green. Any information of the whereabouts of any of my relatives will be thankfully received."

Mrs. Fanny Robinson of Bainbridge street, Philadelphia, wants information of her mother, Lucinda Hackett, wife of Lloyd Hackett, who lived in Prince George county, Md., near Laurel Mills. There were two brothers, George and Greenberry, and three sisters, Annie, Caroline and Emily Hackett. "Have not seen them for near forty-four years."

Joseph Peco, whose original name was Alonzo Canady, left the eastern shore of Maryland in 1839, and went to Labasta, Bucks county, Pa., and now he is trying to find Stephen Canady, whom he left behind when he ran away. They belonged to Mrs. Clara P. Parnell. He will hardly find his brother after the lapse of 56 years, but the fact that he is striving to do so is a striking evidence of the love he bears his brother.

Examples should be multiplied, but they are all of the same tenor, a long wail for lost ones seen for the last time at the auction block or flying toward the North star in the dark days from which the clouds has forever lifted, and a hope against hope that they may be recovered. The institution of slavery has past away, but many of the wounds it inflicted can never be healed.

THE RETIRED BURGLAR.

One of the Most Remarkable Incidents in His Variegated Career.

"After I had gathered in what I could find in the dining room," said the retired burglar, telling of his experience in a house in Western Massachusetts, "I started for the parlor. This parlor was just in front of the dining room and there were heavy curtains between. I pushed these curtains one side and went in carefully, so as not to mar the furniture by kicking it, feeling along for the table which I knew must be in the center. I came to it presently, and found it very solid feeling with a sort of molding or carving along the edge. I had struck it on a side, apparently, and so I felt toward the dining room until I came to a corner of the table, and then I felt along the end for the next corner to get the dimensions of it. I struck the other corner so quick that it made my hair raise right up; I knew there was only one thing they build of such shape and that's a coffin.

"I turned my light on it, and it was a big oak casket, one of the kind they make now days, square and solid, and it had three silver handles on each side. I didn't dare look in, but I felt as though I ought to have them handles. I got the handle off by the head on that side and then I went at the one in the middle. In turning the last screw out of the handle I dropped my screwdriver.

"It seemed to me as though it made more noise than an iron telegraph pole dropping inside of an empty iron oil tank. I just lay down and waited. I didn't dare run. I expected a million people would come pouring down the stairs and from all around, and I just waited, lying on the floor, but there didn't anybody come. You know, the fact was that dropping that screwdriver hadn't made noise enough to wake up a mouse; but it seemed to me like the greatest racket you ever heard, and it scared me most to death. But when nobody came I picked up the screwdriver and set it in the notch in the screw again, and I'd just got that handle off when I heard somebody say:

"'Don't you think you're crowdin' us here a little, my friend, carrying away them handles?' It was the dead man sitting up and looking down at me. I suppose he'd been in an epileptic trance or something of that sort, and dropping that screwdriver had made just shock enough to start him into life again.

"I was so scared I dropped the handle, but I grabbed my bag—I suppose instinct made me do that—and started out through the dining room again and down cellar, and out by the window I came in by. I didn't wait to see if anybody was coming this time.

"I got $117 for those five handles. It seemed a pity to lose the other one, but it was always a great satisfaction to me to think that I'd woke the man up."

DANCED WITH A KING.

Two Little Americans at the Court of Christian IX.

Virginia Yeaman Yemnitz, in St. Nicholas, tells a true story of the adventures of two young Americans at the court of the King of Denmark. They were children of the American Minister and had been invited to a children's party at the palace. Here is what followed:

It was to Ellen a never to be forgotten night. The crowds of happy children; the great room, brilliantly lighted; the strains of music; the presence of a real king and queen—all combined to make the scene a fairyland, wherein events took place which made Ellen feel herself a sort of fairy queen.

The king opened the ball with little Ellen. Hardly understanding the honor, some sense of it nevertheless thrilled her childish heart. She could not even see his face, so tall was he, but his strong arms bore her around and around, she knew not how, for Ellen danced with as little precision and method as the leaves on a tree or the ripples in a lake. Yet all through her being she felt that she was dancing with the king. It seemed but fitting, after that dance, to find herself seated on the sofa between the king and queen. With royal disregard to the claims of other small guests, and with royal indifference to the effect upon little Ellen, they lifted her up between them. She looked pretty, natural and unconscious and was herself a little queen in all her ways! While Ellen sat there, too happy and pleased to feel proud, the other children danced on. With no thought of imitating their elders in manner or motion, the young dancers abandoned themselves with childish freedom and simplicity to the enjoyment of the hour. Those who never had been trained in the different steps adapted their movements to the promptings of happy hearts and light feet and were as contented as the others. And little Ellen rested comfortably between the king and queen until she was ready to dance again.

The evening wore on and Ellen was overcome with weariness and sleep. Slipping away from the children, who were now whirling around in some dizzy game, she threw herself on a couch. Just as the scene grew misty to her eyes and the dazzling events of the evening began to weave themselves into the suggestion of a dream she was aroused by some one asking, "Where did you get your pretty pink slippers, Ellen?" and she opened her eyes. Why was the king sitting beside her and talking to her when she was so sleepy? She had a confused idea that he ought to put on his crown and sit on a throne.

"Please, Mr. King, don't bover me; I'm so sleepy," and Ellen, turning her face on royalty, slipped away to her pleasing dreams.

"Little Ellen, Little Ellen," said the king musingly, "it is not often that I hear the truth so plainly told and it is refreshing to my ears."

The Congregation Inferred.

When the bellows gave out and the organist in a Rockland church was unable to get anything but a few groans from the instrument and the pastor remarked, "The organ has failed us at a vital moment; let us rise and sing 'Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow,'" some of the people wondered just what he meant.—Lewiston Evening Journal.

A Sufficient Reason.

"He was until they changed books at the school his children attend.—Truth.

A DARK NIGHT

By SARAH ORNE JEWETT

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

CHAPTER III.

Weymouth now bethought himself of his two sleeping companions, and especially of the mysterious occupant of the curtained bed. He leaned over and took the bottle from the hearth and pretended to take a long drink. He saw the curtains move again and felt that there were eyes behind them.

The house was very still, there was a dull droning of wind in the chimney. Weymouth smacked his lips and whistled another bar of his tune.

"I'll soon see who you are lying there ready to rob me, or to open the door to those who will," he said under his breath as he reached for the guttering candle that stood on the mantel shelf. With the bottle still in his other hand he went to Rogers and tried to wake him, insisting that they must soon be starting, and loudly offering the encouragement of more drink or more pay, as if he were possessed by a besotted man's generosity. Rogers was in a stupor, not asleep, and presently Weymouth crossed the room to the other bed; but one thing meanwhile had been made plain. The candle had shone into the dark corner of the ceiling and revealed what his eyes had anxiously sought for as he sat waiting with forced patience by the fire. A wide board had been nailed from one heavy beam to another of the ceiling, making a shelf into which something was crowded that drooped over the edge in unmistakable folds; to make sure he reached to touch it and his hand was entangled among the cords of a new net.

There was only one thing to do; a man did not wish to frighten an old deaf and crippled body, but a careful look would do no harm, and, though his heart thumped for the first time, he threw open the curtains. There was only a decent old cap with white borders, and a face turned away into the pillows. For an instant he looked down compassionately and with a sense of relief, the next instant he saw at the foot of the bed among the bedclothes, which were strangely disarranged, the large muddy riding boots of a man. "Poor old granny!" he laughed aloud, as if he were unconscious of being besieged, and were growing more foolish and comfortable every moment with his drink. "A little grog wont do 'ee no harm. I'll rouse the old mother an' give her a taste o' gin. She looks a bit blue and cold. Too old anyway to be on the road such weather." He brought the bottle hastily from beside Rogers, and bent down close to the cap. "Rise up now, granny, an' take a taste!" he counseled her, persuasively. "'Twill warm 'ee, dear."

GOT OUT OF THE WINDOW AND LET HIMSELF DOWN.

There was a moment of hesitation, and Weymouth lifted the becapped head and held the bottle to the lips. The attack was too sudden and unexpected; the watcher was, for some reason, not ready to declare himself or to provoke an open quarrel; the light was dim, and with much choking and spilling the liquor went down an unwilling throat.

As the peaceful figure with its grandmotherly cap recognized the bitter dram and rose with fury, a straight blow from Weymouth's fist and two or three more that followed, laid the disarranged headgear back among the pillows, and stunned its wearer into harmlessness. Then Weymouth pulled the net from its shelf, after dropping the bottle as if it had fallen from a tipsy man's hand, and, catching the stout tongs from the fireplace, he hurried to the window and opened it softly. It looked far to the ground, but he hastily pushed out the loose armfuls of the net and heard them drop softly, then, fastening a stout twist of the end about the bars of the tongs and bracing them across the corner, he got out of the window, let himself down, let go the window-sill, and lowered away down by stretching loops and tangles, bumping and swinging like a pendulum against the stone walls until he came to the ground.

It was a breathless beginning of a most uncertain journey, yet while Weymouth sat for a moment on the narrow ledge of rocky ground the freedom and freshness of the winter night seemed sweet enough, after the damp and chill of the room he had left. Such is human nature, the alternate prey of fear and careless pleasure.

Weymouth could hear no footsteps, he could see but dimly the steep road above at his right; below, the hill was steeper still, and looked perilous as he started to find his way down. Even a man who is bold at heart feels all the instincts of stealthiness when he is a hunted man, the prey instead of the pursuer. At this instant there came a faint sound from the roadway close by. There was something moving. There was the least sound like a hiss, and then one pebble was tapped against another as he still crept downward. His heart seemed to stop—a gust of wind caught the light net and swished it to and fro against the house. He flattened himself against the ground and clutched the sod with his fingers, then he dropped one foot slowly over the edge to find the shelf below. The burden of the wallet hindered him so that he longed to get rid of it. Suddenly he heard an eager whisper:

"This way! Come this way! Weymouth!"

The dim shape showed itself plainer now above him. A woman knelt at the wall above, reaching down to give him a hand whose touch he well knew. He quickly found his footing now and was helped up the steep scramble and stood with her in the road.

"Come, come," she urged in a whisper, "they will be keen after us! 'tis for your life!"

She started off instantly down the hill toward the water and he followed. They were running on turf, not gravel, and made no sound. As he ran by her side she pushed him back impatiently. "Keep away, don't come near!" she said. "Hurry, for Heaven's sake!"

As they reached the low ground the light figure that flitted before Weymouth led him into a path that ran low down on the landward side of the dyke, which must have been made partly by cattle and partly by men who shielded themselves from the fierce north winds of winter which blew across the water. Two figures could easily have been seen in the smooth path that ran along the dyke top, but here they were sheltered and the silent guide took a slower pace as they passed some thickets of osiers. Once she stopped and motioned to him and crept up the dyke side. Weymouth followed, and they saw that they were nearly abreast of the fishing smack or smuggler if such she were. There was a boat just leaving her, a lantern was held for an instant over the side and then was hidden again. Weymouth looked back at the house on the height; they were now perhaps half a mile away. There were no lights in the windows, even in that which he had left, but by this time the wretched guttering candle would have melted and sucked itself into extinction. Without a word they both stepped back to the path again, and ran on until the leader turned from the dyke across a wide ditch which was bridged by some unsteady planks. The meadow was wet under foot, they lost and found again a narrow causeway that led among the upland fields and presently stopped to take breath beside an overgrown hedge.

"Be still," said the woman, anxiously, for Weymouth forgot everything except that they were lovers. "Speak soft!" and she moved away a little, but still left her hand in his. "A voice carries far in this mist; we are not out of danger yet."

She was panting for breath; they had come nearly a mile at a fine, steady pace for the most part. There was a singing in Weymouth's ears as he shifted the strap of his pouch to the other shoulder; to see her again was worth whatever might befall.

"'Twas a hard day's ride," he said, boyishly, "and here I'm on the road again."

"'Tis a mercy, then!" said the woman, roughly, but the mother that is in every wife has mercy for the boy that is in every husband, and she and Weymouth were lovers, and so she began to pity him.

"I brought a bit of bread and cheese, dear, here in my apron," she said. "I almost forgot it, but don't stop to eat it now. 'Twas poor housing for you, God pity me!"

He had left her stern and cold two days before, and the wistful love she now betrayed was more to Weymouth than any danger, past, present or to come. It must be that she had forgotten her unkind decision, but at the first word of an eager question she left his side and hurried up the long slope. The heavy leather pouch chafed and lamed its carrier's side, but, worse than that, unhappy forebodings took the spirit out of his heart. The whole adventure seemed unreal, danger and assistance were both alike strange events, a play which developed itself before his eyes. Weymouth was light-headed for the moment, and neither his own safety nor the gold's appeared to be important, while the whole happiness of his life was at stake.

A mile or two away the old inn stood up against the dark sky like a dismal prison. There were lights about it now, as if there some stir and excitement. The escaped man drew a long breath and hastened forward to overtake his companion.

"What shall I do?" he asked. "I have no horse, and I must reach Bristol by dawn. I have spent my life with horses, but this one was like a brother. Well, I must leave him to their mercy. We should have been in Bristol now, for the sailing of a ship."

"You were led astray," said she, speaking over her shoulder as he walked close behind.

"By whom, then?"

"By Rogers; they have trusted too long at the bank; he has been waiting his chance, and has been in league with—with these people," she faltered. "Let us make haste."

"I thought you meant to hail the vessel," said Weymouth. "They could have set round into Bristol."

"Do you not see that the wind has fallen?" answered his companion. "Folks have been dropped overboard from that craft before now. The Severn is deep and wide enough to hide many a man with a stone fast to his neck."

Again they walked on for some time without speaking, but at the foot of a long ridge of land with a hedge at the top, she stopped once more and whispered in his ear.

"We must do something bold now," she said: "that is the road above us."

Weymouth stood like a soldier waiting for his orders.

"There is an inn close by us at the path's end. 'Tis no palace, yet not a den of thieves like that," and she pointed back to the shore. "To let you escape may bring down the law on their heads. If they have not sent some one here already, they will do it soon. They will not let you get away so easily," she said, faltering again. "No one has escaped them yet who could tell tales," and she sobbed in spite of herself and let him take her into his arms. Her strength had broken at last. "Promise me something," she said, and he promised in love and pity.

"It is my shame and doom," she said, when she could speak. "I cannot marry an honest man. They are my own people, my nearest kin, these murderers and thieves. But they are going to America, their passage is already taken. Next week all will be at an end. Let them go free; they took me an orphan and bred me up kindly. 'Tis as good as any banishment. I have promised to go with them; it is my only hope and prayer to help them save their souls by honest living in a new country."

She was wild and piteous now with her kisses and entreaties. "Oh, my man, I cannot be your shame!" she cried like one whose nerves were ailing and whose distress was more than could be borne. "You do not know—you do not know; 'twas worse with them while I had gone away!"

"Then I must follow you," said the troubled man, trying to comfort her. "You are more than ever the wife for me."

Her face shone in the dark with whiteness; she stood before him and pushing him back with a firm hand her manner wholly changed.

"Listen to me"—she stopped a moment while they both heard a horse's tread coming along the highway. "Whatever horse that may be, if the rider stops at the inn you must be ready to take it and ride on."

She rapidly told him to find his way where the road divided just beyond, and they hurried together up the last steep rise of ground. The horse was coming at a galop.

"Good heavens! I believe it's my own," said Weymouth, ready to rush out in the middle of the road. The low building of the inn was opposite and there were lights in the window. They stood under the eaves of a bushy hedge as the rider came up and, stopping his horse, gave a call. The quick-witted woman pushed Weymouth under the ivy tod and ran out and caught the bridle.

"He came by the fields! Look in the inn kitchen!" she said aloud, triumphantly.

"I'll mind your horse. Quick now!" she insisted, and the rider leaped to ground, pleased at an ally, and had hardly opened the inn door when Weymouth, safe in his own saddle, rode away free as a bird down the Bristol road.

THE SUN'S FASHIONS.

FASHIONS FOR ELDERS COPIED FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

Great Variety of Styles. Fascinating Simplicity and Delicate Colors the Rule. Attractive Materials Used in Making Up Dainty Dresses.

Children's modes have become a matter of growing importance in the world of fashion, since they have risen to the dignity of having spring and fall openings devoted exclusively to the needs and fancies of the little ones. The problem of how they shall be clothed is easily solved when everything they can need or desire is so attractively displayed for inspection, and at reasonable prices.

Although their fashions do not change with the erratic rapidity of those of their elders, each season brings its own special changes, which usually follow in a very modified form the reigning styles of the day; and small girls of the modern type are persistent about being up to date in all the details of dress.

Serges, cashmere and checked and mixed wool goods are the materials most employed for thick dresses for school and every day wear, while crepons, crepe de chine and dainty striped and chine patterned silks are made up into more dressy gowns. The blouse waist, in varying degrees of fullness is the prevailing style of bodice, and for growing girls it is a great improvement on a close fitting waist.

A pretty brown dress of wool crepon for a girl of twelve years has a plain skirt, slightly gored, and a blouse waist, which opens in front over a vest of white lawn, trimmed with lengthwise rows of narrow cream lace fulled on at intervals of two inches, and a white lawn neck band and a wide double sailor collar of brown, piped on the edge with brown velvet. This material also forms the belt.

Box plaits are echoed again and again in these waists and are made very effective in dark colored serges by using bright plaid silk for the front of the bodice and the back, too, if desired, and putting on three plaits of serge, so that the plaid shows between. There are all sorts of sailor costumes in dark blue serge, colored linens and pique, and one of the novelties in trimming for the serge gowns is a wide, adjustable sailor collar and vest of dark tan linen canvas. It is a simple matter to take it off to be laundried and by making these collars of several different colors there is the effect of a new suit with each change.

Crepons in soft art shades are made up quite plain with satin ribbon and a little lace or mull embroidery for trimming at the neck. Silk gowns of chine taffeta, for girls of ten or twelve years, are made without lining in the skirt, which is plainly hemmed, and with a full blouse waist either high in the neck with a wide lawn collar trimmed with insertion and narrow lace, or cut round, but not low, to show a yoke of sheer muslin finely tucked. The sleeves have full puff to the elbow, where they are finished with a frill of lace or embroidery or left quite plain, fulled with an invisible band.—New York Sun.

RED MEN'S VISITATION.

Plainfield Braves Attend Festivities in Bayonne Wigwam.

A number of Red Men from the two lodges in this city visited Pamrapo lodge at Bayonne, last night, the occasion being the visitation of fifty-eight members of Hiawatha tribe, No. 33, of Philadelphia, who came to pay their thanks to the Bayonnettes who had cared for their fellow member Engineer Harry Oreall, who was injured in the Blue Line wreck of March 1.

Their testimonials took the form of the presentation of a handsome frame case, the inside upper corners of which were embroidered with the silken figures, 187-33, the numbers of the tribes. Underneath were two arrows pointing towards the centre, running from which was a silver cord in a semi-circle. On the centre of the cord was a knife broken in two, as though reft in the attempt to cut the silken cord. The testimonial was received by Sachem Spofford of Bayonne, who made an appropriate response. Chief of Records William Newcorn of this city also made remarks, congratulating the two tribes on the fraternal feeling exhibited towards each other, and the significance of such action. Great Representative Norman C. Mague also made a short address. In addition Chas. Ulrich and J. A. Karet were present from this city.

Mr. Durand Replies.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—In answer to the "Warning" in Friday's Press, what is the difference between not prosecuting a man for the sake of his family, and persecuting him in another way by publishing such warning after a lapse of three months with the full intention of depriving the same man out of his present position, thereby taking away the man's opportunities to earn a living for his wife and family? To say if others trust him they must do so on their own responsibility, is only a frail excuse to publish the warning, the full meaning being to drive the man out of the town, and not be in opposition to their business, they not making a success, while the man is.

Being the party alluded to, allow me to state to the public of Plainfield that Mr. Tway told me personally I would not be allowed to be in opposition to him in this town. Unfortunately I could not get anything else, and wrote informing him so, and explaining my position. I therefore commenced with a new firm, and those are the tactics he now employs to drive me away and injure me. And his great concern for my family. I am not interfering with his business in any manner, and will not, but I will make a living for my family wherever I can. There is room enough for all, but in Mr. Tway's opinion there is no room for me where he is.

I confess I am not what I ought to be; I wish I were better; but Mr. Tway, who calls himself a Christian Baptist, ought to show a better example than employ persecution in his business methods.

F. DURAND.

Pythian Progress.

The removal of the meeting rooms of Unity Lodge, Knights of Pythias, into the Babcock Building, seems to have caused more of an interest among the members, as evidenced in increased attendance. At the meeting last night the following officers were elected:

Master of Arms—Mr. Mallard; Master of Work—Joseph Sheppard; Outer Guard—Frank Putnam.

The installation was conducted by District Deputy Grand Chancellor James Patterson, assisted by George Clark of Perseverance Lodge.

Helping a Worthy Success.

Owing to the frequent publications in The Daily Press, directing attention to the needs of the absolutely free Scotch Plains Public Library, many Plainfield citizens are taking a missionary interest in that worthy institution, and it is reported that a Plainfield woman will soon transport a very beautiful collection of butterflies to Scotch Plains and give a talk for the benefit of the library as to the pleasures of making such a collection.

Good Citizens, Attend!

Every citizen interested in the building ordinance now before the Common Council should attend the meeting in the Board of Trade parlors tonight at 8, to hear the report of the committee, who have gone carefully over each section of the ordinance with the builders and architects of this city and will report such changes as they consider necessary to remove its objectionable features.

Do You Know David?

The educational value which attaches to such recitals as are now being given under the auspices of the young Daughters of the King of Washington Park, cannot be overestimated.

The Public Library of Cincinnati carries 25 sets of Dickens, and on the day following Mr. Underhill's rendering of "David Copperfield" in that city many inquires were received after every copy of the book had been withdrawn, and some were glad to take the second volume rather than go away empty-handed.

"David Copperfield" will be the programme for next Monday evening in the Casino.

Sarah Got Into the Medicine Chest.

Sarah Bitter, a woman about 40 years of age, helped to move a family on Putnam avenue yesterday. After darkness she commenced to imbibe some of the spirits the family keep for medicinal purposes. By 10 o'clock she was hilarious. Then the head of the house sent for a policeman. Policeman Mattox went to the residence and conveyed the woman, with her bag and baggage, to the police station. Before Judge Codington this morning she was fined $3, which she paid. Sarah said she did not like Plainfield society and was going to return to New York, from whence she came.

Plucky Stop of a Runaway.

While a man named Ayres was driving along South Second street near the Potter Press Works, yesterday, a wheel came off the vehicle. This tipped the driver out, and frightened the horse so that he started on a run; but Ayres firmly held fast to the reins and was dragged over 800 feet. James Kenney, delivery man for Westphal & Soo, who was near at hand, rushed out into the road and succeeded in stopping the runaway. Ayres was but little injured.

A Plainfield Genius.

The New York Morning Journal says: "Bret Harte's eldest daughter, Jessamy, is one of New York's promising young artists, and has already done some highly commendable work with her brush. George Wharton Edwards, under whom she has studied to a certain extent, declares she has the genius that will some day make her name world-famous. It is Miss Harte's intention to spend next season studying in Paris."

At Work, If He Is Laid Up.

Street Commissioner Meeker is a very busy man, notwithstanding the fact that he is confined to his room with a bad sprain of the left ankle. A constant stream of city officials with maps, letters and documents, are coming and going, and his work as Street Commissioner thus goes on like Tennyson's brook.

Our better halves say they could not keep house without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is used in more than half the homes in Leeds, Sims Bros., Leeds, Iowa. This shows the esteem in which that remedy is held where it has been sold for years and is well known. Mothers have learned that there is nothing so good for colds, croup and whooping cough, that it cures these ailments quickly and permanently, and that it is pleasant and safe for children to take. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. HYMENEAL.

Vernon-Jacques.

Miss Catherine Dorathea Jacques, recently of Washington avenue, daughter of the late Rev. P. L. Jacques, was married to Richard B. Vernon, Tuesday afternoon, in Grace Church, New York. Rev. Dr. W. R. Huntington and Rev. Harold Arrowsmith, of Bergen Point, were the officiating clergymen. The best man was Miles Vernon, brother of the groom. The ushers were Messrs. F. L. White and Herbert C. Mitchill. There were no bridemaids. The bride was given away by a friend of her family, J. L. Chapin.

Reagan-Reagan.

A very pretty wedding took place in St. Joseph's Church last night at 5:30, when Michael J. Regan and Mary Regan were joined in the holy bonds of wedlock by Father Miller. At the conclusion of the marriage service, the couple were driven to their home, corner of West Fourth street and Lee place. Dennis Reagan was best man, and Ellen Reagan bridemaid. The bride wore a brown dress, and carried white roses. Dancing and refreshments were enjoyed by the invited guests. Among the gifts were a bedroom suit from the groom's brother Cornelius, and a gold watch from the bridemaid to the bride.

Graceley—Fitzgerald.

The marriage of J. H. Graceley and Miss Nellie Fitzgerald, both of this city, was performed by Father Murphy in St. Mary's Church last night at 5:30. The best man was Samuel H. Goff and the bridemaid Miss Henretti Elizabeth Goff. After the ceremony the couple were driven to their new home on Spooner avenue, which Mr. Graceley has substantially furnished. There a reception took place, and supper was served, attended by intimate friends of the happy pair. The groom is an employe of John Goff, corner of West Third and Liberty streets.

Hodgetts—Thomson.

The marriage of John R. Hodgetts of this city to Miss Amanda L. Thomson of Brooklyn took place yesterday afternoon at 5:30 at the home of the bride's parents at 325 Carroll street in the City of Churches. At 8:30 a reception was held in Lima Hall on Atlantic avenue. Later on the couple left for a bridal trip to Boston, and on their return will take up their residence in this city on West Second street. The groom is a popular salesman for Harry Werner.

Israel J. Coon of Stirling, was married to Miss Mary Coddington of North Plainfield, April 17, by Rev. C. S. Eyman, Presiding Elder of the Elizabeth District. After the marriage service at Westfield, the party left on the B. and O. Railroad for a four-weeks trip to St. Louis, expecting to visit Washington, Cincinnatti and various other places on their route.

No License for a Week.

The Union County Court of Common Pleas, which grants tavern and hotel licenses throughout the county outside of Elizabeth, Rahway and Plainfield, will not meet this year until May 7, and consequently in all cases where yearly licenses expire May 1, the owners of the places will have to close up until the court meets. This same condition of things happened eleven years ago, and then the Court decided the question in favor of the unlicensed places being shut. The court meets the first Tuesday of May, which last year fell on May 1, but this year on May 7. The temperance crusaders are, therefore, going to watch the hotels and taverns whose licenses expire April 30.

PRESIDENT YOUNG SAYS IT'S NOT SO

Denies the Plan to Connect Philadelphia and New York by Trolley.

At the office of General Manager David Young of the Consolidated Traction Company, in Jersey City, it was denied yesterday that any combination has been formed with the so-called Jos. H. Reall interests for the construction of trolley lines to connect New York and Philadelphia. It was admitted that Mr. Reall claims to have secured franchises and the right of way, but it was also asserted that there was at least reasonable doubt of the proposed trunk line ever being actually constructed. Mr. Young's associates seemed to think that a trolley line of the kind could never be made to pay more than bare operating expenses.

President E. F. C. Young, of the Consolidated Traction Company, when shown the telegram from New Brunswick, said: "The story is absolute nonsense. There it no truth in it. I was with Messrs. Widener and Elkins today and know that neither of them is interested in any such project as a trolley line from Philadelphia to New York. The thing is nonsensical."

Elkins and Widener are wealthy Philadelphians and were asserted to be interested in the proposed $10,000,000 trolley scheme. B. M. Shanley, of Newark, who was also made to figure in the story, is in Washington, D. C., and could not be seen.

Wonders Where the Screw Is Loose.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—It seems to me that drunkenness is on the increase in our city, especially on Sundays. Nearly every week our courts are called on to try men for drunkenness and loaferism on Sunday. The question is, Where do they get their liquor? Certainly our drug stores ought not to furnish it, and the licensed saloons or botting established shops ought not to do it, as they were represented by their petitioners as good citizens. But how do these fellows get their liquor? Is there not a screw or tap loose somewhere? Last Sunday I met three men, strangers, in front of Reform Hall, two of them especially were so drunk that they could scarcely find their way to the station. They seemed to have come from the boulevard. They ought to be all good people down there. It has been hinted that there is a Seventh Day Catholic residing in that neighborhood that claims a right to keep open on Sundays. If so, he must be a peculiarly made up man religiously. It might be well for the police to look after the case. It may be all right. Sabbatarians are not often engaged in that business. It possibly may be that some saloonkeeper's back door swings the wrong way on Sundays. The police ought to be smart enough to find out where the screw is loose. Possibly there is a straw or quill in a barrel somewhere. Possibly some of our water pipes leak somewhere. They should be watched a little, lest we get flooded, especially Sunday nights after meetings. QUERIST.

CROWELL GETS IT.

The ex-County-Clerk Appointed Deputy Revenue Collector.

Ex-County-Clerk John L. Crowell of Union County was yesterday appointed by Internal Revenue Collector James F. Connelly deputy revenue collector for the district that embraces Union County and all that part of Middlesex County lying north of the Raritan river, and which includes Amboy and Woodbridge. Mr. Crowell, who lives in Rahway, will at once assume the duties of the office.

There has been a lively contest raging for the place for several months, there being a dozen aspirants. The struggle, it was thought, had narrowed down to Jas. J. Brennan and Frank Sayre, both of Elizabeth. Mr. Crowell, who all along was a dark horse, walks off with the plum.

A Tandem Trip.

Walter B. Rittenhouse of East Sixth street and his college chum Robert Hondloser, both students at Stevens Institute, arrived here yesterday afternoon after a tandem ride from Harlem. Although the riding season has scarcely commenced, the young men made very good time, riding from Westfield to Plainfield in 10½ minutes. Today they leave for Morris Plains, where they will visit relatives of Mr. Rittenhouse. Robert Hondloser is the son of Mr. Hondloser of New York, superintendent of the Wolfe American Bicycle Works.

—At the High School fire drill this morning the entire school passed out of the building in one minute and fifty-one seconds.

—John Rafferty, driving a horse and buggy, met with an accident this morning. When near Front and Somerset streets the horse became frightened as a car turned the corner, and plunged to one side, smashing one of the front wheels. There was no other damage.

I recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm for rheumatism, lame back, sprains and swellings. There is no better liniment made. I have sold over 100 bottles of it this year and all were pleased who used it. J. F. Pierson, druggist, South Chicago, Ill. It is for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

EVENTS ARRANGED.

Crescent Wheelmen Planning for Decoration Day.

The meeting of the Board of Governors of the Crescent Wheelmen last night was an important one, in the fact that the events of the Decoration Day meet were arranged, as follows:

First race—1 mile novice, Class A; second—½ mile scratch, Class A; third—½-mile scratch, Class B; fourth—1-mile handicap, Class A; fifth—1-mile scratch, Class B; sixth—2-mile handicap, Class A; seventh—1-mile handicap, Class B.

After considerable discussion it was decided to limit the distance of any race to two miles on account of the earliness of the season. Few riders will have experienced sufficient hard training by the time of the meet to undergo races of much more than that distance and make any sort of fast time. So rather than to have any events that would be liable to make slow time and a corresponding lack of interest among the wheelmen, it was the conclusion of the Board to make the two-mile handicap the limit in distance.

The appointment and arrangement of the committees to attend to the advertising, stages, programmes, etc., was left with President W. H. Rogers. Mr. Rogers this morning made the following appointments for chairmanships: Advertising—George Taggart; Reception—Frank L. C. Martin; Stages—Capt. J. A. Haines; Tickets—H. H. Coward; Grand stand—T. J. Carey.

C. E. Teel, chairman of the racing committee, has charge of the entry blanks, and in a few days they will be sent throughout the country to bicycle racers and manufacturers.

J. C. Marshall of Metuchen was elected an active member.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me. He procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

SPARKS WILL GET WELL.

His Attempt at Suicide Will Have No Fatal Results.

Peter Sparks, the old man who attempted to commit suicide in his room in Morse's row, West Fourth street, yesterday afternoon, as was told exclusively in The Daily Press of yesterday, will recover from the wounds which he inflicted on himself. Besides cutting his throat he gashed his left leg just under the knee, but neither wound was serious enough to prove fatal. Sparks lost his wife some time ago and from that time has lived alone, doing his own cooking and housekeeping. Since then he has become gradually despondent. Yesterday morning at 11 he told Mrs. Kane, who resides next door, that he was going to cut his throat, but she paid but little attention to his threatenings.

According to his story he did the deed a half hour after that, and lay on the floor from that time up to 2:20 when he was found. The razor was found on the bureau covered with blood, and is now in possession of Chief Grant. Drs. Simpson and Murray attended Sparks at the hospital and took a few stitches in the cut in his throat. At one time Sparks was a workman for E. C. Woltmann. He is 69 years of age.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, Druggist, Beaverville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at L. W. Randolph's drug store.

OUR WARSHIPS AT KIEL

Uncle Sam May Surprise the Foreigners.

To Be Represented by the Finest Fleet That Has Visited European Waters Since the Civil War—A Compliment to the Emperor of Germany.

Washington, April 18.—The United States is to be represented at the Kiel celebration on June 19 by the finest American fleet that has visited European waters since the civil war, headed by the armored cruiser New York as flagship and the triple screw flyer Columbia, which will be detached for this purpose from Admiral Meade's fleet when it arrives at Key West next month, with the addition of the San Francisco and Marblehead, now in the Levant for the protection of American interests. Admiral Kirkland, now in charge of the European station, will command the squadron. The fleet will undoubtedly impress European nations with the remarkable progress made in rebuilding the American navy.

Excels All Other Vessels.

The New York has no superior for offensive and defensive purposes combined with speed among the fleets of any nation and the Columbia excels all vessels, except her sister ship the Minneapolis, in speed and staying power. There will be greater battle ships than those possessed by this country at the celebration, but their efficiency on the high seas is declared to be problematical. The Minneapolis will be fitted up at Norfolk as the flagship of Admiral Meade during the absence of the New York in Europe which is expected to be but temporary.

Compliment to the Kaiser.

Considerable political significance is attached to the order sending the New York and Columbia to the North sea and through the canal into the Baltic where the last American war ship appeared on a mission of mercy carrying corn generously contributed in the United States for the starving peasants of Russia. Extremely unusual are the visits of American war ships to German ports and the Scandinavian coast, and heretofore the Baltic has been practically a sealed sea to them. The compliment paid to the German emperor by sending such a magnificent representation and the display of the American flag to other nations where it is seldom seen are expected to be productive of increased amicable relations.

No Danger of Trouble.

The detachment of these two effective vessels, the New York and Columbia, from the home squadron at this juncture is taken as an additional indication of the confidence of the administration that the United States is in no danger of being involved in any trouble over the affairs of American republics and that the Cuban and Nicaraguan disturbances will be settled without our intervention except by diplomatic representations. The specific purpose of the fleet under Admiral Kirkland is declared to be similar to that which led to Admiral Meade's West Indian and Carribean cruise.

BEEF ADVANCE NOT JUSTIFIED.

Official Statement That Increased Prices Are Not Warranted.

Washington, April 18.—Referring to the letter addressed to him by Secretary Morton directing an investigation into the causes of the rise in the price of beef, Dr. Salmon, the chief of the bureau of animal industry, says: "The facts do not warrant any such sensational rise in the price of dressed beef to butchers by the great slaughtering establishments, nor an advance such as has been reported on the part of the retail dealers in meat to the consumers. A normal rise in the wholesale price of dressed beef and in the retail prices should only be in proportion to the rise indicated for beef on foot."

To Land Passengers at Night.

Washington, April 18.—Assistant Secretary Hamlin said late last evening after several hours' consultation with Collector Kilbreth, that all questions relating to the landing of passengers and baggage at New York after sundown had been satisfactorily settled, and that plans would probably be announced today. Additional inspectors have been allowed, which was the principal question at issue.

Mass for the Reina Regente Dead.

Madrid, April 18.—The requiem mass for those lost with the cruiser Reina Regente was attended by Queen Regent Christina, the Princesses Eulalia and Isabella, the ministers, senators, deputies, the generals and admirals and the most conspicuous members of the nobility and the diplomatic corps.

Gen. Cutting Sued for Divorce.

New York, April 18.—General John T. Cutting of San Francisco, an ex-congressman, is the defendant in an action brought by his wife Christine Luhrs Cutting, in the superior court in this city, for separation. Cruelty and desertion are alleged.

Prison Guards and Civil Service.

Albany, April 18.—The civil service commission will inaugurate at Dannemora, on May 8, the examination for prison guards in the state service, under the provision of the new constitution.

Was a Servant in Jefferson's Home.

Ottumwa, Ia., April 18.—Mrs. Lucy Sykes Coland, who was a servant in the household of Thomas Jefferson, died here last night. She was born at Bowling Green, Va., in 1793, and was colored.

To Aid Cuban Patriots.

Jacksonville, Fla., April 18.—A club called "The Friends of Cuba" was organized among prominent Cubans and American business men of the city yesterday to give tangible aid to the Cuban patriots.

For Payment of Pensions.

Washington, April 18.—The secretary of the interior made a requisition upon the secretary of the treasury for $12,410, for the quarterly payment of pensions.

Placed on the Retired List.

Washington, April 18.—Lieut. R. H. Lamson has been placed on the retired list of the navy.

TO FIGHT EXTRADITION.

Perry Well Satisfied and Contented in the Jersey City Jail.

Jersey City, April 18.—Oliver Curtis Perry, express robber, jail breaker, etc., is still in the Hudson county jail this morning. He appears to be happy and well contented and talked freely to a reporter. "I shall not go back to Matteawan and its horrors until I am compelled to," he declared hotly. "When I go there it will be through extradition and by no other process. I'm being treated humanely now and I like it." He admitted that he had a sum of money hidden away, but he refused to tell where or how much it amounted to. "I will say this much," said Perry, "an express company has stated that all that was taken by me was $5,000. Now, it amounted to a great deal more, but how much, I won't say."

To Fight Extradition.

"When the asylum keeper comes here for Perry," said Warden Mitchell last night, "I shall tell him to go home. That means that no attempt will be made to take Perry away until the regular period for extradition elapses." The outlaw is well fed and will have fully recovered in a few days. Simon Kelly, the chief of police, called at the jail and told Warden Mitchell not to deliver Perry to the asylnm authorities until the $2,250 reward had been paid over to Detective Edward J. Clifford and Policeman McAleece, who captured the outlaw. Lawyer Alexander Simpson announced that he had interested himself in Perry's case and would fight extradition. He claims there was some flaw in the committment. If this is so the only benefit it will be to Perry is to delay for a few hours his return to the asylum.

GREENHUT REMOVED.

The Whiskey Trust President Declined To Step Out Gracefully.

Peoria, Ill., April 18.—Joseph E. Greenhut was removed from the presidency and directory of the Distilling & Cattle Feeding company yesterday afternoon at the annual meeting of the stockholders, after refusing to resign. S. M. Rice, of New York city, is slated as his successor. Contrary to predicitions Mr. Greenhut was at the meeting. He was the only one, however, of the old directors to face the new men in control. Resignations were read from the other directors, excepting Mr. Greenhut, and were promptly accepted. Upon motion of Levy Mayer, Greenhut was asked to resign. This he declined to do, and upon a motion to remove him had his attorney state to the stockholders that it was not in their power to do so. Notwithstanding a vote was taken and he was removed under protest. He will carry the matter into the courts.

EAU DE GALLIE'S VICTORY.

Croker and Dwyer Said To Be Ahead About $100,000.

London, April 18.—The comments of the morning papers on Eau de Gallie's victory are cordial and appreciative. Morning and the Chronicle credit the stable with a large win—about £20,000—and the former says that Messrs. Croker and Dwyer took less than half the odds they should have secured. While Simms' seat is freely criticised, the excellence of his judgment and his masterly style of finishing are praised without stint.

MARKET VALUE OF PIETY.

Benedictions 25 Cents Each, Divine Services a Dollar Apiece.

Kansas City, April 18.—The Rev. J. J. Dunning, a Catholic priest has sued Bishop Louis Fink, of this diocese, for $100 for divine service at the Catholic hospital at Fort Scott, Kan. His bill of particulars is: "To performing divine services on Sunday from May 1, 1894, to August 14, 1894, ninety-three times, at $1 each, $90; to offering benediction 40 times, at 25 cents each, $10; total, $100."

MRS. FORSYTH ELOPED.

The Woman Whom It Was Feared Had Been Murdered by Durant.

San Francisco, April 18.—Mrs. Ella Forsyth, whose strange disappearance from her home caused her name to be associated with the Emanuel church crimes and whose body was supposed to lie in some hidden recess of the building, has at last been located. The young woman went forth that day to meet a lover and with him she eloped to San Jose.

Suspension of Wheelman Johnson.

Philadelphia, April 18.—The expected suspension of Johnson, the speedy class B bicycle rider, by the racing board of the League of American wheelmen, has probably been made and the formal announcement of the fact will be published in Chairman Gideon's bulletin this afternoon. Johnson has been watched for some time by the L. A. W. officials and his amateur standing has been under suspicion for quite a while.

NICARAGUA WILL PAY

Her Protests to Great Britain Purely for Effect.

The Treasury in Fairly Good Condition with Receipts of About $250,000 a Month—Settlement of the Claim Expected Inside the Next Three Weeks.

Washington, April 18.—It can be stated on high authority that there has been no charge in the Nicaraguan situation. It remains as it has been repeatedly stated in these dispatches. The state department is fully informed of the British programme, and is interposing no objections. Nicaragua is going to settle on the terms of the British ultimatum, and Envoy Barrios knew it before he left Great Britain. All the protesting which Nicaragua is doing is purely for effect.

Treasury in Good Condition.

The Nicaraguan treasury is in a fairly good condition. Customs receipts are nearly $100,000 in silver a month, and the total revenue is about $250,000 silver a month. An excellent coffee crop was made this year, and all has been marketed. The suggestion that Great Britain would seize the Corinto custom house is absurd. If she were to seize any it would be Bluefields or Greytown, where the bulk of the revenue is derived, and the customs on English goods would be taken to prevent international complications. Great Britain is the heaviest importer into Nicaragua.

Settlement Expected Soon.

This plain would be feasible, but there is plenty of money in the Nicaraguan treasury to-day to settle the bill, and Nicaragua could furnish London drafts against coffee exportations for the full amount. The Royal Arthur will probably receive at Corinto payment of the "smart" money demanded inside the next three weeks.

HE AIDED TOM O'BRIEN.

Minchon on Trial for Helping the Bunco Man To Escape.

Rome, N. Y., April 18.—The jury which will try the case of W. E. Minchon has been completed. Minchon was indicted for aiding in the escape of Tom O'Brien, "the bunco king," who was in the custody of Keeper Buck, of the Dannemora prison, while in Utica two years ago. O'Brien is now in Paris awaiting trial for the killing of Reed Waddell, the "gold brick" operator. In presenting his opening argument District Attorney Klock promised that ex-Gov. Pitkin, of Louisiana would be on hand to testify that he saw Minchon and O'Brien in the Argentine Republic.

SEELEY'S TRAGIC DEATH.

Northampton Greatly Stirred Up Over the Sad Event.

Northampton Mass., April 18.—No recent event has so stirred the town as the tragic death of young Seeley. He was given to pedestrian tours, and the mountain where he died was as familiar to him, though it was a seven-mile walk from his home. It is thought that he stepped on a part of the brink of the 45-foot precipice that had been loosened by the freezing of water which had settled in the leaves. His death must have been almost simultaneous with the fall, as the rocks where he lay were covered with blood.

DISCREDITS THE RUMOR.

Cramps Know of No Scheme To Reorganize Their Company.

Philadelphia, April 18.—Henry W. Cramp, of the Cramp Shipbuilding company, expressed the belief last evening that the rumor of an attempt of New York capitalists to obtain control of their company was without foundation in fact. Charles H. Cramp, president, is the largest individual shareholder, and, as at present constituted, the officers of the concern are mostly of the Cramp family. On the board of directors, however, there are two New Yorkers—Benjamin Brewster, who is also vice-president, and Henry Seligman.

First Mail in Four Days.

Hanover, N. H., April 18.—The accumulated mail and express matter of four days reached Hanover last night, the first received since Saturday night. The vicinity of the post office presented an animated scene on the arrival of the mail, as hundreds of college students and citizens gathered for their letters and newspapers, with tidings from the outside world, from which they have been so long cut off.

THE PEACE TREATY

Further Statement of the Terms Exacted of China.

An Occupation of the Mainland for a Term of Years—Amount of the Indemnity—Efforts To Secure the Safety of Li Hung Chang When He Returns to China.

Yokohama, April 18.—The Jiji, a newspaper, states that the terms of the peace concluded between China and Japan include the cession of the territory from the Yalu to the Liao rivers, on the southern portion of the Liao Tung peninsula, on which Port Arthur is situated, including Yinkow, Hai-Cheng and Chu-Lien-Cheng; also the island of Formosa and the Pescadores islands; an indemnity of 200,000,000 taels, payable in six years; the abolition of the Chinese extra-territoriality; the preservation of Japanese extra-territoriality, and certain commercial privileges for Japan.

Temporary Occupation.

Tientsin, April 17.—Japan's occupation of Port Arthur is to be temporary, thus securing China's integrity on the mainland of Asia after a term of years, and avoiding the possibility of European intervention.

Li Hung Starts for Home.

Shimonoseki, April 18.—Viceroy Li Hung Chang, the Chinese peace envoy, embarked for China last night on board the Kung-Yi.

To Protect the Viceroy.

Washington, April 18.—There is a current impression in diplomatic circles that the offensive and defensive alliance which is reported to be part of the treaty of Shimonoseki, is really an agreement on the part of Japan to protect Li Hung Chang from the vengeance of the Hunan party at Pekin.

His Shrewd Move.

The terms of the peace are necessarily humiliating to China, and a scapegoat will be demanded. If the Hunan party are able they will overthrow Li at the first opportunity, and it is entirely in line with his shrewdness to bolster himself at home through a private deal with the Japanese ministry.

ARE BICYCLES DUITABLE?

Board of Appraisers Says Yes; Secretary Carlisle Says No.

Boston, April 18.—Collector Warren has received a decision from the board of general appraisers which holds that a bicycle is not free as personal effects, but is subject to a duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem under the tariff act. "Whatever the board of general appraisers may hold," said Collector Warren. "I shall admit bicycles free if they have been used by the person importing them. In fact, we have instructions from Secretary Carlisle to admit them free as personal effects. Of course I must have some evidence that it is for the personal use of the importer and has been ridden by him."

GREATER NEW YORK BILL.

Senate Committee Decides To Report the Lexow Measure Favorably.

Albany, April 18.—The senate cities committee has decided to report favorably Senator Lexow's greater New York bill, which was prepared by the greater New York commission. It was rumored about this morning that the bill might be amended so as to provide for the immediate carrying out of the greater New York plan with a view of restricting Mayor Strong's term of office.

Vercheres, Quebec—Geoffrion (lib.), elected by 157 majority.

RUN OVER BY A COAL WAGON.

Wealthy New York Clubman Killed While Riding a Bicycle.

New York, April 18.—Robert Center, clubman, man of leisure, and one of the best known sportsmen in America and possessed of a fortune of $500,000, was knocked off his bicycle and crushed to death under the wheels of a coal wagon while riding on the western Boulevard shortly before 6 o'clock last evening. He survived the frightful injuries he received barely three hours, dying in Roosevelt hospital, to which he was removed immediately after the accident. He had ridden from his apartments and was pedalling swiftly downtown on the western side of the boulevard when, at Seventy-second street, he passed alongside of a horse car which was going in the same direction. At the same time a coal wagon which was going up town along the track turned out directly in in his path to make way for the car. Mr. Center's head was bent down over the handle bars, and not seeing the oncoming wagon, he ran directly into it. The bicycle struck the fore part of the wagon near the wheel before the driver had time to think of pulling up his horses, and Mr. Center was thrown off under the wagon. The left front wheel ran over his face, crushing in his skull, and after it the hind wheel passed over his chest and thorax, completing his fatal injuries.

BUCHANAN'S FORLORN HOPE.

His Case Appealed to the British Ambassador as a Last Resort.

Washington, April 18.—The refusal of the United States supreme court to grant a writ of error to Dr. Robert W. Buchanan, the New York wife murderer under sentence to be electrocuted in Sing Sing prison next week, removes his last hope, except through interference of the governor, although his attorneys will take the case to the British ambassador and ask him to interfere in Buchanan's behalf, he being a British subject. They will endeavor also to secure a respite from Governor Morton pending Sir Julian Pauncefote's investigation of the case. The British government never interferes in the case of a subject accused of a crime, excepted to ask for a fair trial, and the appeal to the British minister is considered a forlorn hope.

LEPER IN NEW YORK.

A Young Mulatto Who Has Worked in Hotels and Private Families.

New York, April 18.—William Bryan, a 17-year-old mulatto, has just been sent to North Brother island suffering with leprosy in the worst form. Bryan caught the disease from an arm-to-arm vaccination in the West Indies. He came to New York and worked as bell boy in several hotels. He next secured a place as door boy in a private family on Fifth avenue, but was forced to quit a few weeks ago because of the swollen state of his hands and feet. He went to the Roosevelt hospital free dispensary where it was discovered that he was a leper.

Favorable Reports from Delaware, Maryland and the Eastern Shore.

Philadelphia, April 18.—Reports received by the Pennsylvania Railroad company from its representatives sent through Deleware, Maryland and the eastern shore of Virginia to examine into and report as to the probablities of the peach crop for this season, are very encouraging, and in some sections the indications are that the peach crop of 1893 will be equalled, while increased acreage in berries will help to swell that crop.

OIL TAKES A TUMBLE

Speculators Beginning To Hug Standard Price.

Big Slump from $2.70 to $2.00 Caused by Timid Holders Trying To Get Rid of Their Oil at Any Price—A "Black Friday" for Petroleum Predicted.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 18.—Yesterday was the most exciting day in oil circles since the present boom in prices began, and near the close a small sized panic was created. On the local exchange certificate oil opened at $2.55 bid, and not until $2.63 was reached was there a sale of the May option. From $2.66 the market advanced to $2.70, and then declined to $2.62, where it remained pegged until shortly before the close. Then all of a sudden an awful surprise came. It was telegraphed from Oil City to Pittsburg that oil there was offered down as low as $2.58, at which price sales were made. Again in a few seconds the quotations from Oil City recorded $2.45 as the price certificate oil was being offered at on the exchange there. Shortly before the close the Oil City market was as low as $2 bid, and inside of a minute was bid up again to $2.17, at which price transactions in certificate oil were made.

Wide Fluctuations.

The Pittsburg market followed Oil City. If the price in the latter place was bid up or offered down the Pittsburg market followed without a single transaction being made. Not for nearly twenty years has such wide fluctuations in prices occured. From $2.70 to $2, a decline of 70 cents, would ten years ago have probably broken many banks and ruined numerous people. The decline of yesterday, however, is not so disastrous. In this wide range in price probably not 50,000 barrels of certified oil changed hands. And even those that parted with certificates at yesterday's extreme low figures probably bought them at a much lower figure.

Scared Timid Holders.

What caused the big slump from $2.70 to $2.00 nobody seems to know. James S. McKelvy, one of the best posted and most prominent oil brokers in this city, had telegraph advices from Oil City that the Standard people were not buying certificate oil around $2.50, the price they had set for the day, and this scared the timid holders, who tried to get rid of their oil at any price. Yesterday's callings clearly show that if traders thought the Standard would reduce the price on credit balances they would let go any oil on hand at the present high figures. Of late the speculative market has been running anywhere from three to 25 cents higher than the price the Standard paid at their agencies. It is believed now, however, that the speculative market will hug the Standarn price much more closely than it has in the last few weeks.

Will Relieve the Country.

Mr. Kirk said: "Petroleum will be the means of bringing the country out of the period of depression that has prevailed for the past two years. That was the case in 1873, when our finances were at a low ebb. Oil made the first advance and as it went up in price the business of the country improved. The same was true in 1844." Many are predicting a "Black Friday" for petroleum.

SPOUTINGS FROM THE EARTH.

Rumblings Heard Under Ground in the Rome District.

Rome, April 18.—A large area of land near Leprignano, in the Rome district, has subsided about nine yards. Loud rumblings were heard and water spouted from the earth at the centre of the sunken surface. The flow was so heavy last night that it made a lake covering fifteen acres. The water smells of sulphur, and sulphurous gas frequently bubbles to the surface. All the old springs in the neighborhood are impregnated with sulphur, and the new springs which have gushed from the earth since the disturbance are hot and sulphurous. Government engineers and geologists will go to Leprignano to examine the phenomena.

Such Tooth-Pulling Is Fun.

Having a tooth whose room was decidedly better than its company, a member of The Press staff with much diffidence called to see Dr. Charles R. Thiers this morning at his new dental parlors on Grove street near Greenbrook. Dr. Thiers himself was busy filling his appointments of the hour; but his expert assistant, Dr. Bedford, was able to spare a moment to relieve the sufferings of the scribe. The prick of a needle was all the pain the patient felt, and behold the offending tooth was out. Dr. Bedford explained that that was because he used Dr. Thiers's famous anaesthetic, which makes tooth-pulling painless. So easy was such extraction that the patient immediately had to other unsound molars extracted, and though the dentists said they were the toughest-rooted teeth they had ever handled there was absolutely no suffering connected with their extraction. Such a powerful and harmless anaesthetic is a boon to the human race, and those suffering from decayed teeth will find joy in its use.

NEW WEST PROPOSED

IRRIGATION EXPERTS SAY THAT REPARTITION MUST COME.

Water Rights on Which Are Based a Demand to Readjust the Boundaries of the States and Territories Accordi'g to Natural Lines.

A striking scheme for the repartition of the territory of the United States west of the Missouri river is seriously put forward by the irrigation experts of the West. The scheme is fraught with amazing political and economic possibilities. It is not a wild idea of Utopian dreamers or populistic cranks, but the serious business proposition of a large body of practical people. They say that such a repartition as they propose is essential to the growth and development of the greater part of the West and that it must come some day.

The wonderful development of the arid West, which practically includes most of the country between the Missouri river and the Sierras, by irrigation, is one of the marvels of this age. Within the last six or eight years the most hopeless looking deserts of sand and sage brush in Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Arizona, southern California and other western States, have been transformed into fruitful orchards and fertile farming lands. It is almost impossible for one who has not seen the before and the after in the arid region to realize just what miracles have been performed by irrigation. It seems to have been clearly shown that on irrigation the future of the greater part of the West depends. With a full and proper use of the resources of the country it is asserted that there is scarcely a section of the now almost uninhabited Western desert regions that may not be rendered able to support as large a population as the best agricultural lands of the East.

But so far the reclamation of the desert has been carried on without any particular system. Private corporations have bought up what seemed favorable sections of country, tapping rivers here and there haphazard and wasting perhaps more water than they used. Whole water areas have been preempted for the use of small sections, and without protest, because there were no neighbors to demand a share.

But as the value of the land under irrigation became apparent, other settlers came along and their natural and rightful share of the water supply being cut off for the benefit of others, trouble arose. This kind of thing has grown until nearly every Western State is the scene of bitter contests over water rights. The adjustment of these difficulties is one of the objects sought in the proposed repartition.

It has already happened that large areas of land made valuable by irrigation secured through the erection of costly works have been ruined through the later development of agriculture on lands in another State higher up the rivers. Thus serious conflicts have arisen between States, and some such questions are now before Congress and the Department of the Interior. Kansas wants to know if her agriculture is to be destroyed in favor of Colorado's settlers, and in turn the Colorado people want to know if they must abandon their lands and industries in favor of the Kansas farmers. Idaho and Utah, Utah and Nevada, and Nevada and California are wrangling over like questions. And as agriculture is developed similar questions in numberless varying details will arise among all the States of the West.

These troubles are caused by the manner in which the States were laid out. When the great Western region was divided the boundaries of the States were apparently made with a pencil and foot rule. The great American desert was believed to be of no account and the easiest way of getting its boundaries was adopted. A glance at the map of the United States will show the notable difference between boundaries in the Eastern and Western halves.

In the Eastern half natural boundaries—rivers, mountains and the like are largely followed. In the Western the State divisions are almost wholly on the lines of longitude and latitude. There is total disregard of geographical lines, and the results in some cases as developed along with the development of the country are comical as well as complex.

In Arizona, for instance, people living north of the Grand Canon, can get to their capital only by traveling several hundred miles out of the direct way and passing through other States. The canon is impassible for 500 miles of its length except in one place. Montana, Colorado and Wyoming are cut in halves by the Rocky Mountains, while Washington and Oregon are divided by the Cascade Range, and the districts on either side of these mountains have few interests in common, while many of their interests conflict.

What the irrigation people want is that the States shall be mapped out with regard to topographical affinity, and that their territory shall be based on undivided water systems or drainage basins. When the reclamation of the arid West is fully taken in hand, they say, the irrigation works will have to be constructed and controlled by the States. But whether operated by the State or private companies it will be impossible to accomplish what will be required unless the whole of every separate irrigation district, the whole of the lands and waters is under one set of laws and one State authority.

WHITE OF PLAINFIELD.

MRS. WILLIAM S. RAINSFORD.

She is a Trustee of the Public Schools in New York.

The broad views, brilliant oratory and altogether prominent personality of the Rev. Dr. William S. Rainsford would make the appointment of his wife to the place of Trustee of Common Schools in New York a matter of interest, but Mrs. Rainsford has claims to fame quite separate from those of her distinguished husband. She has long been that best sort of student of educational matters, the loving and practical one, and has grown more and more interested in the theme of mental training which our public school system offers. She was one of the signers of the memorial recently circulated and presented to the Board of Education asking that as vacancies should occur in the various wards two out of the five trustees allowed for each ward should be women, being a firm advocate of men and women working side by side wherever possible. This she thinks insures the most satisfactory advance and best results.

Mrs. Rainsford is of English birth, according to Harper's Bazar, and married Dr. Rainsford in London sixteen years ago, sailing with him for Canada, where they spent four years. Twelve years ago they came to New York.

MRS. WILLIAM S. RAINSFORD.

Mrs. Rainsford was the only woman to offer to fill the vacancy in her ward on the School Board of Trustees, this fact, as well as her appointment, being a surprise to her. She has made a close study of kindergarten work, in which she is a firm believer. Concerning our present system of public schools, she finds much to admire; many of the schools are excellent, but she believes there exists room for improvement in others.

Her appointment places in office a woman of just the sort that is needed. Mrs. Rainsford is not radical, but progressive; she understands the subject and enters upon her duties with a desire to co-operate with her associates in all endeavors to sustain present good conditions or to earnestly aid any new plans that may seem advisable. In one point Mrs. Rainsford sets an admirable example to other women; she has always been in close touch with the schools attended by her three boys. She has kept herself informed of what was going on by sitting, session after session, in the schoolroom, weighing the good and bad features of what happened there, and lending her influence and assistance to carry out any suggestion she discussed or made.

How a Story of the Chinese and Japanese War Failed to Impress.

"Annabel," called a Harlem mother over the banisters as she heard the front door close.

"Yes, mamma," replied a sweet girlish voice, and Annabel Googan slowly framed herself in the darkness of the staircase.

"Was that Mr. Tinberry, Annabel?"

"It was, mamma."

"Do you know it is twenty minutes past 11?" came in cold tones from the wrappered figure in the upper hall.

"Mamma, we hadn't the slightest idea it was so late," said the young girl, earnestly. "You see," she continued, "Mr. Tinberry has been telling me about China and Japan. He said everybody ought to know about the war, and it was so interesting we never knew how late it was getting. Do you know, mamma," added the sweet girl as she reached the landing, "that in China they——"

"Did Mr. Tinberry draw a map of China on your face, Annabel?" asked Mrs. Googan, sternly.

"Why, mamma?" said the daughter in startled tones.

The young girl rushed to a mirror and saw with horrorstricken glance that the left side of her face was streaked and stained with ink.

"Heaven and earth!" she screamed, "his fountain pen must have leaked into his waistcoat pocket!" and with a shriek of horror the beautiful girl fell fainting to the floor.

LINCOLN'S EXORBITANT BILL.

McClellan Said He Charged as Much as a First Class Lawyer Would.

One of the most interesting "remains," at the recent sale of Lincoln relics in Philadelphia was the autograph copy of Lincoln's bill for legal services for the Illinois Central Railroad company. The bill was for $5,000, and six members of the Illinois bar certified that the amount was not unreasonable.

Another relic was a check for $250, given to Lincoln at another time by the same company as a retainer. If successful he would receive a $1,000 fee.

Mr. Lincoln won the suit in the Supreme court and presented his bill for the balance. The president of the company was absent when Lincoln called, so the latter was referred to the superintendent, who refused to pay the account, remarking:

"This is as much as a first class lawyer would charge."

The superintendent was General George B. McClellan.

THE LAST OF THE REBELLION.

The Surrender at Appomattox, Though a Great Event, is Almost Forgotten.

Thirty years have passed since the army of Northern Virginia surrendered at Appomattox court house. The anniversary of that great event passes without public commemoration of any kind, and, indeed, except for reminders, the day might hardly recall to one man in a thousand the great scene of thirty years ago.

This is as it should be. The wise and generous policy of the people of this country has from the first determined that no date and no capitulation of our civil war shall be made the occasion of a national festival. We did not want public holidays that might bring bitter memories to a large portion of our countrymen. It is true that sometimes survivors of famous fields, on one side or the other, choose their anniversaries for friendly reunions. We have also not hesitated to set apart some famous battlefields as military parks. We have, finally, a day of memories for the heroes of the war, and still deck their graves, near the end of May. But we make no public holiday in honor of a sanguinary battle or even of that memorable occasion when the soldiers of the South laid down their arms.

Yet we doubt not that the time has already come when all parts of our common country can see that Appomattox was a fortunate day. Even had it been made an anniversary, it would have appeared less a memorial of the strife than of fraternal reunion and peace.

ANTI-SLAVERY SURVIVORS.

Mrs. Chace and Robert Purvis Who Signed the Declaration of '33.

Few of the oldest friends of Frederick Douglass remain to mourn him. Mr. W. J. Garrison, on being asked who are the anti-slavery workers who lived and struggled for freedom before the forties, named the Rev. Samuel May, the Rev. W. H. Fish, Mr. Charles K. Whipple, Mr. Parker Pillsbury, Dr. Furness, of Philadelphia, and Robert Purvis, who is the last remaining signer of the declaration of 1833 made against slavery by the American anti-slavery convention which assembled in Philadelphia. For several years Purvis and Whittier were all there were. Now that the poet has gone, this son of a white, non-slaveholding father and his free born negro wife is the only representative of that mighty beginning of the struggle.

Two ladies share the honors of anti-slavery work before the forties—Mrs. Elizabeth Pease Nichol, of Scotland, and the venerable and delightful Mrs. Elizabeth B. Chace, of Rhode Island, who is now 88, and indefatigable in cheerfulness and energy, although suffering with infirmities that might make many less courageous younger women hopeless and helpless. Mrs. Chace has learned china painting since she was 80 years of age.

THE CHATTERER SILENCED.

He Liked to Talk, but the Other Man Liked to Listen.

Speaking of the young man who talks in public places, I heard a retort made to him a short time ago which was so good I was surprised never to have heard it before.

It was at the theater, and the young man had seen the play before. He let everybody for four seats around know that, and he kept telling just what was coming and just how funny it would be when it did come. He had a pretty girl with him and he was trying to amuse her. At length he said:

"Did you ever try listening to a play with you eyes shut? You've no idea how queer it seems."

A middle aged man with a red face sat just in front. He twisted himself about in his seat and glared at the young man.

"Young man," said he, "did you ever try listening to a play with your mouth shut?"

And the silence was almost painful.

The Elephant Rajah.

An elephant pushing a long line of freight cars was the unusual sight witnessed by a party of visitors to the winter quarters of Lemen Bros.' circus over at Argentine one afternoon a short while ago.

Frank Fisher, trainer of Rajah, the big elephant which the circus carries as the feature of its menagerie, was using the beast in moving heavy wagons, and while so engaged a workman from an elevator near the winter quarters complained that he could not get a switch engine to move empty box cars to the elevator.

"I'll move them for you with Rajah," said Fisher.

He was not quite sure that the big beast could move the long line of 32 box cars on the Santa Fe Railway track, which runs by the quarters, but he resolved to have him try it. The brakes were released, the elephant put his head against the end car, and after a few moments the line began to move slowly. The track was perfectly level and soon the cars had rolled down to the elevator. —Kansas City Star.

Opposition to the New Woman.

The physician was surprised to find the head of the household at the door with a shotgun.

"Why, what's the matter?" stammered the doctor.

"That there medicine you give my wife she says is makin' her feel like a new woman. And I want you to understand that no new woman business goes in this house. Fust thing I know she'll be out makin' speeches."—Indianapolis Journal.

The Boston Transcript rebukes the Massachusetts Legislature for not adopting the McTammany voting machine, which it says is even better than the Myers voting machine. The owners of the machine agree to furnish to the State the machines, receiving in compensation only the difference in cost between an election under the present method and one in which the McTammany machine is used. They think that under this arrangement they would make something like $2,000,000. But as the State would lose nothing The Transcript thinks the offer ought to be accepted.

A DARK NIGHT

By SARAH ORNE JEWETT

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller]

CHAPTER IV.

There was no time for farewells, but all the way the thought of the lonely figure behind him in the road was like a sword in Weymouth's heart. As day broke he rode into Bristol a weary but not hopeless man. Through all the hurry and business of the morning the experience of such a night shimmered in his mind, full of unreality, like the remembrance of a bad dream. In spite of his promise he must see that such horrid business was stopped. This thought possessed him at one moment, and at the next he only desired to rescue the woman, whom he now loved more than ever, from such surroundings and from the sense which so prayed upon her of responsibility. It was necessary to act with discretion. He knew now the reason of her withdrawal from her promise made when they were together in a distant part of England, and while she for some reason had felt free and light-hearted. Why she had come back to the old shame, or to new certainty of shame? All these things must wait for explanation, but, for his part, he could not wait long to see his deliverer again. It was a wonder that he was not under the Severn like the rest. But for the woman he loved best; but for Elizabeth Brent, he might indeed be drifting and swaying under the tide, the treasure stolen and he himself charged with the robbery. As he rode he made the whole plot clear to himself with its clever undoing; he could never forget the look of horror on that face in the shadow of the settee, when the man whose robbery was planned had proved to be himself. What pity grew in his heart for that young creature; an angel, as she seemed to him, lost among thieves!

The first thing to be done was to make his report to those who had sent him out on the errand, and then to take the quickest of journeys to find her again and make sure that they should never be parted. So he rode in short time from Bristol, grudging each minute, but planning his return with eagerness.

When he reached the bank and told his story and asked for help, he was listened to with surprise and almost with incredulity. Rogers had not returned and the tale of his craft and dishonor seemed to be questioned. The wrong road; a suspicious den towards which Weymouth believed himself to be enticed (and which for purposes of his own he refused for the moment to describe); the strange liquor with its deadly drug meant for him, all which Rogers had got by mistake; all this sounded even in the days of greater lawlessness like a very strange story. The senior partner was again heard to grumble that Rogers was the best clerk they ever had, and grew more and more impatient.

"Were you robbed then?" he demanded, arrogantly, as if he believed the worst of these excuses and was ready to take vengeance, but the squire nodded shrewdly at Weymouth, as if they two kept an understanding.

Weymouth sprang to his feet and threw the captain's letter and his receipt for the money on the table.

"I have put aside the thought of one dearer to me than life," he said, "to bring you these. To venture back alone or in company might have been my end. I have done your errand; ask my fellow-messenger, if you like, what he will never dare to answer."

He turned on his heel and left the room. "This is very strange," said the old man, looking at the squire. "Yes, here are the papers, the money on the ship, he was there on time. Did you mind what a look there was on the fellow's face when I doubted him?" But the squire was hurrying after Weymouth and the senior partner was left alone to wonder more than ever. Evidently whatever pay went into Weymouth's pocket would be to him only the price of much happiness and peace of mind.

The squire was a lover of adventure, as has been already said, and he went hurrying down the street like a boy to overtake the man for whom he had a great liking.

"Tell me more, Weymouth," he urged. "You're fagged to death with this affiar, whatever is at the bottom of it. Come and we'll have something together and see what can be done. I always expected the like of this of Rogers—"

"I had to make a promise, sir," said Weymouth, "but I'll tell you all I can and be grateful for the chance. Sometimes a man who is alone must trust his friend, and I make bold to call you mine. 'Twill end in my borrowing your sorrel mare and begging you to mount the roan if I could have my wish."

"We'll start at dawn," said the squire eagerly when he had heard the story. "No, no constables till you've got her safe away—then I'll manage the game. I know the place, and that upper inn 'tis a low lodging with but an evil name, but 'twill do for a makeshift," and so they parted and Weymouth felt every hour to be a day and knew that they might be setting out on a long ride and was glad to remember that nobody would wait at home for the squire who was also a single man. They came in good time next day to the old house above the waterside, to find it deserted. The door stood open to the winter wind and its tenants had fled. At the other inn where Weymouth had parted from his love, they got news that those whom they sought were sailing for America and must be hiding in Bristol, if indeed they were not already at sea.

The landlord and his hostess said boldly, and with an air of great innocence and unconcern, that the country was well rid of such a pack—they were not old country folk but late comers, and their room in England was better than their company. Of Rogers nothing could be heard.

The disappointed riders called for supper and made the most of the poor comforts of the roadside tavern, but it being then after nightfall Weymouth slipped out alone and crossing the road followed the foothpath down toward the Severn. He was at heart like a poor dog that had lost its master and by the hedge where they had rested and stood talking he shed many tears. It was again a dark and misty night, and darkest and saddest of all were the forebodings of his own heart.

They made haste to Bristol and searched there, but too late, for when, getting word of their ship, they hurried to the harbor side, it was only to see the far white fleck of a sail.

The rest of the story might be a long tale by itself.

"Under floods that are deepest,
Over rocks that are steepest
Love will find out the way."

But Weymouth's way was a long one. He lost no time in starting on his quest and pilgrimage, and his business of horse dealing made an excellent excuse for riding hither and yon through the newly settled part of the country, finding what faint traces he could of the emigrants, from the day of their landing, but after many months had passed he kept what patience and hope he could in the midst of discouragement, and believed at last that fate would lead him where plots and plans had failed.

One spring evening, the second year that he had been in America, Weymouth was driving into one of the older villages, where he had once or twice been before, and there saw a worn and wistful face at a window, and knew that the search was ended. It seemed the simplest thing in the world to look up and see her there after all the mystery and silence; for a moment he could not take in the truth and felt strangely cold and dull—then a tremendous wave of joy struck into his very heart. There were some young horses leading behind his wagon and he was driving an excitable pair of colts for whom the sight of a bundle of straw on a wheelbarrow was too much altogether, so that they reared and plunged and seemed to be putting their driver in danger. Elizabeth Brent came to stand in a door with great distress and discovered Weymouth as his face turned toward her just as the frisky company settled to the harness and halter again, and went on quietly to the end of their day's journey.

Weymouth could hardly stop to give directions or to care for his livery property; he felt like a dazed man with his mind in such a whirl of sudden delight and strange timidity, and without listening to the questions of a group of tavern idlers he went hurrying back down the road.

The houses were far apart, and the footpath was only a worn track in the cropped grass; it might have been the field path above the Severn. It was a misty night and the sky was gray and heavy, and there, beside a wild thicket, they met again as they had parted, on a dark night, but neither thought of anything except of meeting; certainly not of parting any more while the world stood.

There were sad tales to tell of poverty and shame, and there was need of all the protection and comfort that Weymouth could give, most of all because some letters which had been written had all miscarried or never found him in his wandering way of life. This was the bitterest of all, to think one's self forgotten and perhaps disdained, but hope was stronger and now at last prevailed. As for the keepers of the dismal inn, they had failed to prosper even after their own fashion, and the woman had died not long before, after a long and wretched illness, while her husband was in jail for theft, and their companions, who had fled with them, had long ago forsaken them. In her last days the miserable woman had been haunted by thoughts of the help she had given to the awful deeds, done at night in that dark low room, from which Weymouth had so luckily escaped. But as for Rogers, the accomplice, he had gone with them to Bristol, much hurt by his fall, and sick from the deadly drug which once was cruelly said to have done no harm to those who were also put to sleep by the deep water of the Severn. From Bristol, refusing to go to America, he had been put on board a brig that was sailing for France, and no one knew any more of Rogers from that day—the senior partner who missed his clerk from the bank, or the thieves into whose hands he tried to play. He had served them, and they had served him in years before, in other parts of the country — and but for this check upon their industries, the bank itself had but a short race to run without robbery. The week before, after long waiting, Rogers had at last been trusted with a key to the safe, and the theft of the money which Weymouth was carrying to Bristol was a bit of by-play, while the larger robbery was to be planned that very night, and to be achieved the next. But a poorer company has rarely gone seafaring than these who meant to start with pockets full, and Weymouth's Elizabeth had long earned the money that supported herself and the old dying woman, who suffered every torture that illness can give in her last, weary months. In this far-away village the two women had been befriended, and it was Weymouth's delight to pay the poor debts that his wife had been forced to make in her extremity, and to satisfy her generous heart with a new power of being bountiful to those who had saved her from distress. Then they went away together man and wife, and lived and loved each other for many years and saw old England again before they died.

Once Weymouth, who seldom reminded his wife of what could only bring shame and sorrow to her heart, as he sat thinking at night before the fire, said boldly:

"Where was the master of the inn that night, and what was his part of the game? Why hadn't he wit enough to keep watch and follow us?" Then his wife answered, cheerfully, looking at him with a smile:

"Because he was the old Welsh woman in the curtain bed."

"And that new net?"

"It was I who put it there, my dear."

"And saved my life?" said Weymouth.

"Yet, I did not know that it was for you," she said. "I only feared for some poor soul in danger. I was going for help next moment, when you came into the kitchen and I saw your face."

"It was a dark night, indeed," said Weymouth, puffing at his pipe, "but the money got safe to Bristol, and here we are now together."

Lesson For the Week Beginning April 21. Comment by Rev. Walter J. Yates. Topic, The Three Friends.

SCRIPTURE READINGS.—Job ii, 11-13.

He's a slave who would not be
In the right with two or three;
He's a slave who would not choose
Hatred, slander and abuse
Rather than in silence shrink
From the truth he needs must think.
—Lowell.

The Gift of Power.

It is as true now as it ever has been that as many as receive Christ "to them He gives power to become the sons of God." The Spirit of God dwelling in the soul energizes all faculties. The mind receives enlightenment to know the will of God; the affections receive fresh impulses to love the divine truth and ways; the will power is strengthened in purpose to do the right. Impulses to evil and gratification of the lower sensual or carnal nature lose their power as one walks in the Spirit till they scarce seem to exist and finally become wholly inoperative. The physical nature, with its needs and appetites, still lives, and often in greater strength and beauty, but all its impulses are under control of the spiritual nature and act in harmony with the requirements of the soul. Not only is there freedom from actual wrongdoing, and hence freedom from guilt, but there are power and possession of active righteousness and holiness of nature. Even the native sinward tendency of nature is counteracted, and the positive Godward impulse alone lives in the will and possesses the heart.

Silent Influence.

In a time when men are swinging from their faith and confidence I despair of books, I despair of arguments, I despair of any special work to save men from unbelief. But no man can resist the argument of holiness brought in a personified form before him, in its gentleness, in its sweetness, in its aspiration, in its love, in all its blossoms and fruits of peace and joy. Let men see that, and they do not want to disbelieve. All their hearts are set a-yearning. No real conception of Christ is reproduced before men that they do not long to have the same thing in themselves. And out of this yearning comes aspiration, and out of aspiration comes intuition, and out of intuition comes realization, and out of realization come conversion and sanctification. So that no man preaches so much and so effectually as the man that does not speak a word, but whose whole life is one revelation of higher forms of Christian development.—Beecher.

The Holy Spirit.

All spiritual power is from the influence of the Spirit of God operating on the human nature. Working in the material world, he is manifested as physical force. In human nature he imparts moral ability or power to know right and to act right and love righteousness. As intellectual powers and spiritual ability unfold his influence is felt in quickening these soul powers into activity. He enlightens and energizes. If one chooses to follow the gracious leadings, new power is imparted until birth into full conscious spiritual life results. Yet there are higher and more glorious gifts from this same source. Pardon for actual sins committed and the testimony of acceptance and favor with God are wondrous blessings, but gifts of richer and higher degree are still stored up for the soul who earnestly longs after the full development of the divine life within.

In the Secret Place of the Most High.

F. W. Farrar tells the following as the explanation of the wondrous spiritual power of his mother. "My mother's habit was every day, immediately after breakfast, to withdraw for one hour to her own room and to spend that hour in reading the Bible, in meditation and prayer. From that hour, as from a pure fountain, she drew the strength and sweetness which enabled her to fulfill all her duties and remain unruffled by all worries and pettishnesses which are so often the intolerable trial of narrow neighborhoods."

Gaining and Giving.

In his late years John Wesley exclaimed, "Oh, that God would enable me once more, before I go hence and am no more seen, to lift up my voice like a trumpet to those who gain and save all they can, but do not give all they can." It requires talent to make money. It requires a higher degree of talent to save money. But the highest talent of all is required to use money rightly. Many get, some keep, few indeed ever acquire ability to wisely use and give.

Susannah Wesley's Grave.

The grave of the mother of the Wesleys is in Bunhill Fields cemetery, London, opposite City Road chapel. It is annually visited by thousands from all parts of the world. The spot is marked by rather a shabby stone. Its size and appearance are neither suitable. A suggestion has been made among the young Methodists of Canada that a contribution of 5 or 10 cents apiece be solicited with which to erect a suitable memorial to this mother of Methodism.

What It Means.

"The object of the League is to promote intelligent and loyal piety in the young members and friends of the church, to aid them in the attainment of purity of heart and constant growth in grace and to train them in works of mercy and help."

In Sleep.

Not drowsihood and dreams and mere idless,
Nor yet the blessedness of strength regained
Alone are in what men call sleep. The past,
My unsuspected soul, my parent's voice,
The generations of my forbears—yea,
The very will of God himself—are there,
And potent working so that many a doubt
Is wiped away at daylight, many a soil
Washed cleanlier, many a puzzle riddled plain.
Strong, silent forces push my puny self
Toward unguessed issues, and the waking man
Rises a Greatheart where a slave lay down.
—Richard Burton.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning April 21. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—On guard—over what; how?—Neh. iv, 6-23. (A temperance topic.)

Nehemiah and his followers in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem after their return from captivity are opposed by the allied forces of the surrounding heathen nations. They hoped to take them by surprise, but Nehemiah heard of their intentions and made preparations to meet and repulse his assailants. This may illustrate to us the necessity of being on guard against the enemies of our souls, and in the way that Nehemiah guarded himself so may we guard ourselves against the assaults of sin and satan.

1. We must be on guard over our souls. The enemies of Nehemiah were both from without and within. Without were the combined, angry, determined, wily leaders of the heathen armies about them. Within there was the opposition of the despondent and the discouraged laborers. In guarding the soul the Christian must meet the same kind of enemies. The enemies of the soul are without in the form of satan, sin, temptation, evil men, who are anxious to lead God's children astray, and in many other forms. Within are the doubts and discouragements that arise from the natural weakness of the human nature. We must keep guard over all these things if we save the soul from destruction. Then must also skill be displayed in guarding ourselves against the assaults that are made upon us. Nehemiah very carefully arranged everything to meet successfully the attack of the enemy against him. Tact and skill must be displayed in guarding ourselves against temptation and sin. We must know what are our weaknesses, that we may fortify them specially, for it is here that the most vigorous assaults will be made. We must understand ourselves; we must understand the enemy and be on constant guard.

2. How must we guard ourselves? 1. By prayer. Though Nehemiah had a strong, determined enemy against him, he was not discouraged, but first prayed unto God. Prayer is our strongest safeguard. The enemy may be numerous and strong, but God is strength both against numbers and might. He can give us strength to overcome the mightiest enemies if we but ask Him. He knows our foes. He understands our weaknesses. He desires our safety. He has promised to sustain us, and our hope should be in Him. 2. Watchfulness. The Jews not only prayed, but watched day and night. So we should habitually watch ourselves and the temptations and sins that easiest gain the victory over us. 3. Prayer and watchfulness. "Watch and pray," said Christ to His disciples. The two must be combined. Prayer aids watching, and watching aids prayer. Prayer alone is presumption; watchfulness alone is sinful self confidence. Both together insure safety and deliverance. "Watch," therefore, "unto prayer."

Bible Readings.—Ps. xli, 3; Prov. i, 10-15; iv, 23; Matt. xxiv, 42; xxvi, 41; Mark xiii, 35 37; Luke xii, 37; xxi, 36; I Cor. x, 12, 13; Eph. vi, 10-18; Col. iv, 2; I Thess. v, 6; II Tim. iv, 5; I Pet. iv, 7; v, 8, 9; Rev. iii, 2; xvi, 15.

Chicago Endeavor Uniform.

Chicago Endeavorers will attend the international convention in large numbers and will wear a distinctive uniform. The following outfit is being considered by the enterprising sisters of the western metropolis and is copied from The Endeavorer News:

White sailor hats, with ribbon band of red, white and blue, in recognition of the state colors.

White waist, navy blue skirt, red Windsor tie.

Bow of red, white and blue on left shoulder, with streamer bearing the word "Chicago" upon the white, name of division upon the blue and "Y. P. S. C. E." upon the red. For the Mothers a similar bow of purple and white, with the initials "M. S. C. E."

Navy blue skirts, white waists, with navy blue bows on shoulders, bearing on one side "Chicago, '98," and on the other "Chicago For Christ."

Pay the Debt.

Forgiveness cannot make a sinner be or feel as if he had never sinned. There must be, in addition to forgiveness, an atonement for his sin, paying of the debt, before he can feel that the burden of his guilt is removed. Hence the necessity of the atonement made by Christ not to appease the wrath of God, but to bring relief to the soul of the penitent sinner. "Jesus paid it all, all the debt I owed," are the tidings that he must hear and believe before he can stand uncondemned and self justified before God.—Religious Telescope.

Verse Names For Juniors.

Each junior in your society should be able to spell his name in Bible verses—selecting, that is, a set of Bible verses that he has made peculiarly his own, the initials of which spell his own name. The children will delight in finding these verses and committing them to memory and will enjoy hearing each other repeat them.—Selected.

The Statue of the Perfect.

Patience, kindness, generosity, humility, courtesy, unselfishness, good temper, guilelessness, sincerity—these make up the supreme gift, the statue of the perfect.—Professor Drummond.

A Buried Grief.

So you are dead and gone, old Sorrow.
Only yesterday there you were,
Filling my heart with an aching care
Of grief for today and fear for tomorrow.
Now the skeleton's gone, and the cupboard's bare.

And in your stead is born, old Sorrow,
Hope, whose bright torch burns night to day
And makes winter bloom with the flowers of May Till even your memory seems to borrow
Bright hues because you have passed away.

Old grief, once I thought you could never cease.
Now I sing your requiem. Rest in peace!

A SAILOR LOVER.

BY MARGARET DELAND.

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

I.

Why Donald Hayes should have built his house so near the water, that the line of drift left by the high tide was tangled in his little picket fence, was a mystery to the Seaport.

"I should think, Don, you'd have enough of that ocean week days, without a-settin' and a-lookin' at it Sundays, too," remonstrated more than one friend. "Ain't you tired of seein' the sea, just layin' there? If you was up here in town you could see the street, and folks comin' and goin'."

"Folks!" said Donald Hayes, with a laugh; "the sea is folks enough for me."

"Well, it's easy talking," threatened the other, good-naturedly, "but wait till you try to get Mary Ellis to live down on those God-forsaken rocks; Mary, or any woman, will say—'no, thank ye!' I don't see how your mother stands it, nohow."

Donald laughed again; he was a fine, vigorous young fellow, with an open, sunny, handsome face, and a mouth that found laughing easy. "Mother don't mind," he said; and then he jumped into his dory, which was tied at the wharf where they had been talking, and went slipping down the little tidal river towards the open sea. Donald was not concerned about his chance for getting a wife. "Mary won't mind the rocks," he might have said; but he only pulled his oars in as he passed a house near the river, and waved his hand at a girl up on the bank, who was hanging tea towels out on the currant bushes in the back garden.

"Hullo, Mary!" he called out; and she came running down the path to the river. She was a pleasant looking girl, not pretty, but fresh and honest, and with eyes that knew no secrets. As they met Donald's there was a joyous awywal in them.

"Can you get in?" he asked her, as the dory bumped against the piles that banked the grass at the end of the garden. Mary glanced at him, sidewise.

"I thought you were going to take me out yesterday?"

"Why!" said Donald, "I vow! so I was. Well, I declare I never thought of it till this minute! Ah, come on, Mary; don't be hard on a fellow!"

Mary demurred, with that delightful affectation of indignation at being neglected which only the girl who knows she is loved can assume.

Donald coaxed, rather humbly: "Just for a turn outside the breakwater. The sea's like glass. Come on, now, Mary. Never mind your hat, the sun's low. Mary, I'm going to sail Saturday."

Her face changed, as though a cloud had crossed the sun. She got in silently, and sat down opposite the young man; she looked at him once, and then watched the bubbles, leaping to the surface when the oars cut down into the swift flow of the tide.

"Your mother'll be lonely," she said.

"Bless your heart!" he answered, gayly, "what's a six months' voyage? I'll be back in December. And maybe you'll look in on her sometimes, Mary? Folks say our house is lonely, down on the shore; well, it never seemed so to me; if I can just look at the water I'm happy. I wish I could live on it all the year round. But maybe mother will feel lonely; and I'd take it as a favor if you'd see her sometimes?"

Mary nodded. "Of course I will."

"Don't let her worry if we're a day or two overdue; worrying is about the meanest business I know of. I worried about the Samuel P. Jones the time I let her to Dick Wheeler, and he was two weeks over due. I thought she'd gone to the bottom, and I'd be out my money I put into her. Well, I made up my mind then I'd never do it again; worry, I mean. Worrying wouldn't a-brought her up, if she'd been stove in and sunk; and if she was afloat, where was the sense?"

"We won't worry if you'll do your part, and write from every port," Mary said, a little tremulously; "You know you didn't write for six months the last time; and of course your mother was anxious."

"Well, I'm not much on writing," Donald admitted; "when I get a blamed pen into my hand I never can think of a thing to say. I don't believe I'll promise, Mary, but I guess I'll do it all the same."

Mary laughed and scolded. "If I'd only been teaching school when you were a boy," she said, "I'd have got that laziness out of you! I don't take any excuses from the boys, I can tell you—I make them write compositions every Friday."

"My!" said Don, admiringly, "I'll bet on you for bossing them. But I'm pretty glad you weren't teaching when I was a young one, because—because you would have been older than me now."

Mary's face flushed, and she did not meet his eyes; but she smiled and said: "Oh, nonsense!" and neglected to correct his grammar, which would have been in the line of her duty as school mistress of Seaport.

The town lay inland half a mile, scattered along the bank of a river that slipped down through salt marshes to the sea. It was a primitive little places; its main industry was fishing. Indeed, the pungent smell of drying fish, and the fishhouses, gray and weatherbeaten, and full of lobster pots and seines, betrayed that fact to any stranger. Dick Wheeler was almost the only man in Seaport who was not a fisherman. He had made an effort to follow the trade of his neighbors, but his one voyage on the Samuel P. Jones had been too unsuccessful to encourage him to put his father's inheritance into a vessel; instead, he bought a sawmill, and was growing richer every year. Mary never had occasion to correct Dick's grammar, nor reproach him for breaking his promises; but when, after her friendly scolding for his forgetfulness, Donald said, slyly, something to the effect that Dick Wheeler, who never forgot things, was probably the kind of pupil she had in her school, then "kin o' fellow that pleases you, Mary!" she tossed her head, and said: "Nonsense!" and this time with a spice of earnestness that seemed to please Don very much.

They had drifted around the breakwater, and the dory lay with idle oars, rocking up and down. Up on the cliffs was the low, weather-beaten house; its faint whisp of smoke leaning with the wind against the opal gray of the June twilight. Perhaps the jibes of the men at the wharf made Donald say, with sudden wistfulness:

"Well, Dick Wheeler's house is smarter, I must say!"

"Oh, it's too big," Mary objected, carelessly; and Donald agreed, with animation, and said, for his part, he liked Dick.

After that they were silent, looking out across the gray, breathing, lifting expanse, at the fading crimson in the west; and a little later they turned back. When they reached the foot of the garden, and he helped Mary out, Donald held her hand hard in his a moment.

"You'll mind what I said about mother, won't you? And—and you won't go back on me, Mary?"

She looked him straight in the eyes, and her lip quivered. "Take care of yourself, Don," she faltered. But he only laughed, because he was too happy to answer her seriously.

"Bless you! I'm not sugar nor salt." Then he told her he would come up after supper, and they would go to prayer meeting.

"If you don't forget it," she told him, sarcastically.

"Well, that's so," he acknowledged, humbly enough, "I must say, I'm good at forgetting. But I'm coming, just the same."

FROM A LAND OF HAMS

HOW CLAUS SPRECKELS GAINED ASCENDANCY IN HAWAII.

Came to America a Poor Lad. Figuratively He Has Sauerkraut in His Whiskers and Swears in Dutch Yet. A Man of Millions, but Don't Care for Society.

Claus Spreckels, the sugar king, would hardly attract attention in a crowd. He is of medium height, dresses neatly but unobtrusively and has a typical German face. His curly hair and beard, once blonde, are now white, but his eye is still clear and his skin remarkably smooth for a man of his age. The sugar king came to America from Westphalia, celebrated for hams, in 1830, twenty years before the man whose lead he is now following. When he landed in New York he had mighty little money in his pocket, his mental training had been of the most rudimental sort, and he had no knowledge of English. His most valuable possessions were robust health, a happy disposition and an enormous capacity for work. He began life here as a laborer in a brewery, toiling early and late, spending little and saving every possible cent. In time he bought a small retail grocery store down on Church street and began to accumulate money somewhat faster. Then came the gold fever, and he disposed of his grocery and set out for the coast. There he decided that the actual digging for gold was not to his liking. He went into the brewery business first and then into the grocery business again. He was successful from the beginning and in a comparatively few years was ready to retire with $50,000. But that was not enough and he went into sugar, importing the crude from the Sandwish Islands and refining it in San Francisco. In this venture he was more than successful; he proved a phenomenal money maker, emulating the financial giants of the seventies—Flood, Mackay, Sharon, Ralston.

CLAUS SPRECKELS.

At Hawaii he soon became the real monarch. On his first visit to the beautiful islands of the Pacific he succeeded in winning the enthusiastic friendship of King Kalakaua, who was sadly in need of money. Spreckels had money a-plenty; not the enormous sums now in his possession, but enough to relieve the king's necessities. Spreckels wanted land on which to plant sugar cane as badly as King "Calico" wanted cash, and in his royal capacity the dusky monarch was abundantly able to issue land grants and so fill the wants of his new found German friend.

Soon Spreckels established regular steam communication between Hawaii and San Francisco, and because his ships could make the voyage quicker and cheaper than the old sailing vessels it was not long before he was able to command the trade. In a little while he had all the planters on the island in his power. Meanwhile he kept advancing money to the king, who at the time was so completely under Spreckel's thumb that he more than once ordered the resignation of a cabinet that failed to please the sugar king. This did not last always, however, and before the death of Kalakaua there was a rupture between the monarch and the German. For a time during the reign of Liliuokalani Spreckels had as much power over her as he had ever possessed over her predecessor, but before the revolution this had greatly decreased.

One of the most interesting of Claus Spreckel's performances was his proposition, made in evident good faith some four or five years ago, to build an addition to the White House in Washington out of blocks of sugar. While experimenting with a process for the hardening of beet sugar for export he hit upon a plan that would practically petrify it. Treated in this way, the sugar king said, the saccharine substance would be as hard as marble and practically indestructible by fire or otherwise. Spreckels proposed to put up the sugar addition to the executive mansion at his own expense and then have it examined by a committee of experts. If they could find any fault whatever with the material he he said he would take it down and leave the original building as he found it.

Unlike most millionaires of the day, Claus Spreckels has never shown any desire to get into society. He married a wholesome German girl many years ago when he was a poor young man. She had been a domestic in the family of an Eastern sugar refiner and was not fond of style or desirous of shining in elegant circles, and no one will ever be able to say of her or her husband that they ever made fun for the nations by trying to break down the social gates.

Spreckels is proud of his German birth, though his accent is apparently Dutch instead of German, and he has never learned English well. When he is angry indeed it is not even easy to understand him, so imperfect is his enunciation, but he is said to have a large and varied assortment of expletives and to utter them in a perfectly intelligible fashion.

A Convincing Proof.

An old man went into a life insurance office and asked to be insured. The company asked his age. His reply was ninety-four.

"Why, my good man, we can't insure you," said the company.

"Why not?" he demanded.

"Why, you are ninety-four years old."

"What of that?" the old man cried. "Look at statistics and they will tell you that fewer men die at ninety-four than at any other age."—London Spare Moments.

Getting It.

"Fact is," said the one man, "I married because I was lonely, as much as for any other reason. To put it tersely, I married for sympathy."

"Well," said the other man, "you have mine."—Indianapolis Journal.

UP TO DATE PHOTOGRAPHS.

They Are Costly, But Their Charm May Be Perennial.

Being photographed nowadays is an elaborate process. Heretofore when a woman wanted her photograph taken she went to the studio and arranged about the size of the picture and the number she wanted. She gave a reassuring touch to her hair, sat down before the camera, turned her head a little to the right or to the left, as the artist desired, and, clamped on either temple, gazed fixedly, insipidly or otherwise, at a spot on the wall. Now the subject's possibilities are studied in detail. Nothing is left to accident. The fashionable woman of the cities who can afford it carries her various gowns to the studio with her and tries them on, each in turn, that the artist may decide which suits her best. She pays $50 for the photographs.

Her hair is arranged by skillful hands in different ways, that a style of coiffure may be chosen which will be appropriate not only to the contour of her face and head, but to the environments of the picture. The subject's hands and arms are criticised, likewise her throat and neck, to see whether a severe high costume or an evening gown will be used. The topics of backgrounds and accessories are discussed.

All of these tinted carbon photographs are taken full length. Maybe the subject will pose as a dame of the first empire, with skimpy satin gown, elaborate coiffure, jeweled girdle, fan and vinaigrette. Perhaps she stands, half turned about, with her back to the spectator and her pure profile deftly brought out on a dark velvet curtain. All women would not look charming in such a position. The artist knows whom to choose, and the subject will wonder at her own beauty when she sees the picture.

A willful, coquettish girl is posed as a modern Priscilla. The quaint spinning wheel and high backed chair, the small paned window at the back of the colonial room, form a charming contrast with her rich brocade gown and beaming face. The scant, puffed sleeves set off the rounded arms, the curve of the wrist, the hand that grasps the wheel is like a rare old painting, and the undulating outlines of the figure are suggested, not revealed, by the prim folds of the flowered silk frock.

These latter day photographs are like paintings and are likely never to grow old fashioned. They have the charm that distinguishes the portrait painters of the old English school—a charm that custom will not stale. They will not become out of date and grotesque, like the photographs of forty years ago, found in family albums. In those days a woman was hired to put the lights in the eyes, color the cheeks and paint the ribbon bows and artificial flowers of the ladies and the gay neckties and buttonhole bouquets of the gentlemen. The new photographs, be it a hundred years hence, always will be things of beauty, no matter what evolutions, contractions or diminutions may befall woman's dress.

SKY SCRAPERS.

Thirty-Five Stories the Probable Limit in Tall Buildings.

"The height of a building is limited only by the convenience of its tenants," said Mr. Bruce Price, the architect who designed the sky scraper in course of erection for the American Surety Company at the corner of Broadway and Pine street, New York.

"This convenience is dependent more or less upon the speed of elevators. When the time comes that the journey from ground floor to top story becomes too long for comfort, then the distance will have to be lessened; that's all.

"The strength of material has nothing to do with the case. We could build a good part of the distance to the moon if we could get persons to rent the upper floors. Practically, though, under existing conditions, I imagine that thirty-four or thirty-five stories will be about the limit. This is only a guess on my part, however.

"The steel construction so much used now in tall buildings is surprisingly simple and wonderfully strong. It is nothing, in fact, but plain truss work like a bridge. The iron mills have helped us wonderfully, too. It is now possible to get steel beams for girders thirty inches in diameter. The steel work is much quicker and easier to put up and makes a more substantial building than masonry.

"My building at Pine street would, I am sure, stand an earthquake that would shatter a much lower stone structure. To make such a building fall it would have to be tipped over beyond its center of gravity. Then it would all fall together like a log and would not crumble until it struck the earth.

"If this building were of masonry its walls at the base would have to be seven feet thick. They are now less than three. The steel construction lessens the cost of building very greatly and the time even more. As each story is supported on girders and nothing on the walls, it is not necessary to wait for the cement to set.

"The elevator people are keeping up with us nobly. The newer elevators are very fast. There are more elevators now in New York than there are street cars."

It has been said that the American Surety building would support fifteen more stories as it stands.

"And you?" asked the angel.

"Write me," said Abou ben Bunco, "as one who loves his country men."—Indianapolis Journal.

THE DEPUTY COLLECTORSHIP.

James J. Brennan Has Received Notice of His Appointment.

The report that ex-County Clerk John L. Crowell had won the contest for the office of deputy internal revenue for this district caused quite a sensation among the Democratic politicians.

Mr. Crowell was in Elizabeth yesterday, and to his friends who were tendering congratulations he said there must be some mistake about it. He had received a notice from Collector Connelly to go to Newark, but he did not think he had been appointed deputy.

Then Mr. Brennan appeared on the scene, and he said he knew there had been a mistake, because he had received a notice of his appointment in the early mail. He was out fixing up his bonds when he met Mr. Crowell.

Mr. Brennan was sure of his success, and he said that Mr. Crowell has been appointed to some position in connection with the income tax, which comes under Mr. Connelly's jurisdiction.

Has Sunday Fishing Been Made Legal?

The Somerset-Unionist Gazette says: "It will not reflect credit upon the New Jersey Fish Commissioners that they had eliminated from the Fish and Game law the clause prohibiting Sunday fishing. It was an easy thing to do without a single member of the Legislature noticing the omission. The remodeled law was handed to a member for introduction and he was informed that there were no important changes. It was never mentioned all through the discussion which followed that fishing had been taken from the Sunday section and no one would notice it unless the old law and new bill were compared carefully. As the law now stands it is made unlawful for a person to hunt with a gun on Sunday under a penalty of $20 fine, but he may fish with hook and line all day. A nice discrimination to make! Happily the blue laws remain under which Sunday fishers and gunners as well can be arrested and fined."

"Startling Specials."

In resonse to the "startling specials" announced in Edsall's advertisement in another column, there will doubtless be a crowd of eager buyers on hand to take advantage of the very low prices. He claims that no house in this part of the State is doing business on so large, liberal and truly metropolitan methods as his, and that he can positively save money to those who patronize his house. Everything is fresh and new, and of the latest fashion.

A PRINCETON CLUB ORGANIZED.

President Patton and Other Leading Lights Attend the Opening Dinner—Speeches, Toasts, and Election of Officers.

The Plainfield alumni of "Old Nassau" had a gay time last night as they gathered around the board in the Casino of the Union County Country Club, and dined, renewed acquaintances, regaled each other with the memories of their collegiate days, and listened to the toasts of the talented and bright minded men.

The occasion of the dinner was to assemble the Plainfield graduates of Princeton College, not merely to eat and make merry, but to form themselves into the Princeton Club, whose primal mission shall be the creating of a favorable sentiment among their younger friends as to the advantages which Princeton extends for accomplishment in the higher educational realm of the college world. This work was effected by the organization of the club with the following officers: President—W. B. Wilder; First Vice-president—Rowland Cox; Second Vice-president—E. W. Hedges; Secretary—Leonidas Dennis; Treasurer—Wilbur C. Fisk.

The Casino was arranged in an artistic and tasty manner for the occasion. A garden scene was run across the centre of the ball room, thus shutting off the stage part of it. On the sides were stage fences, surrounding and looming above which was a profuse display of potted plants and palms, while here and there among the foliage beautiful blossoms met the vision. Suspended at half angles on the sides of the wall and from a wire running over the garden scene the Princeton colors—orange and black—in the form of flags and banners hung as if to remind the diners of the fervor and enthusiasm with which they had protected the fame of old Nassau in sports and contests in their college days; and now they were here to perpetuate her glory and renown in the endeavor to send an influx of new and youthful blood to her halls.

The dinner table was arranged in the shape of a T. Along the centre of the table at alternate spaces were tiny candelabra, shedding a suffused glow of light through the orange-tinted shades, and between them potted plants lent an air of splendor to the scene of conviviality. Winding in and out among the candelabra, plants and tableware were two ribbons—orange and black. At the head of the table sat the older graduates, the younger ones ranging down the sides. Between the various courses the diners chatted and laughed and enjoyed a general renewing of acquaintance with one another. The menu was as follows:

Huitres.
Tortue Verte au Claire.
Caviar a la Princeton.
Filet de Sole, Daumont.
Pates de Riz Veau.
Filet Mignon, sauce Bearnaise.
Pommes Parisiennes.
Petits Pois Francais.
Punch en surprise.
Pluivier d'Ore,
Salad a la U. C. C. C.
Fromage de Camembert.
Glaces Fantaisies.
Petits Fours. Cafe noir.
Cigars. Apollinaris. Cigarettes.

The table was presided over by the newly-elected president, Mr. Wilder, who did the honors with much grace and informality, thus abrogating the conventional element that often attends such affairs.

On the menu the toasts were arranged as follows:

"Old Nassau".....Dr. Francis L. Patton
"Let all with one accord rejoice
In praise of Old Nassau."
"Yale".....S. St. John McCutchen
"The Yale News invites responses to the question, 'What is Yale's greatest need?' Life does not think at this moment of anything Yale needs more than a liberal share of defeat in various athletic competitions. Her renown as a winner of games and races is a little too complete."—Life.
"Harvard".....E. C. Perkins
"What care though rival cities soar
Along the storm-bound coast:—
Penn's town, New York and Baltimore
If Boston knew the most?"
"The Novel of Today".....Robert Bridges, '79
"He's a damned literary fellow."
"The Ladies".....Wm. T. Kaufman, '76
"The Lady or the Tiger."
"The Younger Alumni"...McCready Sykes, '94
"Brer Fox, he lay low."

It was 11 before the last course was finished, and after all had enjoyed a smoke and listened to the rendition of several up-to-date college songs by a Princeton quartette, President Wilder arose and in a facetious speech in which he humorously touched all the college fads and frivolities, introduced Dr. Francis L. Patton, president of the college. Dr. Patton said that he congratulated Princeton on the formation of an association that started under such bright auspices. The object of the association he did not consider to be for the glorification of the college, but to do a mission work among Jersey boys and send them to Princeton. The tenor of Princeton graduates was towards intellectual life. In fact almost the whole thought of Princeton is towards intellectuality. He said that by October 22, 1896, Princeton expected to be a university, though they have some university functions now.

Its greatest function is to contribute to the intellectual and moral forces of this great nation by making a high type and quality of citizenship, and these efforts were enough to merit the support of the intellectual forces of the country. He closed by saying that he expected great things from this club.

Mr. Wilder said that the time had now come to take up their foreign relations. According to the text on the toast card Yale must be scourged and rebuked in her conquests, and now he thought the proper time had come for such action. Therefore he would postpone Mr. McCutchen, and change the order of the programme by calling on Mr. Perkins of Harvard.

Mr. Perkins thought that in addition to the training one receives in college in an intellectual way, is that spirit of independence in thought in which he follows out his own ideas rather than those set down before him. The present spirit of political independence is an evidence of this. The gentlemen of Princeton had such a reputation for the old Puritanical spirit that he expected to be called upon to defend his college, for instance, the "brutal" sport of football which they play, but since he had come here among so many Princeton men, who presented such a front, his spirit of defiance seemed to have gone.

Robert Bridges, editor of Scribner's Magazine, responded to the toast of "The Novel of Today". When he was called up on the telephone a few days ago and invited to attend the dinner of the Princeton Club he asked as to the object. He was informed that it was to work up enthusiasm for Princeton, but when he arrived here he found the enthusiasm already worked up. Literature is a subject that concerns all colleges. Yale is a victor at football but Princeton is invincible in the literary field. The first article he ever wrote was turned over to Mr. Wilder, who was then in Princeton and the editor of a college paper. The tenor of that article was that Princeton needed more fiction. In latter years this seemed to be a fact. There are lots of different novels. There is the new woman novel, the sanitarium novel, the novel of scientific pessimists. The new woman was all right in some respects. It sought to take away some of man's responsibility in the management of affairs. That was a good tendency, for if a man knew that he could divide the responsibility he would seek a life partner so much the quicker. The writer of the scientific pessimist novel gains a smattering of knowledge from the Sunday papers and some other such channels and then he floods the literary field with scientific articles. But the kind that the Princeton is teaching is different, and is gained only by thorough study. Some say that the novel reflects life. This is not so, as evidenced in the works of Robert Louis Stevenson. Here was a man who had every incentive to write unhealthy literature, but it was of the most wholesome and heroic kind.

At the conclusion of Mr. Bridges' toast S. St. John McCutchen made his toast on Yale. He remarked that he always thought that if Harvard ever got ahead of Yale, it would be through the intervention of Princeton. Now he could see through all this changing of programme by President Wilder. He advised the alumni that by the organization of a club they display lots of zeal, but they must go beyond the annual dinner to make it successful. In concluding he said that Yale cherished Princeton as friends, but as foes they braved them.

"The Ladies" was the delicate toast which William T. Kaufman responded to. He proposed that the diners drink to the health of the ladies. This was done amid the clinking of glasses and the benign smiles of the ladies who were in the gallery viewing the graduates. Ever since the days of Eve woman had shown her influence on man. She is the exponent of gracious hospitality. There is no ambition or achievement which one ever wants to attain but what is associated with mother or wife. He again proposed a toast to the ladies, after which the college cheer was given.

McCready Sykes had "The Younger Alumni" to respond to. He said the need of such a club as had been organized was apparent when it was realized that for a period of eighteen years only two students went from Plainfield to Princeton. It is the idea of the association to head off the young man from going to the other colleges, when such an admirable institution is so near at hand. The younger alumni impress on the world whatever has been impressed on them in college.

After the toasts had been finished the quartette sang several college songs and the alumni finally dispersed, feeling imbued with the good fellowship of the dinner and its attendant sociability.

Among those present at the dinner besides those already mentioned, were: The Drs Hedges. Dr Murray, Dr James Hayes, Rev W E Honeyman, Dr P W Brakeley, Albert Atterbury, Augustus and Jacob Van Deventer, H C and Max Munger, J P Murray, W T Kaufman, Wilbur C Fisk, J L Myers, E D Schoonmaker, O G Waring, and Hugh B Reed.

GOOD FOR THE PLAINS.

Augustus D. Shepard Has no Intention of Leaving "The Gables".

So many rumors have been floating about to the effect that Augustus D. Shepard thought of selling or renting "The Gables", his beautiful home in Fanwood, near Plainfield, that he was approached the other day and asked if there was any truth in the current reports. "None whatever", he replied with emphasis, adding, that he and his family were very much attached to the home where they had lived for a quarter of a century, and that he hoped to live and die there, and regarded himself as a permanent member of this community.

Durand in Trouble Again.

Fred Durand is in trouble this morning. He is usually in trouble, but this morning he is in more trouble than ever. A few days ago a warning was published in The Daily Press by Mr. Tway concerning Durand's questionable methods in business. Durand made a reply yesterday through the same medium. The Daily Press had scarcely got on the street yesterday afternoon when Durand commenced to fill up on whiskey. Rather he continued to fill up.

As soon as he read his reply he thought he might as well keep at that sort of work while he was about it and so started to castigate Hadley, who conducts a music store on North avenue. He finally became so quarrelsome and disorderly that Policeman Robinson arrested him. This morning he made a great plea to get off before Judge Coddington, but as it was only a short time ago that he was released from Court on the promise to behave, the Judge was obdurate and sentenced him to pay a fine of $10 or go to jail for 30 days.

Park Races.

The young cyclers of Washington Park yesterday afternoon held two races on the Willow-Mercer avenue course. The five-mile handicap was won by Willie Roome, scratch, with Gustavus Faber, 20 sec., second. Henry Curtis, 20 seconds, fell on a curve after riding four miles, and though he pluckily mounted another wheel and continued the race he was unable to catch the leaders. The other event was a one-mile scratch, and was won by Henry Curtis after a most exciting race, with Willie Roome second. On the last half mile L. Baldwin slipped when rounding a curve, and fell. Small prizes were awarded to the winners.

Bad for the Base-Ball Outlook

A meeting was held in the Y. M. C. A. Building last evening to decide about taking the grounds at Seventh street and Monroe avenue for base ball grounds. It was learned that they could be secured for $50, but it would cost about $400 to put them in condition. The association does not at present feel able to expend this amount of money, and in consequence no definite action was taken.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. BUILDING ORDINANCE.

Board of Trade Committee Makes Report.

VARIOUS AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED.

The Committee to Meet with the Committee on Fire and Buildings Before Reporting to the Common Council.

A meeting was held last evening in the Board of Trade Building to hear the report of the committee appointed to examine the objections raised to the new building ordinance which it is the intention of the City Council to make a law.

Those present were Mayor Gilbert, F C Lounsbury, J E Martine, D W Martine, Eugene Laing, John D Runyon, B Frank Coriell, J B Coward, Fred Bird, Seaman Williams, Charles Fiek, David Rogers, J Fred MacDonald, Henry Liefke, Frank S Runyon, Frank W Runyon, ex-Judge W R Codington, Dr Jenkins, D W Littell, L B Woolston, George Griffin, H L VanEmburgh.

Chairman F W Runyon called the meeting to order, and stated the object, after which the committee, J B Coward, L B Woolston and John D. Runyon, made their report through J B Coward as chairman.

It was decided to read the sections in the ordinance which the committee thought should be amended, and as the sections were called the changes were submitted by Mr. Coward.

In section one it was recommended that it should apply only to buildings within the fire limits, and only to such as the owners may have adopted or had made plans and specifications for, for such erections, and to such buildings within said limits as are to be used for mercantile and manufacturing purposes or as churches or places of entertainment. That some time should be inserted within which, said permit, when required, should be furnished by inspector.

It was recommended that section two be erased entirely.

In section three, the third part referring to frame dwellings be also stricken out. That in the fourth part of the section it be altered to two inches of brick or other hard material. Fifth part to be altered to three or more frame houses, the partition walls to be of brick and carried up to the underpart of the roof. That the sixth part be stricken out.

In section five, part two, walls below grade to be laid in good lime or cement mortar, mixed with sharp sand, at the option of the owner.

Section six, that all frame or wooden buildings of more than one story in height shall be built with fire cut-off at each floor; floor beams shall not be less than 2x10 except third story or attic beams, which shall be 2x8, all well bridged. Second part of section six erased.

Section seven to read within fire limits.

Section 10 and 11 to be left out, or rate of insurance to be 75 per cent.

Section thirteen to be so amended as not to apply to piazzas or balconies or detached dwellings occupied as a family residence. Parts 7, 8 and 9 to be stricken out where they refer to bay windows.

Section fifteen, ninth part, with reference to the protection of adjoining owners, should be stricken out, and connected where the excavations do not go below 10 feet.

Section 17, reservation should be made for dwellings where a good ground bottom exists, then only four inches of concrete or footing corners shall be required.

Section nineteen, part six, stone walls to have brick joints on inside of walls to be laid in good lime or lime and cement mortar.

Section 21, first clause, height of walls to be not less then 24 feet above curb level.

Section 22, second clause, all interior party walls not exceeding 25 feet may be eight inches thick.

Section 26, was questioned as to whether it should apply to churches or other large assembly rooms.

Section 27, part three, strike out all after the word "obstructions".

Section 29, as to sand, strike out the words "of the best sand obtainable".

Section 33, amend by allowing 2x8 beams in three-story dwellings, and of small dwellings of certain sizes, with girders, and piers or even partitions.

Section 35, strike out "except as to buildings within the fire limits".

The above amendments were well received, and very thoroughly discussed by those most interested. It was discovered by many that the features thought to be the most objectionable would prove a benefit.

Questions were raised in regard to the building of towers on houses and churches, some thinking that 60 feet was not high enough to permit architectural beauty.

There were also objections to the thickness of walls required, 12 inches, 8 being thought sufficient.

The matter of drainage for buildings, gutters, etc., came in for a considerable amount of discussion.

It was decided by vote that the committee meet the Fire and Building Committee from the Council before submitting the amendments to the Council, and that when the meeting adjourned it be subject to the call of the chair.

The ordinance says that when the pile is 10 feet high, wood, lumber or other inflammable material shall be piled 10 feet from the line, and when the pile is higher the distance is increased. This is done so that in case of fire should the lumber fall, the distance would be far enough away so as not to affect the fence or building adjoining.

J. D. Runyon made objections to the above, thinking he would be deprived of the privilege of stacking his lumber in the old yard. But his fears were allayed, and when the principal features were explained he seemed satisfied.

Another point to which objection was raised, was in regard to spires on houses or churches.

J. E. Martine did not think that the 60-feet allowed was sufficient. He cited the Crescent Avenue Church with a spire of 150 feet, and thought that the limit should be raised.

In regard to the matter of gutters Mr. Martine thought they were a nuisance and should be abolished instead of compelling a man to have one. He thought the only benefits were to the tinsmith in that business.

When the subject of not allowing chairs or obstructions in the aisles of churches or halls came up, it was thought to be a good thing, excepting that people should be allowed to stand in the aisle.

Mr. Martine expressed his opinion in the way of a joke, that it might seriously affect Democratic meetings whose aisles were usually crowded.

It was asked by Mr. Woolston who was going to be building inspector. Mr. Fisk said he thought the fire marshal would be the proper one for the present. Mr. Woolston said that there was more work attached to this department than was generally supposed.

PLOT TO KILL FAURE.

Anarchists Scheme To Assassinate France's President.

Paris, April 19.—The Petit Journal announces that it has good authority for stating that the prefecture of police has detailed a number of detectives to investigate an anarchistic plot, the object of which is or was to assassinate M. Faure, the president of the republic, during the fetes at Havre, in honor of his visit to that city. President Faure, it will be remembered, represented one of the districts of Havre in the chamber of deputies, previous to his election to the chief magistracy of the republic. The prisoner is more cheerful than at any time since his arrest. He believes that the police have exhausted all their efforts to fasten the two revolting church murders upon him, and that, though the facts unearthed are damaging they are not sufficient to convict. The further assurance that his companions of the National guard would help to defend him against the charges which he will have to face, made him hopeful.

Buchanan sent for his counsel, Lawyer Gibbons, and for Herbert W. Knight, of Newark, N. J., who is a friend. He conferred with them as to applying to Gov. Morton for executive clemency, although he has little or no hope that the governor will interfere. Mr. Gibbons left at once for Albany to see the governor. Buchanan is now occupying a new cell, having been changed by Warden Sage, who is taking every precaution to prevent him from injuring himself. The death watch was placed over him last night. Warden Sage has sent out the invitations to the persons who will witness the execution. They are mostly physicians and newspaper reporters. Not more than thirty persons will be present. Jersy City, April 19.—Train Robber Perry spent another night in the Hudson county jail and was bright and cheerful this morning. The officials are making a hero of him. He has been given a new suit of clothes, clean linen and altogether looks like another man. Gov. Morton issued a requisition upon Governor Werts for the escaped criminals return to the Matteawan asylum, but before the requisition reached New Jersey Alexander Simpson, who is Perry's lawyer, went before Judge Lippincott and secured from him an order directing Sheriff Toffey to show cause why Perry should not be released, on the ground that his commitment was defective. The order is returnable this morning. Wednesday night a band of Salvation Army lads and lassies invaded the jail corridor and prayed and sang at Perry without producing any noticeable effect upon him.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

No matter to what country she belongs, or whether she be black or white, as a woman she desires to look well.

Women know the influence of beauty on men; men rarely admire a beautiful invalid, but they do admire a woman in whom is blended good features and perfect health.

There is no secret about a woman's beauty; it all lies in the care she devotes to herself, to removing from her system all poisonous impurities, and keeping at bay those fearful female diseases.

The flashing eye, elastic step, and brilliant complexion are never companions of a womb trouble; only the distressed expression and aches, pains, blues, faintness, dizziness, bearing-down feeling, etc., keep it company.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound removes female troubles promptly, and cleanses, invigorates, and consequently beautifies, the form of woman. Women, the world over, pay homage to it, and praise its discoverer. Your druggist sells more of it than all other female medicines.

GENERAL GRANT.

How Near His Personal Memoirs Came to be Lost.

A Valuable History Written by a Dying Man.—Proper Nourishment Enabled the Author to Live Until the Completion of His Book.

The fortitude shown by General Grant in writing the second volume of his personal memoirs while he was literally on his deathbed, excels even the remarkable courage exhibited by this famous soldier in his many achievements on the field of battle.

Col. Fred Grant, speaking of his father's last illness, says:—

"During the last four months of his sickness, the principal food of my father, Gen. Grant, was Bovinine and milk; and it was the use of this incomparable food alone that enabled him to finish the second volume of his personal memoirs."

Dr. T. H. Douglas, Gen. Grant's physician and friend, cordially indorsed the above statement.

What Bovinine did for Gen. Grant it has done, and is now doing, for thousands every day. It is the most wonderful concentration into a small bulk of all the life-giving, muscle, flesh, and blood-making elements of lean, raw meat ever produced.

It is in no way a medicine, simply a food invigorant, that by its strengthening qualities gives the worn-out or disordered vital centres of the body an impetus that again starts them performing their natural functions.

It is indorsed by eminent physicians everywhere, and blessed by thousands whose lives it has actually saved.

To neglect to use this wonderful food in all cases of debility, wasting diseases, overwork, stomach and nerve diseases, or for weak infants, chronic invalids, loss of vitality in old age, is to throw away one of the greatest chances of saving life.

AUSTRIA AGAIN SHAKEN

More Buildings Destroyed at Laibach Last Night.

Fever and Dysentery Break Out Among the 50,000 Homeless People—Many Deaths and the Sick Numbered by the Score—The Emperor Sends 10,000 Florins.

Vienna, April 19.—There was another severe earthquake at Laibach a few minutes before 6 o'clock last evening. Several buildings which had been unsettled by previous shocks were thrown to the ground. The wet weather and the scantiness and poorness of the food have caused fever and dysentery among the families who are camping outside the town. Many children have died and the sick are numbered by the score.

Few Houses Not Damaged.

Trieste, April 19.—There was another violent earthquake shock at Laibach at 10.40 a. m. It is now found that the recent subterraneous disturbances have damaged 98 per cent. of the houses at Laibach, and traffic and business there have been suspended.

The Emperor Sends Aid.

Vienna, April 19.—Emperor Franz Joseph has given 10,000 florins to the sufferers in Laibach. The railway company has provided 500 cars, and the war office has sent all the available tents. Beyond this, however, little has been done to relieve distress of the 50,000 homeless persons in the Laibach district.

OIL'S NEW SPURT.

It Went Up to 2.57 Yesterday, Then There Was a Slump.

Pittsburg, April 19.—Speculators were a trifle timid at the opening of the stock and oil exchange yesterday, owing to the break in oil Wednesday from $2.62 to $2.17, but they were immediately reassured by the opening quotation of $2.25 and a sale immediately afterward at $2.40. The market was steady and active all afternoon, but took a slight slump near the close. The highest point reached during the day was $2.57 and the lowest $2.35. It closed at $2.44 bid.

The Vanderbilt-Belmont Engagement Rumor.

Nothing Can Be Learned in London as to the Origin of the Rumor—A Close Friend of Mrs. Vanderbilt in Paris Says She Does Not Believe Things Have Gone So Far.

London, April 19.—Nothing can be learned as to the origin of the rumor that Mrs. Alva Vanderbilt, recently divorced from her husband, William K. Vanderbilt, and O. H. P. Belmont, of New York, were to be married secretly in London within a day or two, but there is not the slightest evidence of its truth. Mr. Belmont left London for Paris a week ago, and Mrs. Vanderbilt went to the continent about March 25. It cannot be discovered that either of them are now in London.

Openly Played the Cavalier Servente.

Paris, April 19.—It was impossible to communicate with Mrs. Vanderbilt last evening, as she and her daughter had gone to the theatre. One of her most intimate friends, who is thoroughly conversant with her ordinary affairs, was asked this morning whether it was true that Mrs. Vanderbilt would be married to Mr. Belmont in a few days. "I do not think things have gone quite so far," was the reply, "although I hear that Mr. Belmont has played openly the cavalier servente ever since Mrs. Vanderbilt's arrival."

A STRANGE NOTE FOR $300,000.

Brought to the Attention of the Fair and Stanford Estates.

San Francisco, April 19.—A stir has been caused in financial circles here over a note for $300,000 involving the Stanford and Fair estates. It was a surprise to the attorneys and executors of both sides. The note was forwarded by William G. Howell of New York, of whom nobody appears to have heard, to the First National bank for collection. Samuel Nilson, attorney for Mrs. Stanford, said he had not heard of it, but admitted that it might exist. It purported to be drawn by Mr. Fair to the order of Leland Stanford. It was for $300,000, was dated five years ago and was then within a short time, by its face, of being due. The signatures of both Stanford and Fair appeared good and no one wanted to say that they were forgeries.

THE PERSECUTED JEWS

Their Forced Emigration to the United States.

Condition of the Israelites in Russia Described by ex-Minister White. Treated with Contempt and Cruelty by the Lowest of the Pure Russians—Outcome of Many Causes.

Washington, April 19.—Our late minister to Russia, Prof. Andrew D. White, has contributed to the files of the state department a most comprehensive essay on the condition of the Israelites in Russia and the effects of their forced emigration to the United States. Mr. White said that there were about 5,000,000 Israelites in Russia, forming, at it was claimed, more than half the entire Jewish race, and these were packed together in the cities and villages of what was formerly Poland and adjacent governments.

Treated with Contempt and Beaten.

"Nearly forty years ago," says Minister White, "when, as an attache of this legation, I was for seven days and nights on the outside of a post coach between St. Petersburg and Warsaw, there being then no railway to the frontier, I had an ample opportunity to see something of those Israelites and of the region in which they live. They exist for the most part in squalor, obliged to resort to almost anything that offers to keep soul and body together. Even the best of them were then treated with contempt by the lowest of the pure Russians. I myself saw two Israelites, evidently of the wealthier class and richly clad, who had ventured into the inclosure in front of the post house to look at the coach in which I was, lashed with a coach whip and driven out of the inclosure with blows by one of the postillions, evidently a serf."

Few in Comfortable Circumstances.

In explanation of the question raised abroad as the strangeness of a nation's wish to expel a people who, in other parts of the world have amassed so much wealth, the fact is stated that but a very small fraction of them in Russia are wealthy; few even in comfortable circumstances. The vast majority of them are in poverty and a very considerable part in misery—just on the border of starvation. Even in the parts of the empire where the Israelites are most free they are not allowed to hold property in land or to take a mortgage on land, or to farm land, and of late they have even been, to a large extent, prevented from living on farms and have been thrown back into the cities and villages.

Outcome of a Mass of Causes.

Numerous instances are given by Mr. White of the efforts of eminent Jews to offset anarchy and nihilism. He also proceeds to show that crime and intemperance among the Jews are smaller in proportion than among any other class, and after reviewing others of the charges against the prescribed people, sums up by saying that "the whole present condition of things is rather the outcome of a great complicated mass of causes, involving racial antipathies, remembrances of financial servitude, vague inherited prejudices, with myths and legends like those of the middle ages.

Driving Them to America.

"Whatever the cause of the feeling towards the Israelites the practical fact remains that the present policy regarding them is driving them out of the country in great masses, principally to the United States and Argentine Republic." He points the inference that the present attempted "Russification" of the Czar's dominions is partly responsible for Jewish persecution. Any discussion regarding a change is generally met by the statement that Russian questions are largely misrepresented by the press of western Europe; that there is a systematic propaganda against Russia in England, Germany, Austria and Italy; that England does, or allows, worse things in her Irish evictions and in her opium traffic, and the United States in lynch law proceedings and treatment of the Chinese, than any done or allowed in Russia; that, in short, Russia is competent to take charge of her own internal policy, and that other powers will do well to mind their own business.

Akin to a Period in Our Own History

"This feeling, says Mr. White, "is closely akin to that which was shown sometimes in the United States before the civil war toward foreign comments upon our own 'peculiar institution,' when representations by such philanthropists as the Duchess of Sutherland, George Thompson, M. P., and others were indignantly repelled." Mr. White predicts that a reaction cannot long be deferred

MOTHER GOOSE UP TO DATE.

There was a man called Li Hung Chang
Who might have known much better, Ah,
He jumped into a war with Japs
And lost his shirt, et cetera.

And when he found his shirt was gone,
With all his might and main,
He jumped into a Peace Commission
To win it back again.

Sing a song of gold loans,
The lion and the lamb;
Sixty cool odd millions
Borrows Uncle Sam.
But, sir, when the bond is due,
Another song he'll sing
For when it comes to pay the debts
That's quite another thing.

Little Boy Blue,
Come blow your horn,
Or you will get left
As sure as you're born.
And if you blow loud enough—
Mark me for that!—
We'll send you to Congress
To talk through your hat.

Simple Simon met old Hymen
On his way from Paris;
Said Simple Simon to old Hymen,
"Pick me out an heiress!"
Said old Hymen to Simple Simon,
"What's your title, say?"
Said Simple Simon to old Hymen,
"'Love' is all, I pray."
Said old Hymen to Simple Simon,
"Bless me! you're a chump;
We'll pay two millions for a 'Count,'
But 'Love' has had a slump."
So Simple Simon left old Hymen,
Starting home by steerage;
He's searching now some back door route
To sneak into the peerage.

THE FIGHTING SCHOOLMASTER.

He Didn't Look It, but He Was a Terror to Evil Doers.

"It was not my privilege to be a pupil of the famous Chris Page, the fighting schoolmaster," said a State of Maine man, "but I saw him display his qualities once under circumstances that caused me to remember him gratefully.

"A dapper little drummer traveling for a Boston house arrived late with his wife at a country hotel where I was stopping. After supper the two went into the parlor, which opened upon the office, to wait while the landlady got their room ready for them. The red shirted man was talking profanely and so loud that his voice reached the parlor, and the husband closed the door between them. Immediately the big fellow kicked the door open and threatened to annihilate the small drummer if he ventured to close it again. At this point I noticed that the tall man in the chimney corner was looking glum, but he said nothing. As soon as possible the little drummer got his wife out of the room into the hallway, and they were passing up stairs when the big fellow, catching sight of them, made a remark insulting to both and started toward the husband. He had made but a step when up got the tall man.

"'Stop there, my friend!' he said in a tone drawling but full of business. 'Don't go any further or say another word in that lady's hearing.'

"The big fellow turned in astonishment, then doubled his fists and ground his teeth.

"'Who in hell are you?' he asked. 'Do you want anything of me?'

"He took a step toward the tall man, and in an instant he caught a straight right hander in his neck that sent him down to the floor. But he was hard and meant fight. He got upon his feet, made a rush for his antagonist, and for a few minutes there was a fight so lively that the two men seemed to fill the office. I climbed upon the wood box, and the other spectators got behind the counter or dodged about. But it was soon evident that the man in the red shirt was getting all the punishment. As the two fought rough and tumble, the tall man was so lithe and clever that his heavier opponent could not land a blow on him or force him to a clinch, but was hammered all over the room. There were some attempts made to separate them, but one peacemaker went down in a heap, owing to a tap on the jaw from the tall man's elbow, and the landlord, crying peace, was sent smash through the door into his own parlor and brought up on the floor in the middle of the room, where he sat still and waited.

"The fight ended by Red Shirt getting jammed in a corner, where he held his head down and devoted all his efforts to saving his face. The tall man hit him two or three times where he pleased, and then asked:

"'Do you think you'll insult the next lady and gentleman that happen to come to a hotel where you are disgracing yourself?'

"There was no answer, and the tall man gave him a thumping blow in the face.

"'You think you will, then?' he said. Thump, thump, came two more blows.

"'I'll be damned if I ever do,' roared the fellow, with a suddenness and sincerity that were funny.

"'Those are sentiments I approve,' said the tall man. 'How do you think you'd like a drink after your exercise? Come up, all hands, to the bar and drink with Chris Page to the future well doing of a reformed sinner.

"'The devil!' muttered the big man, as he mopped his nose and blinked tearfully out of a pair of swollen eyes. 'You licked my brother once. Why didn't you say who you were in the first place and save us two all this trouble?'"—N. Y. Sun.

Not Dry Enough to be Rattled.

The Rev. Mr. Psalmjones, who was not feeling as well as usual, the church was cold, and some of the big boys near the door undertook to enliven matters by coughing in chorus and throwing in now and then a startling imitation of a sneeze.

The preacher stood it patiently a few minutes and then paused in his discourse long enough to say:

"If I hear any more of that noise back there, young men, I'll walk you out of this building one by one, or all in a bunch, I ain't particular which. I've had dealings with fellows of your stripe dozens of times, and I know how to manage 'em. Now you quiet down mighty quick or there'll be trouble."

A deathlike stillness pervaded the church. He waited a moment to let it take effect.

"I know I'm a little dry this morning, brethren," he said, "but I'm not so dry that anybody can rattle me. The text says in the third place," etc.—Chicago Daily Tribune.

His Foot In It.

Belle (sarcastically)—That settles it! Then I do renounce you forever.

—A meeting of the Board of Directors of the Plainfield Building and Loan Association was held last night, at which arrangements were made for closing the first series about June 1.

—A boy living on Westervelt avenue came very near being run over by a horse and wagon on Front street, near Park avenue, yesterday afternoon. He was riding a bicycle, and the rail of the trolley road threw him under a horse's feet. The driver, who was a woman, pulled up her horse just in time to save the boy.

WHITE OF PLAINFIELD.

A TRIANGULAR ATTACK.

Between Frost, Ferrets and Owls, the Rats Had Little Show.

Farmer Ralph Belyea, Jr., of Beechwood, near Scranton, missed a lot of eggs from his cellar. He laid the loss to rats, and one evening he placed a pair of ferrets in the cellar. The next morning the snow between the house and road was full of rat tracks, and the farmer found that the ferrets hadn't nabbed a single rat.

The agile egg thieves had become terrified over the presence of their relentless little enemies and had chased to the barn. He carried the ferrets to the barn in the evening and the next morning he discovered that the rats had fled to the hog house. He removed the ferrets to the hog house, where they killed two rats that night, the rest of the demoralized army having scurried to a stack of hay a few rods out in the meadow.

After supper that evening the farmer carried the ferrets to the haystack, and within a minute or so he saw scores of rats scoot from under the hay and go scampering around on the crust in the bright moonlight.

They steered straight away from the farm buildings and their actions showed plainly that they were afraid to return to them for fear of encountering the dreadful ferret again. The intense cold made them furious, and they squealed and fought and tumbled over one another in a vain endeavor to find hiding places in the snow covered field.

The ferrets stayed under the hay and every few minutes a rat would come kiting out as if the hay was on fire. Presently they all huddled together and began to jostle and jump and claw and climb as though each was bound to force its way to the center of the bunch and get warm. The struggling heap was larger than a half bushel basket, and the colder the fighting animals got the angrier and noisier they became. The weakest ones stood no show whatever, and were obliged to remain on the outside of the pile.

While Belyea was studying the lively antics of the harrassed egg stealers a huge owl dropped from the sky without the slightest noise, alighted on top of the squabbling group, flapped its wings twice and then arose with a squealing rat in each claw and then sailed away.

The silent arrival and departure of the fierce night bird didn't seem to attract the attention of the shivering little beasts, and they continued to huddle together and to claw one another as if their lives were at stake.

Hardly had the owl vanished in the moonlight than another one with big wings settled down on the moving mass and bore away two more rats. The heap kept on trying to get warm. More owls came flitting to the spot shortly, and Mr. Belyea said it was clear to him then that the shrill voices of the rats had reached the ears of the big eyed birds in the nearby woods.

When the owls had carried off more than 20 of the rats, the remainder suddenly took fright at the appearance of an uncommonly large owl that swooped upon the top of the heap and separated at once. Some of them ran under the hay, where the ferrets nailed them in a jiffy, while others skipped up the sides of the stack and crowded into the hay. The ferrets must have ousted them in the night and driven them out where the owls had a chance to gobble them, for when Mr. Belyea removed the hay to the barn in the morning there wasn't a live rat to be seen anywhere on the premises, while four dead ones were found with the ferrets at the bottom of the stack.

Wholesale Marriage.

The details of an extraordinary marriage scheme which has just been concluded have now transpired at Montreal and the affair is attracting a good deal of attention owing to the novelty of the proposal. The scheme has been launched in connection with a large contingent of settlers of French extraction who came from Michigan and have been gathered together by a priest of the name of Father Paradis. They are now preparing to start for Temiscamingue, in the province of Quebec, where lands have been secured. Among the colonists are 200 bachelors and an equal number of maidens, who are severally engaged to be married, but their weddings have not yet taken place because of poverty. Father Paradis, to urge each couple to join the colonists, promised to give each a farm and to have a great marriage ceremony in public in April, when the whole 400 are to be married at the same time. On this condition they joined.

A BOROUGH FIRE.

The Gong Failed to Work and the House Was Burned.

The house of Charles Wyckoff, corner of Dupont and Duer streets, was discovered to be on fire yesterday afternoon at 2:30.

Fire-alarm boxes 143, 145 and 152 were pulled but none of them worked, so that before the fire department were notified and got to work, the flames had practically destroyed the structure, and the efforts of the firemen were directed towards the house of Jacob Higginge nearly opposite, which they saved.

A few of the household goods of Mr. Wyckoff were removed. The house was insured for $600 and the furniture for $500, in the agency of W. A. Woodruff. Owing to the hose being stretched across the tracks the trolley cars were compelled to transfer passengers at that point for over an hour. Mr. Wyckoff remained till 11 watching his goods, but soon after he left some sneak stole a bureau and its contents. They were traced as far as Greenbrook road where a ribbon was dropped.

PROVED GOD BY MATHEMATICS.

Prof. Oliver Solved Problems That But Few Could Understand.

Although only 66 years old when he died, Prof. Oliver of Cornell, was venerable in appearance ten years ago. He was one of those men so profound in his specialty, mathematics, that it was said that there were only two men living beside himself, one the Professor of Mathematics at Johns Hopkins University and Cayley, the great mathematician at Cambridge University, England (recently dead), who could understand the processes which Prof. Oliver originated and carried to their conclusions.

Like many other great men, Professor Oliver was noted for his absent mindedness. It was this characteristic that was responsible for all the stories told about him.

Cornell students who were in Professor Oliver's classes always compared notes when they met after graduation about the frequency with which Prof. Oliver used to forget to come to his class room. He would often be seen running across the campus half an hour late and heading in a bee line for his room in the old North Building, now called White Hall.

One or two of the boys usually waited for him. They were the "grinds." The others would be around some corner peeking out "to see 'Jimmy' run." He always conducted his classes on the conversational plan, and those who missed a lecture because he was late know that he would take especial pains to explain it to them the next time.

One morning Prof. Oliver missed three classes in succession. It was supposed that he was ill. As the students began going home to their lodgings toward noon they found him standing in front of a residence on Buffalo street, half way up the hill to the university, leaning heavily on the iron fence and watching intently a ball that was being tossed in the air by a small fountain in the yard.

He had noticed it on his way up and had become interested in the curves that the ball was making. He began to figure out their mathematical formulæ, and stood there hour after hour oblivious even of himself. When the boys began speaking to him on their way home he recalled that he was due on the campus, and went hurrying on, only to find that it was noon instead of 8 o'clock.

Prof. Oliver was deeply interested in religion and social subjects. It became rumored about the campus that he thought that he could prove the existence of God by mathematical processes. That was enough for half a dozen bright fellows who was always looking for something novel in college life. They decided to ask him to give a lecture before the entire student body on the subject. They drew up a paper and circulated it seriously and it was signed generally.

Prof. Oliver said when the paper was presented to him that he was afraid that he might be a little too complex for the general students, but he also said that he would try to simplify his language. He asked that no freshmen should come to the lecture because he thought they could not understand what he was talking about and because he didn't want any chance of a disturbance. The scheme took like wildfire. At the appointed time fully 400 students gave up their noonday meal hour to crowd the largest lecture room in the place. It was twelve years ago, and in those days that meant that two-thirds of the entire student body were present. Prof. Oliver received an ovation when he arose to speak. He said that his task was involved, but if all would give him close attention he thought that he could make out a good case. In two minutes he was so deep that no one could understand him. He used terms and expressions that none but himself had ever heard. His mathematical demonstrations on the blackboard were so intricate that there were symbols used that no student had ever seen.

The audience remained in the attitude of rapt attention. Prof. Oliver always had a way of indicating when he had scored a point, and when the proper time came thunders of applause shook the room. Prof. Oliver was delighted. Not a sign of disturbance was raised during the whole lecture, and when the hour was up and the boys had stood it as long as they could they rose up to indicate that the time for ending had come, and they cheered and cheered the professor, who blushed profusely. It was a triumph for Prof. Oliver. He complimented the audience on the ease with which they had followed him, and flattered himself delicately by saying that he had made an unusually earnest effort to simplify the lecture. Some of the wags who could best control themselves went up to him to thank him and to ask questions about "one or two little things" they didn't quite understand, and the professor was last seen towing half a dozen of them down the hill, using language to them compared with which Sanskirt would have been as simple as A B C.

THE JEWISH PASSOVER.

Servants Sit at the Same Table With Their Masters.

The Jewish Passover is kept in commemoration of the departure of the Hebrews from Egypt in the year 2448, by the Hebrew calendar.

The sentiment of Hebrew nationality at this time receives new impetus, and thus, for thirty-two centuries, a sentiment of patriotism seems to have been kept alive, as if to make possible the realization of the cry, "Palestine for the Hebrews"—a political question which seems very likely to be solved in exactly that way.

The less orthodox Jews observe the first and seventh days of the Passover; the more orthodox, the first and second and the seventh and eighth days of the Passover.

Upon the table is found these symbols of the miraculous past: The "matzah" or unleavened bread, in memory of the bread eaten on the march from Egypt; a small bone of a lamb in memory of the faith exhibited by the Hebrews in Egypt when they slew the lamb, or goat, which were Egyptian gods, and the Korban Hagiga, or festive sacrifice, in memory of the triennial festive sacrifice of the Hebrews in Jerusalem. After more or less of prescribed prayers these symbols are removed to make way for a fine course dinner.

Neither leavened food nor fermented liquors may be used during the feast. On the day before Passover the first born fasts in the memory of the death of Egypt's first born, or, if not old enough, his father fasts for him.

Every servant is present at the table. Every one is obliged to drink four cups of wine, and all take part in the liturgical service. Washing the hands is followed by distribution of parsley dipped in vinegar, or sprinkled with salt and water, breaking by the host of the middle "matzah" in the pile of three "Passover cakes," and general touching of the dish containing the lamb's bone and egg. After removal of the latter from the table, the youngest in the company asks for the reason of this celebration, and receives a curious account of the Pharonic slavery and the miraculous deliverance. The "matzah" in the dish is exhibited as a memorial of freedom; the lettuce or horseradish, of bondage. After eating the bitter herbs dipped in "charosheth," a compound of almonds, apples and other fruit, emblematic of the Egyptian lime and mortar, the master of the household again distributes biscuit and wine, and all unite in responsive thanksgiving. Provision is made for the entertainment of the prophet Elijah in case he should appear to announce the coming of the Messiah. The door ajar and the watchful attendant attest the readiness of the prophet's welcome. The custom of opening the door is also a public invitation for Christians to enter and see for themselves that no blood is used for Passover, to give lie to the charge of child murder which has been made against the Jews. The Hallel (psalms, cxiii.-cxviii.) is then repeated, the fourth cup of wine drained, and the whole ceremony held to be as acceptable to God as the actual offering of the Passover lamb.

Between the recital of the Haggadah and the closing hymns of joy and gladness at the Seder, the bounteous supper is enjoyed, hilarity is universal, but excess is avoided.

While the above may be said to be the custom of the majority of the Jews, it is not of all—some going in for less and some for more form.

SPEED OF WILD DUCKS.

The Ducks Made 66 2-3 Miles an Hour and Outfly the Geese.

Of all the migratory birds the American wild pigeon and black duck are well up towards the front as regards long and rapid flight.

The speed of the pigeons can only be estimated, while that of the ducks can be establishe l by observation.

Some years ago the writer and a scientific friend measured off on the shore of a large Western river a line exactly three miles long, and each took a station at opposite ends of the line. The object was to note, by means of preconcerted signals, the time a flock of ducks took in passing up or down the river, near the stations.

During three hours on the morning of a bright October day, observations were noted of the time of passing the stations of nine different flocks. Upon comparing watches it was found that the average time was two minutes and forty two seconds, thus showing the speed per hour to be sixty six and two third miles, or one mile in fifty four seconds. As showing how uniform was their flight a difference was found of only five seconds between the greatest and the least intervals of time.

As numerous flocks of wild geese were flying in the same neighborhood observations were also taken to test their hourly speed. Two points twenty nine and two third miles apart were selected, both of them being connected by telegraph. We succeeded in identifying four out of seven flocks which passed over both places during the four days we were on the watch. The mean hourly speed was found to be a fraction over fifty four miles. The goose has been long supposed to be the fastest of all water fowl, but this experiment proves that he is far behind the wild duck.

Chinese News From Baltimore.

Joe Kee, who is regarded as a very intelligent Chinaman, who speaks English without any perceptible accent, and who is "Mayor of the Chinese colony" in Baltimore, told last night how the Chinese here regard the war waged by Japan against their native country. Joe was stretched out on a bed in his comfortably furnished room on Park avenue. He had just finished reading a Chinese paper and was smoking opium. Said he:

"The trouble has been all caused by that Chinaman who went to Japan to make peace—Li Hung Chang. If he don't look out he will lose his head, and the members of his family will meet the same fate. There are twenty-one States in China and only one of them is at war. The others do not know that there is a war.

"Li Hung Chang wants to be Emperor of China. He is the greatest general in China and stands second to the Emperor only. He owns a coal mine in Japan and his daughter married in the family of the Japanese Emperor. But that was only discovered a few months ago."—Baltimore Sun.

A Deadly Insult.

"And you recognized me at once?"

"Why, certainly—by your hat."

A BEGGAR REASONS.

HIS METHODS SHOW A PROFOUND INSIGHT INTO HUMAN NATURE.

Why He Avoids the Rich. Stands Outside a Restaurant, But Never Begs From a Hungry Looking Man. A Full Stomach Begets a Kind Heart.

He was a wretched looking chap, so thinly clad that he was really an object of pity. He had sought a secluded corner at the entrance of a cheap restaurant. For a while it seemed as if he had chosen the spot merely to escape the chilling blasts of the cutting wind. Many men passed into the place, but he spoke to none. Finally one who had just completed his meal came forth. The man started forward, hesitated a moment and then resumed his former position. Soon another man, apparently in a great hurry, came from the restaurant, buttoning his coat as he walked. In a moment the poor fellow stood in the way, and barely had he uttered his request for help when he was rewarded with a dime.

A moment later a group of young men in very high spirits passed into the restaurant. To an ordinary student they would have been just the right men to approach for alms; but the beggar saw them not. It was only to certain men returning to the street that he made himself known. It was but the work of a moment to pick an acquaintance with the fellow, and when he found that I was interested he talked freely about his plan.

"I had to do a good deal of thinking about it when I first started in," he said. "I can't get work now, and when I have work I can only keep it for a little while on account of rheumatism. When I saw I had to beg I thought I might as well do it right or not at all. If you know anything about men's faces and clothes you don't have to do any guess work at all. I can tell long before I get near a man what my chances are with him, and if I don't think that it's ten to one I will get something I don't try him, for there's no good in wearing yourself out and getting common. Some fellows go along the street and try to touch every well dressed man they meet. They couldn't do anything worse, for everybody sees what they're doing and knows they are professionals and steers clear of them. The only time to go up against well dressed men as a straight thing, without regard to their faces, is when they are full and feeling happy over it.

"The average well dressed man or woman are the hardest kind of a person to hit. They do lots for charity but it's in a different way—societies, schools for kids, kindergartens and missions—and they think they are doing enough. If any one hits them on the street they put them down for a professional. You have got to judge the well dressed people by their faces and general manner and let their clothes count for nothing.

"Whenever I have to do any street work I always select the people of the lower middle classes, who don't put on any front at all—women especially. I mean people who live comfortably, but haven't got any too much money to spare. Say, you may think I'm stringing you, but I would rather have one nickel from one of them than a quarter from a fellow who could stand it and bad it to burn. Funny, but I feel just as sentimental about that sometimes as if I were earning it, and I would earn it if I had the chance to do so.

"Now, you take this stand of mine here to-day. There's three men who gave me something—two nickels and a dime. I have been here half an hour and I've only struck five men. I missed two. Well, three out of five don't look like bad guess work, if you want to call it so, does it? This is the cheapest restaurant in the neighborhood. There's the Imperial, Marlborough and all the other big hotel restaurants I could have taken, but I'll bet I wouldn't have got a thing from the people that came from any of them. The men who go in here don't pay over 25 or 30 cents for what they eat, and I'm willing to take my chances with them right along.

"I always wait till a man comes out. Some people think it ought to be the other way, for the reason that a man who was hungry would be more apt to give out of sympathy for the man who was hitting him for money for something to eat. But I didn't figure it out that way. You see, these are pretty hard times, and there's more people in hard luck than there ever was before. Now, it's bad enough to be in hard luck, but it's worse yet to be hungry, and when a man is up against both games little things will bother him that wouldn't affect him at all if he had his stomach full. The reason that pretty nearly every man who comes in here is either in hard luck or else he is a miser who don't want to spend any more than is actually necessary. If it wasn't so you know they would all go to the big restaurants in the hotels, for you know as well as I do that the right kind of a man likes good things to eat and nice clean service if he can possibly afford it.

"Well, I am onto the misers, and leave them alone. When the decent man comes out he feels better for having had his dinner; he is ready for business, and life is a great deal brighter to him than it was half an hour before. I ask him to help me. He says to himself, 'Well, I feel pretty good. This fellow is in worse luck than I am. I know what it is to feel hungry. I won't miss the five cents very much,' and then I get it. When he hands it to me he feels better for it, and he looks it, too, and if he has been doing things that are not quite up to the limit he consoles himself with the fact that he ain't such a bad fellow after all. And he ain't, either. So you see there's two of us happy, and if there were more of it the world would be happier. Thanks, boss."

Then the philosopher went to dinner.—N. Y. Herald.

Pleasant Odors in New York Saw Mills.

Pleashut and pungent is the odor that comes from the mahogany saw mills of East Eleventh street, along with the prolonged musical notes of the saws. The odors, aromatic and almost peppery, have a tropical suggestion that clothes the logs again to the imagination with their native bark and tops them with limbs and branches and green leaves.—New York Sun.

It is said that the Emperor of China and the Dowager Empress told Li Hung Chang that he need not return unless he carried a treaty of peace with him. We can imagine the great viceroy softly humming to himself the Western ditty, "You Can't Lose Me, Charley," as he left the presence of the Brother of the Sun and the Sister of the Moon.

THE THOUGHTS OF ANIMALS.

A Dog That Plays a Euchre Hand for All It Is Worth.

That a dog possesses an intelligence capable of discriminating on the value of cards to such an extent as to bet in a rational and sensible manner is a hard pill to swallow unless washed down by the conclusive proof of a test experiment. Yet the pill has to be swallowed.

Those who saw that representative of the highest development of reason in the canine race, Miss Scotty, perform on the stage of one of the theatres last week, looked with wonder upon the feats this collie was able to accomplish; first accepting them as what they seemed to be, then deciding them too marvelous to be true and putting them down as clever tricks—stage tricks in which the dog merely followed the signal of her trainer or a confederate back of the scene, working as an automaton without reason or judgment except as to obeying the signal. This is but natural, as the conditions surrounding a performance on a stage invite fraud.

However, to a number of gentlemen who inquired from the dog's owner, Mr. Lewis, if the performances was really an exhibition of the dog's intelligence and reasoning power or merely a trick, Mr. Lewis responded by offering to give a private exhibition under test conditions, as the Spiritualists put it, to prove that the dog possessed the power of discrimination and reasoning developed to a wonderful degree. Accordingly a room was engaged and the dog began her work. She picked out the cards of a pack as they were called with but few mistakes. One of these mistakes was perhaps interesting as exhibiting the peculiar effect of a set idea taking hold of the mind. Miss Scotty got the idea early in the performance that the queen preceded the king in order of value, a most chivalrous notion to be sure, yet wrong. No matter how much Mr. Lewis objected she insisted upon picking the queens before the kings when selecting the cards according to their value.

Some other tricks were gone through, when two hands of cards were dealt, and Miss Scotty being given her hand was asked to play. When asked how much she would bet, she picked up the third card in the row, siguifying she would go three. And she made her three tricks as well as any expert card player could have done. But this erroneous idea of the order of the cards still clung to her in playing her hand. She held the ace, king, and queen of trumps. She played the ace first; then the queen and the king. Of course they were all of the same value under these circumstances, but Mr. Lewis objected, saying: "Now, Scotty, you've played wrong. That's not the way you have been taught. Now, what comes after the ace?"

Scotty answering picked up the queen. Do what he would, he could not get the dog to change her idea in this regard. Not unlike some men who, although they have been taught better, insist that wrong is right to the end of their days.

Miss Scotty played cards with several of the gentlemen present and quite overpowered an inveterate card player who prided himself upon his knowledge and science in dealing with cards, by beating him two games without giving him the least show.

Mr. Lewis left the room after Miss Scotty became better acquainted with her spectators and allowed the dog to work at the command of one of the party. It was quite difficult to get the dog's attention away from the door where her master went out, but nevertheless she performed some tricks, selecting cards and numbers named, sufficient to remove all doubts as to the genuineness of her performance.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A JOHNNY REB'S WILD RIDE.

His Unmanageable Horse Took Him Through the Federal Ranks in Battle.

Some of the most amusing stories are those which have a serious side. An old Confederate soldier the other day told a story that is very laughable in these days of peace. It was after John Morgan was made a general that a company was formed of some of his old squadron who had just returned from Camp Chase, where for some time they had been imprisoned. The company had been formed by a man named Quirk, a reckless, daring fellow, and a stranger to fear. The company went by the name of Quirk's Scouts.

At this time the company was down in Middle Tennessee and was skirmishing around for a fight, when they suddenly came upon a regiment of Federal cavalry. In a short while the two bodies of soldiers were standing face to face, and the bullets were flying thick and fast through the air. The fight that followed was a desperate one, and each side seemed determined to stand its ground. Suddenly, as the fight was at its hottest, a horse was seen to dash out of the Confederate line and start in a direct line for the Yankee regiment. On the horse's back was a man named English, who was leaning back in his saddle and pulling with all his might in a futile effort to stop his frightened horse. The animal was yellow in color, and in running took long and clumsy jumps. The rider finally saw that he could not stop the animal and he made up his mind to make the best of his situation. He leaned forward in his saddle until his head almost touched his horse's neck and his hands clasped the bridle near the bit. Even the rider's ears seemed pinned back, so great was his effort to make himself as small as possible. His face was as pale as death. On went the animal toward the regiment, turning neither to the right nor left, and closer and closer did the rider keep to the animal's body.

The Yankees saw the horse with its rider making straight for them, and they were seized with consternation. Some of the soldiers ceased firing and looked excitedly at the half maddened animal flying toward them. In a short while he reached the regiment, but did not stop. The Federals almost fell upon each other in their efforts to get away from the horse's heels and a regular panic followed. The animal went plunging through the center of the regiment, foaming at the mouth and with head down. The horse and rider dashed on through the entire regiment, and the Yankees kept making way for them all down the line. Not a shot was fired until he had gotten out of range, and then nearly half of the regiment, who had managed to recover themselves from their astonishment, fired at a cloud of dust rising in the air, but the horse and rider were at a safe distance.

The horse made a complete circle, returning to the Confederate company in safety. When the rebels saw their comrade had returned without a scratch from such a dangerous ride, they almost forgot the fight before them, and there went up a great cheer.—Courier Journal.

COME EVERY DAY.

Whenever you come you find fresh features in Furniture and Household Wares to greet you. Just now nothing seems impossible in the line of economy in this store. Whatever you want maybe you can fill it here at a third—often half—the price you'll pay elsewhere. For instance:

PARLOR SUITS.

$20—Whoever thought to see such a splendid suit as this for such a little price? You'll wonder how the material can be bought for so small a figure and not count the making. Not many, only enough to keep the sale going this week, so you'd best be quick. Mahogany finished frame, five pieces.

MATTINGS.

15c. the yard and made in Japan. You know what that means. Quaint patterns, woven carelessly on a bright colored background. Some of the very prettiest patterns of the season. Brand new styles and the kinds that will win your approval.

DINING CHAIRS.

Fragile and delicate, stout and sturdy, and every one of them serviceable as can be. You needn't spend much time; close your eyes and choose, you can't go wrong. They are the most cheerful looking chair you ever saw, and the prices $1.25 to $3.00, with twenty-five cent go-betweens.

CARPETS.

High priced or low priced, the lining and the making and the laying free. That's what brings business to our carpet room. And you pay less here for the carpet than you're likely to pay elsewhere. Scores of fresh rolls added weekly, among them new patterns in the 65c. Tapestry Brussels and Super Ingrains.

An Unequaled Offering. Buy a bedroom suit here. You'll save the cost of spring and mattress. We give a strongly woven wire spring and mixed mattress with each bedroom set sold. THE SUN'S FASHIONS.

NEW EFFECTS DEVISED IN EVER POPULAR BLACK AND WHITE.

Alpaca Coming Into Favor Again. Black Satins in Great Demand. Models of Bodices and Their Trimmings. Latest Disposition of the Persistent Box Plait.

The fashions, which are presumably the latest and most novel productions, are puzzling combinations of elegance, elaboration and expense. One or two inquiries as to the price of some coveted article of dress will leave no lingering doubts in the shopper's mind, and she soon comes to the conclusion that there is nothing really inexpensive but the things she does not want.

Black and white effects are to be as popular as ever this season, and black and white striped silks will be well represented among the summer gowns. But the stripes are narrow and closer together than they were last year. Black lace and black velvet ribbon are used to trim white muslin gowns, and one feature of this combination is an immense bow of black velvet ribbon on one side of the front of the bodice at the edge of the yoke and quite close to the sleeve.

Black satins are in great demand for both day and evening gowns, and the skirts are usually plain. If trimmed at all, according to Felix, they must have narrow lines of jet or bands of embroidery on the seams. To make this sort of trimming effective they must be cut umbrella shape, with many gores, and very full at the bottom.

While the sleeves of the modern gown are, perhaps, its most conspicuous figure, the bodice is the point where the trimmings flourish, and the variety of models with strikingly unusual combinations which are brought out for inspection are simply beyond enumeration.

The latest disposition of the persistent box plait, which so commonly adorns the bodice, places it on either side of the front, instead of in the middle, and a chemisette of lace or finely tucked muslin is shown between, and the fullness is drawn more closely in at the waist, leaving very little, if any, of the pouched effect in front. Very useful and dressy waists are made of dotted black net over changeable silks, with full puffed sleeves. They are striped up and down at intervals and have puffs with double ruffles of narrow cream white Valenciennes, with a tiny band of jet in the middle. The collar may be of black satin ribbon, like the belt, or of net over the colored silk, with a little ruffle of the cream edge standing up around the neck. A wide box plait of black satin, thickly embroidered with jet beads and sequins, is an effective trimming for the front of a waist.

Fashion has a wide reputation for being fickle, but she has been loyal enough to the fancy for accordion plaited chiffon, which is still as popular as ever.

Lace butterflies, thickly spangled with jet and in various sizes, are much used for dress trimmings. They are applied on satin skirts at regular distances, and nestle in the puffs of the sleeves with great effect. In small sizes they are very pretty on black satin capes, set on a little distance apart all over the satin, which is trimmed on the edge and at the neck with a ruche of pinked taffeta silk. Glittering trimmings of all kinds are a very important part of the dressy gowns, capes and hats.

There are no end of fashionable shapes among the spring jackets. They are cut both double and single breasted, with lapels very high, or very wide and very low, skirts full and fluted, or with the fullness pressed down in plaits like a man's coat, and one is just as good style as the other, providing the jacket is short. The first model is of biscuit colored cloth, made with odd wide revers of white cloth, striped with jet and showing the latest novelty in sleeves. Another model, called the Carmen, is made of the same cloth, with revers of open work cloth over ivory white satin.—N. Y. Sun.

The Era of Old Age.

Senator Morrill, of Vermont, who is eighty-five years of age, has announced that he will accept a re-election at the end of his present term. This incident will make frisky young folks of seventy-one or seventy-two, like John Sherman and Governor Morton, feel like they are still eligible to be right, and President, too.—Globe Democrat.

SENDS HIM A BEAUTIFUL ROSE.

Every Time the Millionaire Comes to Town He Gets a Memento of Gratitude.

A New Orleans lady who had three children to support by her literary work was properly introduced, and her worthiness vouched for by a friend, to P. D. Armour, of Chicago. Mr. Armour became interested in the "brave little mother," so heroically fighting the wolf from the door, and assured her that his assistance was at her command.

One day she called, having spent her last quarter for a rose, which she kept carefully concealed under a faded shawl, for what could one give a twenty millionaire, said she, "but a flower?" The doorkeeper returned with an answer to the effect that "Mr. Armour was too busy to see her." Taking the rose from under her well worn shawl, she wrote on a slip of paper: "So was God Almighty busy when He was making this rose." Then she went back to the little, cheerless room that she called "home." In about thirty minutes one of Armour's boys came knocking on the door and said: "Mr. Armour would like to see the lady and wished her to come to the office at once."

When she got there the rose was in a big glass gracing the middle of Mr. Armour's desk. He met her smiling and said: "You have taught me a lesson as good as a minister." But the telephone bells were ringing and still he talked on about the children and their education and her own health, etc. Then he put two $100 bills in her hand and told her to cheer up, that he would always be her friend.

She was a picture, coming down those office steps, and when one of Mr. Armour's private secretaries remarked something about "tears in her voice," she told him that she was giving such men as Mr. Armour a chance to get a seat in heaven. "But his mother educated his heart," said she, "I can only educate my children's heads." She is married now, and resides in New York in a private residence up town, and every time Mr. Armour comes to New York she sends him a great white rose.—N. Y. Herald.

YOUTHFUL CHAUNCEY DEPEW

He Was Having Fun and He Thought Nobody Would Recognize Him.

A funny sight which cost you nothing, is Chauncey M. Depew coming down Madison avenue in the early morning on his way to his office. There are few people on the street and he seems to think that there are none at all.

He thoroughly enjoys himself. He is little boy Chauncey, and is having just barrels of fun. In one of his hands he carries an umbrella, and he swings both hands with joyful abandon. His strides are long and ungraceful; a roguish smile broadens his countenance; the lips which have made men roar with laughter and cheer like demons are wide apart or else whistling some popular tune, as the twinkling eyes gaze toward the heavens. His whole appearance suggests "I'll play you marbles for keeps."

Two hours later if you see him on the street he will be walking properly and carrying his cane daintily, and would at once be taken for a swell and very dignified man of the world.

He is a boy only on the mornings when he arrives at the offices of the Central long before the clerks. On other mornings he usually rides. The boyishness not unmixed with triumph still twinkles in his eyes when he asks his private secretary, Mr. Du Val, to compliment him on his enterprise. If Mr. Depew lives to be 100 years of age he will not be old.

A FORCED APOLOGY.

How Lord Churchill Frightened the Wits Out of a Dude.

At an entertainment once where Lady Randolph Churchill was playing on the piano, says Kate Field's Washington, a tall youth was observed paying a languid and rather insolent attention to the music, standing close enough to the performer to have his comment easily overheard by her.

"Lord Randy" was close at hand, too, and presently heard the vapid youth remark:

"Deuced fine music, you know, but it lacks weal soul."

To the critic's astonishment a muscular young man with a long mustache, whom he had not noticed before, whispered in his ear:

"For a shilling I'd wallop the life out of you!"

He hastened to withdraw, but without discovering the identity of the author of the menace. The next day to his delight he received an invitation to the Churchill's home, which he accepted with avidity. On entering the house he was met by his threatening neighbor of the night before, whom he at once discovered must be Lord Randolph. He proceeded no further than the entrance hall, for Churchill beckoned to the drawing room and out floated Lady Churchill.

"This fellow has come to apologize to you for the remarks of last night," hissed Lord Randolph. "Now," to the stranger, "down on your knees!" Down went the dandy, lisping out the most abject plea for forgiveness.

Then he was turned over to the footman to be put ignominiously out of the door, while the host followed his retreating figure with a roar of derisive laughter.

KIPLING NAMED AFTER A LAKE.

Rudyard Lake the Godfather of the Celebrated Writer.

Rudyard Lake, which has beaten the record this winter of all English waters by covering itself with two feet of solid ice, had previously been immortalized in a very different fashion. It would be irreverent, and to some extent incorrect, to say that this mere is Mr. Rudyard Kipling's godfather, but to it he certainly owes his name. Nearly 30 years ago John Lockwood Kipling was strolling along the picturesque shore in the charming companionship of Miss Alice Macdonald, when he plucked up courage to make there and then an offer of his hand and heart. To commemorate that happy summer evening's walk the son of their subsequent marriage was named Rudyard, and he certainly has given the genius loci no cause for shame.

CHAPTER II.

The day after the big three-master, with Donald as mate, dropped down the river, Mary drove down to Mrs. Hayes' with her little cowskin trunk strapped into the back of the buggy.

"I'll stay a week," she told her father. But at the end of a week Donald's mother was ill, and somehow the week lengthened into a month. And then Mrs. Hayes said she felt the loneliness more than usual, and if Mary would stay?—"just a week or two longer," she pleaded. A week or two meant a month or two; and after that, well, Donald was coming home the middle of December, so what was the use of leaving his mother?

"She's not fit to be alone," Mary told her own mother. That was how it happened that when the dark December days began to close in around the little gray house, that clung so close to the shore, Mary was on hand to fix the glass at the west window of the kitchen, so that the old mother might sweep the horizon for a sign of the Samuel P. Jones' sails.

ON THE RIVER ROAD.

"I don't expect him on time, child," she would tell the girl, "but by Christmas day sure;" and then they would smile at each other.

The months of waiting had not been anxious ones; there had been no heavy storms along the coast, and that was somehow an assurance that there had been no heavy storms anywhere else. But Christmas day came and went; and the old year slipped into the new, and the Samuel P. Jones had not come. Explanations and excuses multiplied; declarations that all was well grew more insistent; instances of delay were repeated over and over; but it was the first of February before news came.

Wrecked off the Azores; it was feared all hands were lost.

"Feared;" not known. That was what Mrs. Hayes and Mary said to each other. Everybody knew a dozen instances of sailors picked up in open boats; of desert islands; of drifting rafts. No; the idea that Don was dead could not be accepted; there are some people one cannot associate with death; it is not appropriate. So Don's mother and sweetheart held on to hope.

Those awful, breathless days of despair, and refusing to despair, and then despair again, were filled to Mary with intense and immediate anxiety about Donald's mother. Mrs. Hayes was very frail at best, and it seemed as if this must kill her; indeed, if Mary had not kept on hoping for her, she must have died. But little by little she came back to life, and to the acceptance of the fact that Don was dead; and then one day, six months later, hope sprang again into sudden vigor and certainty; a sailor in Plymouth, who had known him, was told by a man who had just come in in a merchant Indiaman, that he had seen Donald Hayes in the street in Calcutta. He had not spoken to him, for he had lost sight of him again, but he had seen him. Through one mouth and another this news came to Seaport, and was brought down to the gray house on the rocks. Mary used to say afterwards that when she heard it it seemed to her that she should die of joy. Then came the waiting for the letter from Don which must, of course, be on its way. These two, who loved him, guessed with the instinct of women bred by the sea, the whole story; the wreck; the rescue on an outward-bound vessel; the long voyage; the first port Calcutta, and the instant dispatch of letters to them.

"We may hear any day," Mary said; the color had crept back into her face, and the light to her eyes; and yet, waiting, and waiting, and waiting for Don's letter, light and color waned again. It was months before she whispered to Don's mother the ghastly thought that the sailor had been mistaken, and that Don had not been seen. She said it to be contradicted. And at first it was contradicted sturdily and cheerfully. But by and by they both grew too wise for self delusion, and dully took up the burden of living again.

Fortunately there was no complication of poverty to make Mrs. Hayes more wretched; she had enough money for Seaport's standards of living; Don's earnings had never been relied upon; they were uncertain at best, and had mostly been put into the Samuel P. Jones. Still, things had to be managed for the old woman, and it came to be a matter of course for Mary to live with her.

So time went by placidly, without happiness, but with peace; and on Mary's part, with that deepening love which is the strange gift that Death sometimes bestows on those whom he robs. Although there had been no words that bound her, she knew that she was bound; and it seemed to her that all the world—her world—must know it, too. So when, one winter afternoon, as they were walking down the river road, Dick Wheeler spoke out, and asked her to marry him, her refusal was full of outraged love.

"Perhaps you don't know it, but Donald Hayes and I—" she said, the color hot in her face, her eyes threatening him with a straight look.

"Oh," said Dick, blankly; and was silent for a moment, looking with absent eyes at a big coaler coming up the river to one of the wharves; she was being towed by three dories, and Mary said, nervously, something about its being hard work. Dick did not seem to hear her.

"No," he said, in a low voice, "I didn't know that there was anything settled between you and Don. But, anyhow, it's nearly two years since then, and—"

"Do you think that makes any difference?" she flashed out. "Do you think I'm that kind of a girl? If it was twenty years, it would be just the same!"

And poor Dick, abashed, began to say that it would be different if there was any chance, but Mary knew there wasn't; and perhaps, sometime—

"Chance?" she cried, the tears brimming over suddenly. "No, there's no chance; I know that. But do you suppose I'm—I'm faithful just because he might come back?"

"Well, if you had any hope," the young man insisted, "of course I would understand; but you haven't; and, oh, Mary, won't you just let me care for you? I'll be satisfied with that, if you'll just take me?"

"I'll never take you, Dick Wheeler!" she said, panting and nearly crying, "and—and don't you ever say any such thing to me again!" As she spoke she flew suddenly ahead along the road, and left Dick looking dejectedly after her. He had meant to "see her home," but after such a rebuff he had to turn back or at least appear to turn back. He really skulked doggedly behind her, for he couldn't let her go down the lonely road in the darkness.

Mary's face was still flushed when she came into the kitchen, and found Mrs. Hayes trotting about, making biscuits for tea. The little old woman looked at her keenly for a moment; she had her suspicions and her hopes. Dick Wheeler had stepped in earlier in the afternoon to ask how she did—"to pass the time of day," Mrs. Hayes said; and in a casual way had asked when Mary would be in. "He wants to meet her, and walk home with her," she chuckled to herself; "well, well, that's right. That's how it ought be. I hope the child will take him."

There was a curious inconsistency about Don's mother. She loved Mary for her faithfulness to Don, but—why should the girl lose a good chance? She had no small fears of any discomfort to herself, any neglect—she knew Mary! So, with the best will in the world, she tried to further Dick's suit. She talked about him a good deal; his money, his providence, his good heart; and the fine bow window he had built in his dining-room.

"Dick, he's all for use and comfort, and his wife," she reminded Mary with vast significance, "will be more comfortable than most folks. She won't have to carry water in from the well, the way you do here; he's got it running in the kitchen!"

"There are worse things than carrying in the water from the well," Mary said, decidedly; and Mrs. Hayes said to herself, disappointedly: "There! well, she is set! Poor Dick, I guess there ain't no chance for him."

ORDEAL OF A LIFE.

BY GILBERT PARKER.

His chief occupation in the daytime was to stand on the bench by the small barred window and watch the pigeons on the roof and in the eaves of the hospital opposite. For five years he had done this, and it was the one thing in his whole life during that time which had a charm for him. Every change of weather and season was registered there as plainly as if he could see the surface of the world. In the summer the slates seemed to have a great fire beneath them, for a quivering hot air rose up from them and the pigeons never alighted on them save in the early morning or in the evening. Just over the peak of the roof could be seen the topmost branch of an oak, too slight to bear the weight of the pigeons, but the eaves under the projecting roof were dark and cool, and there his eyes rested when he tired of the hard blue sky and the glare of the roof. He could also see the top of the hospital windows, barred up and down, but never anything within, for the windows were dusty, and all was dark beyond. But now and then he heard bitter cries coming through one open window in the summer time, and he listened to them grow fainter and fainter, till they sank to a low moaning, and then ceased altogether.

In winter the roof was covered for months by a blanket of snow, which looked like a shawl of impacted wool, white and restful, and the hospital windows were spread with frost. But the pigeons were the same—almost as gay, and walking on the ledges of the roof or crowding on the shelves of the lead pipes. He studied them much, but loved them more. His prison was less a prison because of them, and in the long five years of expiation he found himself more in touch with them than with the wardens of the prison or any of his companions. With the former he was respectful, and he gave them no trouble at all; with the latter he had nothing in common, for they were criminals, and he—he had blundered when wild and mad with drink, so wild and mad that he had no remembrance, absolutely none, of the incident by which Jean Vigot lost his life. He remembered that he had played cards far into the night, that they had quarreled, then made their peace again; that the others had left, that they had begun playing cards and drinking again, and then all was blurred, save for a vague recollection that he had won all the money Vigot had and had pocketed it. Then came a blank. He waked to find two officers of the law beside him, and the body of Jean Vigot, stark and dreadful, a few feet away.

When the officers put their hands upon him he shook them off. When they did it again he would have fought them to the death had it not been for his friend, tall Medallion, who laid a strong hand on his arm and said, "Steady, Converse, steady!" and he had yielded to the firm, steady pressure.

Medallion had left no stone unturned to clear him at the trial, had himself played detective unceasingly, but the hard facts remained there, and on a chain of circumstantial evidence Louis Converse, the young seigneur, was sent to prison for ten years for manslaughter. That was the compromise effected. Louis himself had said only that he didn't remember, but he could not believe he had committed the crime. Robbery? He shrugged his shoulders at that—he insisted that his lawyer should not reply to the insulting and foolish suggestion. But the evidence had shown that Vigot had all the winnings when the other members of the party left the two, and this very money had been found in Louis' pocket. There was only Louis' word that they had played cards again. Anger? Possibly. Louis could not remember, though he knew they had quarreled. The judge himself, charging the jury, said that he never before saw a prisoner so frank and outwardly honest, but warned them that they must not lose sight of the crime itself, the taking of a human life, whereby a woman was made a widow and a child fatherless.

And so with the few words the judge sentenced the young seigneur to ten years in prison, and then himself, shaken and pale, left the court room hurriedly, for Louis Converse's father had been his friend from boyhood.

Louis took his sentence calmly, looking the judge squarely in the eyes, and when the judge stopped he bowed to him, turned to the jury and said: "Gentlemen, you have ruined my life. You don't know and I don't know who killed the man. You have guessed, and I take the penalty. Suppose I'm innocent, how will you feel when the truth comes out? You've known me more or less these twenty years, and you've said with no more knowledge than I've got that I did this miserable thing. I don't know but that one of you did it, but you are safe, and I take my ten years."

He turned from them, and as he did so he saw a woman looking at him from a corner of the court room with a strange, wild expression. At the moment he saw no more than an excited, bewildered face, but afterward this face came and went before him, flashing in and out of dark places in a mocking sort of way. As he went from the court room another woman made her way to him in spite of the guards. It was the little chemist's wife, who years before had been his father's housekeeper, who had been present when he first opened his eyes on the world.

"My poor boy! My poor boy!" she said, clasping his manacled hands.

He kissed her on the cheek without a word and hurried on into his prison, and the good world was shut out. In prison he refused to see all visitors, even Medallion, the little chemist's wife and the good Father Fabre. Letters, too, he refused to accept and read. He had no contact, wished no contact, with the outer world, but lived his hard, lonely life by himself, silent, brooding, studious—for now books were to him a pleasure. And he wrote, too, but never to any soul outside the prison. This life had nothing to do with the world from which he came, and he meant that it should not.

So perfect a prisoner was he that the warders protected him from visitors, and he was never but once or twice stared at, and then he saw nothing, heard nothing. He had entered his prison a wild, excitable, dissipated youth, and he had become a mature, quiet, cold, brooding man. Five years had done the work of twenty. He lived the life of the prison, yet he was not a part of it, nor yet was he a part of the world without. And the face of the woman who looked at him so strangely in the court room haunted him now and then, so that at last it became a part of his real life, which was lived largely at the window, where he looked out at the pigeons on the roof of the hospital.

"She was sorry for me," he said many a time to himself. He was sorry for himself, and he was shaken with misery often, so that he rocked to and fro as he sat on his bed, and a warder heard him cry out even in the last days of his imprisonment, "Oh, God, canst Thou do everything but speak?" And again: "That hour! the memory of that hour, in exchange for my ruined life!"

But there were times when he was very quiet and calm, and he spent hours in watching the ways of the pigeons. And he was doing this one day when the jailer came to him and said: "Monsieur Converse, you are free. The governor has cut off five years from your sentence."

Then he was told that people were waiting without—Medallion, and the little chemist and his wife, and others more important. But he would not go to meet them, and he stepped into the old world alone at dawn the next morning and looked out upon a still, sleeping town. And there was no one stirring in the place, but suddenly there stood before him a woman, who had watched by the prison gates all night, and she put out a hand in entreaty, and said, with a breaking voice, "You are free at last!"

He remembered her—the woman who had looked at him so anxiously and sorrowfully in the court room. He looked at her kindly now, yet he was dazed, too, with his new advent to freedom and the good earth.

"Why did you come to meet me?" he asked.

"I was sorry for you," she replied.

"But that is no reason."

"I once committed a crime," she whispered, with shrinking bitterness.

"That's bad," he said. "Were you punished?"

She shook her head and answered, "No."

"That's worse," he added.

"I let some one else take my crime upon him and be punished for it," she said, an agony in her eyes.

"Why was that?" he said, looking at her intently.

"I had a little child," was her reply.

"And the other?"

"He was alone in the world," she said.

A bitter smile crept to his lips and his eyes were all afire, for a strange thought came to him. Then he shut his eyes, and when he opened them again discovery was in them.

"I remember you now," he said, "I remember I waked and saw you looking at me that night! Who was your husband," he asked, eagerly.

"Jean Vigot," she replied. "He left me to starve."

"I am innocent of his death!" he said, quietly and gladly.

She nodded. He was silent for a moment.

"The child still lives?" he asked. She nodded again. "Well, let it be so," he added. "But you owe me five years—and a lost reputation."

"I wish to God I could give them back," she cried, tears streaming down her cheeks. "It was for my child, he was so young!"

"It can't be helped now," he said, and he turned away from her.

"Won't you forgive me?" she asked, bitterly.

"Won't you give me back those five years?" he replied, meaningly.

"If the child did not need me I would give my life," she answered. "I owe it to you." Her haggard, hunted face made him sorry. He, too, had suffered.

"It's all right," he answered, gently. "Take care of your child."

And again he moved away from her and went down the little hill with a cloud gone from his face that had rested there five years. Once he turned around. The woman was gone, but over the prison a flock of pigeons were flying. He took off his hat to them. Then he went through the town looking neither to the right nor left and came to his own house, where the summer morning was already entering the open windows, though he had looked to find the place closed and dark. The little chemist's wife met him in the doorway. She could not speak, nor could he, but he kissed her, as he had done when he went condemned to prison. Then he passed on to his own room, and, entering, sat down before the open window and peacefully drank in the glory of a new world. But more than once he choked down a sob that rose in his throat.—N. Y. Herald.

Senator Call Electioneering.

The popularity of Senator Call is entirely with the lower classes—the cracker element—who consider him the greatest man on earth, and will not vote for a legislative candidate unless he agrees to support the Senator for re-election whenever his term runs out. When Congress adjourns Mr. Call comes home, puts on a gray hickory shirt, a pair of ragged breeches, a coat with large holes at the elbows, an old tan colored, perspiration stained slouch hat and gets into his sulky for an electioneering tour through the State.

He travels over the sand hills and through the pine forests, stopping at every cabin "to pass the time of day." He kisses all the children, asks for a "snack" to eat, and when the farmer's wife offers him butter he always prefers sorghum on his bread. When night overtakes him he puts up at the nearest farmhouse, no matter how uninviting it may be, and when he goes to bed holds out his ragged trousers to his host and says:

"I snagged my pants in the brush today, and I'd be under everlasting obligations if your good wife would mend them for me."

Of course the woman would sit up all night to patch the garments of a United States Senator, and she puts in her prettiest stitches, but he rips off the patch in a day or two and plays the same game in the next county. The name of the women in Florida who have mended Senator Call's pants is legion, and it is the proudest event in their lives.—Chicago Record.

The Utility of the Hairpin.

Instead of a hook, it buttons boots, gloves and such like.

Instead of a needle and thread, it will fasten together a ripped seam.

Instead of mucilage, it fastens together the woman reporter's sheets of copy paper.

Instead of a corkscrew it will open a bottle; instead of a paper knife, it will cut open magazine leaves.

Instead of a candlestick, it does good service straightened out, with one end jabbed into a candle, the other into the mantel.

It is so useful, the wonder is how men get along without 'em. And they don't, very well.—Roseleaf.

A MAN OF JOKES.

ARTEMUS WARD MADE LAUGHS FOR A PROFESSION.

Miss Kate Martine Sketches the Life and Peculiarities of Charles Farrar Browne—Had a Keen Sense of the Ridiculous.

The fourth of a series of papers on five great humorists was read in All Souls Church last night by Miss Kate Martine. In substance she said:

Artemus Ward, whose Christian name was Charles Farrar Browne, was born in a little hamlet called Waterford Flats, in Maine, which was one of the provincial villages common to Maine. He first saw the light of the world April 7, 1834, and as late as 1884 his aged mother still lived in the house he was born in. When but 13 years of age his father died and he commenced his newspaper work. As a boy he was full of pranks, and the older persons who were acquainted with the youth propheseied a bad record for him. Brown's personal appearance was anything but prepossessing and he is remembered as one of the most verdant youth that ever set foot in Cleveland. He was almost slovenly at that time but after he commenced lecturing his toilet became almost a fad with him. His watchful attention to his mother characterized his whole life and her happiness and welfare were the ultimate aim of his plans. Whether Ward knew the felicity of married life in reality or whether Betsey was just a wife of his I do not know. We are quite safe to presume, however, for who but a married man could speak so unfeelingly of a bachelor, when he says "An old bachelor is a poor critter", and then goes on into his peculiar style of writing and tells of all the pleasures they miss. I have looked in vain for his opinion of the girl bachelor, but can find nothing, so conclude he had no opinion of them. As a newspaper man he was not altogether a success, and his growing reputation as a humorist, together with his dislike for routine newspaper work, were the occasion of his entering the lecture field in 1861.

At first he was not successful, but finally became one of the most prominent lecturers. His pen was always held in wholesome awe by his fellow journalists. His bad spelling was one of his charms. I must confess it almost seems as if anyone could be funny in this way, but the bad spelling of a poor joker is always silly. His wit was keen, sharp and irresistible. He never made an enemy because he never sacrificed a friend. His pages show that he was very fond of the people he laughed at. He had no abode and made loafing an accomplishment. To charm and accident he owed much that was merry in his nature. I well know it is not good for a woman to announce before a public audience the name of the man for whom she cherishes a fondness, but I cannot help confessing a fondness for Artemus Ward. His keen sense of the ridiculous strikes a very tender chord. If any one wants an antidote for all blues let him invest in a copy of Artemus Ward's works and he can lay in a supply of laughter to last him the rest of his days.

CASH CARS AND STORE DISPLAY.

The Celebrated Sweezy Patents Adopted in a Plainfield Store.

The busy corner store of VanEmburgh & Son in the Babcock Building keeps up to date not only in its stock of seasonable bargains but also in the line of fixtures. For the convenience of the clerks and the accommodation of customers the Two Vans have for some time had in operation the celebrated Acme Cash Railway, which is a development of the patents of M. C. Sweezy of Fanwood, who personally puts up the fixtures which he invented.

His system of cash cars is so highly satisfactory, that this week other Sweezy patents were put in. The improvements added are store display fixtures which are so adjustable as to permit of splendid display of goods, and at the same time are themselves ornamental.

The Acme Cash Cars and Store Display Fixtures are a most useful invention, and have besides other points of superiority the merit of being comparatively inexpensive. They are manufactured by the New Haven Store Fixture Company of 67-83 Court street, New Haven, Conn., to whom correspondence should be addressed.

HAPPY GREETINGS.

TWO CONGREGATIONS UNITE IN WELCOMING THEIR PASTORS.

Methodists Give a Reception to Revs. Barnes and O'Donnell.

The reception and entertainment given in Vincent Chapel last night by the Ladies Aid Society and the Epworth League was the occasion of gathering together a large number of members from the First M. E. Church and Monroe Avenue Chapel, who became acquainted with one another and started the conference year filled with fellowship and the desire to accomplish greater results in the religious field.

A well rendered cornet solo was given by Raymond McGee, and there was given a series of shadowgraphic views, entitled Sarah Jane, the school ma'am. With shadows a love story between two country young people was illustrated, while the poetry describing the antics of the pair, and the maid's hard hearted father, was read to the audience. Those who took part were Walter McGee, S. W. Clark and Miss Trenham, with Mrs. James R. Joy as reader. The sketch was quite ludicrous and caused considerable applause at its conclusion.

Rev. Dr. C. R. Barnes was called on for a few remarks, and those he made were very practical and appropriate to the occasion. He spoke of the work that should be done in the church during the coming year. He suggested and advocated that three objects be set down by each member which they would endeavor to accomplish. First to be loyal and proud of the church. Some time ago he had counted thirteen different institutions in Plainfield that the members of the M. E. churches in this city were practically supporting. He questioned whether any of the members could consistently go elsewhere and still be loyal to the church. He wanted them to make up their minds that they would attend the two Sunday services and prayer meeting each week. The second object was to cultivate the acquaintance of one another by coming to the church socials and being friendly with all with whom they came in contact. The last object was to resolve to see to it that the current expenses of the church were paid as fast as incurred. As he closed his remarks he introduced Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, the new pastor of Monroe Avenue Chapel.

Mr. O'Donnell is a young man who has a very interesting manner of speech, and his talk of last night left an impression on the minds of those who heard him that he has a bright future before him in ministerial work. His previous charge was at Port Murray, Warren County. But in his present place he will have a better and more extensive field open to his efforts. He said that it was a peculiar pleasure for him to be there at this time, because he desired to meet with those whom he would labor among during the coming year. He looks with great expectations to the coming year's work, and especially so where there are many young people.

George O. Stevens concluded the exercises with two songs, rendered in an excellent manner, after which the women served refreshments. During this time everyone seemed to be following out the suggestion of Dr. Barnes in reference to becoming acquainted with one another. The reception finally broke up, each one feeling that it had resulted in welding closer the ties of affection between pastors and people.

The refreshments were served under the charge of Mrs. J. N. McNaughton, Mrs. C. C. Cokefair, Mrs. N. W. Pike and Mrs. C. E. Horne.

Resolutions of Condolence.

The following resolutions were passed by a unanimous vote at a special meeting of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Terein:

Whereas, In His kind providence, our Heavenly Father transferred from this to the evergreen shore, a dear husband, father, friend, and active, esteemed member of our society; and

Whereas, We, the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein, have lost by death in the person of Frederick Lang one of our first and most faithful members, who with loving heart and kind words so often whispered words of counsel, and with the echo still in our ears, be it

Resolved, That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and brotherly love; and

Resolved, That these resolutions be copied in full in our minutes, and sent for publication in our daily papers, and that a copy be handed to the bereaved family.

GIFT OF A COSTLY JEWEL.

Pythians Have Another Felicitious Evening in Their Lodge Rooms.

Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., met in their lodge rooms last night and conferred the rank of knight on three candidates, assisted by Captain Flannery and a detachment from Crescent Division, Uniformed Rank. The work was admirably done. An invitation was received from Unity Lodge, No. 102, K. of P., to meet with them Wednesday evening, May 1, and confer the first rank on a number of their candidates. The invitation was cordially accepted.

Another pleasant part of the evening's entertainment was the presenting of a costly jewel by Deputy Grand Chancellor James Patterson, in a felicitous speech, to Captain Flannery of Crescent Division, as a mark of the division's appreciation of his long and untiring services on their behalf, and his personal worth as a brother. The recipient was completely surprised, but thanked the donors in a few happy words. A smoker was then indulged in, and a very pleasant evening agreeably and profitably passed.

Merit Recognized.

The character of Dick Kothlely in "Flirtation" presented by the Waite Company last night was impersonated with considerable dramatic genius by Eugene Ellsworth. Mr. Ellsworth is a young man whose histrionic capabilities are very versatile, as is shown by the varied and distinctly different characters which he portrays each evening. The fact that he plays the leading roles of each piece is evidence that his merit as an actor is such as to meet the approbation of so discriminating and experienced manager as James R. Waite. Off the stage Mr. Ellsworth is a pleasant gentleman to meet.

Hurry It Up.

An active canvass will be made from now on for signers to the petition for the extension of Watchung avenue which will be presented to the Borough Council. Councilman Valiant is making a special effort to get the petition through as soon as possible.

—Sentence was suspended on Thomas Burns this morning on the charge of violating the hack ordinance by soliciting passengers within 30 feet of the North Avenue station.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. VETS AND THEIR LADIES.

ENJOYABLE LUNCH-BOX SOCIABLE BY THE WOMAN'S RELIEF CORPS.

Winfield Scott Post and Its Visitors Have an Evening of Good Comradeship.

The entertainment and lunch-box sociable arranged and given by Woman's Relief Corps, No. 10, auxiliary to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., in Grand Army Hall last evening, was a decided success. This was made possible by the excellent talent provided and the very large audience present.

Besides Grand Army men and Sons of Veterans with their friends present from this city there were representatives from Ulrich Dahlgren Post and their auxiliary, the Woman's Relief Corps, of Elizabeth, and the Woman's Relief Corps and Sons of Veterans of Rahway.

The programme was opened with a piano solo by Miss Ada O. Nash, the rendition of which was highly commendable. A recitation by Miss Bertha Cium followed and was heartily applauded.

Miss Eppner, accompanied by Miss Nash on the piano, gave a vocal solo that was meritorious.

H. S. Thatcher was then called on for a recitation and gave in his own characteristic style, "Barbara Frietchie" and "Go Way Becky Miller". Both were cordially received with hearty applause. H. J. Martin pleased all with a vocal solo, "Nearer My God to Thee", and then Comrade Bob Mattox was introduced and the way in which he was received showed that he was a favorite. His recitations was excellent.

A quartette composed of Mrs. William Westphal, Miss Maggie Page, H. J. Martin and William Tallamy, rendered a very pretty selection that was enjoyed fully. A very touching recitation "The Bar of Justice" by Beulah Kling, was thoroughly appreciated. A piano duet by Miss Lena Weber and Miss Radin was well executed and enjoyed.

Mrs Lynn of the Elizabeth Corps was introduced and gave a delightful recitation. A vocal duet by Mrs Westphal and Miss Maggie Page was given in an excellent manner. Mrs. Lynn and Miss Try Mattox concluded the entertainment with well rendered recitation.

"Bob" Mattox then took his position on the platform as auctioneer, and a most successful one he was. His happy manner and style resulted in very brisk business, and they ran out of lunch boxes long before everyone was satisfied. The amusing part of bidding on them caused lots of fun, and the prices were good. As a result $15 was cleared from the sale, and everyone had a thoroughly enjoyable time.

The affair was in charge of Mrs. Andrew Cox assisted by other members of the corps, and the event reflected great credit on the very able management.

A Big Purchase.

2400 towels are a good many to buy in one lot, but not too much for Plainfield when the price is right. Mr. White was offered, and he bought, the entire lot from a large importing house at a price so low that he can sell them for 10 cents each. There are all kinds in the lot. Some are worth 15 cents, and some worth 40 cents. They will be on sale Monday morning.

Ill Instead of Intoxicated.

A man was put off a Jersey Central train at the Grant Avenue station yesterday on the supposition that he was inebriated. The police were telephoned for, and on their arrival it was found that he was ill instead of intoxicated. Drs. Murray and Probasco were called and described his ailment as painters colic. He was removed to Muhlenberg Hospital and gave his name as James Lawson.

An Afternoon Luncheon.

The Misses Martine entertained six of their young girl friends at lunch yesterday afternoon in honor of their young cousin, Miss Elizabeth Day of Orange, who is spending her Easter vacation with them. Among the number were Misses Edith Truman, who is home from St. Mary's Hall, Burlington, Burlington County, and Miss Elsie Jobs of Third place.

Now Is the Time.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at L. W. Randolph's drug store.

BIG CUSTOMS SWINDLE

A New York Bric-a-Brac Firm Accused.

Probably the Largest Concern of Its Kind in the World—Said To Have Swindled Uncle Sam for Fifteen Years Out of Thousands of Dollars —A Discharged Clerk's Revenge.

New York, April 20.—One of the most startling stories of fraudulent evasion of the customs duties which has developed in the port of New York for years, has just come to light. It involves the name of one of the best known bric-a-brac dealers in the country, O. L. Sypher & Co., Fifth avenue and 26th street, and implicates possibly one or more customs employes, who have until now enjoyed the unlimited confidence of the collector of the port and the heads of the various departments. The prominent customs officials have not been so disturbed over a case of the kind for a long time, and, for the last two weeks, a thorough, unremitting investigation of the matter has been going on. The discovery of the frauds came from the former secretary and more recently head salesman of the accused firm. The informer is L. H. Todd, who, while the concern was a corporation, acted as its secretary, but who, for the last year or so, since the corporation dissolved, has been its head salesman.

Discharged Employe's Revenge.

Todd was discharged in January last, it is said, for drunkenness. Two weeks ago he appeared at Collector Kilbreth's office and astounded that official with information so startling that he hardly credited the man's statements. These statements, however, have since been verified, and, with the assistance of Col. Phelps, of the law department, and Appraiser Bunn, the customs authorities have gathered indisputable evidence that Todd's statements are true and that O. L. Sypher & Co. have profited to the extent of thousands and thousands of dollars during the last fifteen years, at the expense of the customs, and that with what looks like collusion of one of or more customs employes.

Carried on for Fifteen Years.

Todd claims that for the last fifteen years Sypher has been importing into this port bric-a-brac, tapestry, antiques, artistic silver articles and relics at a rate of duty abnormally below their proper valuation, and cites numberless importations of artistic and valuable silver articles from Great Britain, including trays, loving cups, valuable table pieces and other silver articles, which were invoiced as "old silver" and valued at four shillings and sixpence per ounce.

Honeywell in a Bad Position.

Eugene Honeywell, who has been in the custom service fifteen years, is the man through whose hands the Sypher property passed and upon whose head now falls the suspicion that Sypher was assisted in swindling the customs by some one inside the service. Collector Kilbreth has always had implicit confidence in this official whom he describes as absolutely above suspicion until it is clearly proven that he is guilty. Col. Phelps also speaks highly of Honeywell's past record, but, from other sources, it is learned that he may find it very hard, if not an impossible matter, to extricate himself from the evidence that has accumulated itself about him.

Was Preparing To Go Abroad.

Sypher has made strenuous efforts to make light of the charges. On Wednesday last he was closeted with Collector Kilbreth, Col. Phelps and Appraiser Bunn and tried to explain matters. He, it was learned, had secured passage on an outgoing steamship which sails today, but his counsel, ex-Judge Dittenhoeffer, assured the collector that Sypher would be ready when called upon by the authorities to meet the charges. The amount of money out of which the government has been swindled will run into the thousands of dollars, it is said, but the custom officials are not now in position to state the exact amount. Sypher conducts, perhaps, one of the most extensive enterprises of the kind in the world.

WADDELL'S BODY EMBALMED.

The Remains of O'Brien's Victim To Be Sent to America for Burial.

Paris, April 20.—The body of the American, Waddell, who was shot by his companion, O'Brien, has been embalmed in the presence of Lawyer Allain, representing the Waddell family, and has been placed in the American church pending the completion of arrangements to send it to America. The examination of Waddell's trunks has revealed nothing likely to shed light on O'Brien's motive.

Meets with Little Credence.

Washington, April 20.—The charges of Mrs. Flora Adams Darling, of New York, to the effect that her son, the late Edward Irving Darling, who died in Michigan in February, 1894, was the victim of poison administered by his wife and his physician, Dr. Spranger, who married his widow, meet with little credence here, where Darling and his wife lived for some time.

Wales To Be Our Guest.

Newport, R. I., April 20.—The announcement was made here to-day that the Prince of Wales will visit America this summer. A prominent society man has received a letter from England announcing that England's heir will attend the cup races and spend several weeks at Newport.

Advance of Wages.

Williamsport, Pa., April 20.—The loom hands at the silk mill of John N. Stearns & Co. have been granted an advance in wages of one cent per yard. About 400 women operatives will be benefited by the advance.

SHE MADE A DECIDED HIT.

Scranton Greets Anna Dickinson's Return to the Lecture Platform.

Scranton, Pa., April 20.—About 500 of the leading people of Scranton and vicinity greeted the return of Anna Dickinson to the lecture platform at the Frothingham theatre last evening. She made her appearance most elaborately and tastefully costumed, her neck, ears and fingers gleaming with costly gems. She looked quite youthful and her lecture, the well-known one of "Jeanne d'Arc," was delivered with great dramatic force and power. She was frequently interrupted with applause. Her voice was fully as strong and rich as it was in her youth and her bursts of eloquence at times almost electrified the audience. Persons were present who had heard her twenty-five years ago and they stated that she is even more remarkable for her oratory and dramatic force now than she was at that time. It had been rumored that Miss Dickinson would make a defense of herself and a bitter attack upon those whom she believed to have wronged her, but nothing of the sort occurred. At the close of the lecture she was presented with a magnificent boquet and it was only after persistent applause that she was allowed to leave the stage.

INCOME TAX RETURNS.

An Estimate by Commissioner Miller of the Amount.

Washington, April 20.—Commissioner Miller, of the internal revenue bureau, has sent the following letter to Secretary Carlisle in which he estimates the returns from the income tax: "Telegraphic advices received from the collectors of the several internal revenue districts indicate that the aggregate amount of income tax shown by the returns which were filed before the 16th inst. will be about $14,355,000. Delayed returns and corrections, it is believed, will considerably increase this amount. The total expenditures on account of the work, including necessary salaries and allowances, to the end of the present fiscal year, will not exceed $135,000." The best judgment of the treasury officials is that but for the adverse decision of the supreme court the amount carried by the returns would have been about $30,000,000, the first estime of the department.

THE DELAWARE DEADLOCK.

Several Changes in the Voting, But No Result Reached.

Dover, Del., April 20.—Massey got back into the senatorial fight yesterday, Burton and Townsend deserting Higgins and with Speaker McMullen, of the house, voting for Massey. The ballot stood as follows: Higgins 7, Addicks 5, Massey 3, Pennewill 4, Ridgely 9. A prominent politician who is in close touch with ex-Senator Higgins said yesterday that the first choice of the Higgins faction, if the latter cannot be elected, is Pennewill; the second choice is Harry Richardson of this city and the third choice is said to be a Sussex county man.

PLAGUE IN MACAO.

Hong Kong's Governor Refused To Establish a Quarantine.

Hong Kong, April 20.—Many deaths are reported in Macao in Portuguese settlement in China, at the mouth of the Canton river, as the result of the plague which made its apperance there a short time ago. The governor of Hong Kong has refused to establish a quarantine against the infected region, and what are called the unoffical members of the sanitary board have resigned. The general feeling is that an outbreak of the plague here is probable at any time

WILDE FULLY COMMITTED.

His Counsel Will Make a Fight for Bail.

London, April 20.—Oscar Wilde and Alfred Taylor after further examination at Bow street police court were fully committed for trial in the central criminal court, Old Bailey, bail being denied. Counsel for Oscar Wilde announced his intention to apply to the court of queen's bench for the admission of his client to bail on the ground that the admission to bail of a prisoner charged with or indicted for a misdemeanor is compulsory under the statute law.

MOST CHARMING THE IDEA.

Yet the Indiana Constitution Is Against Woman Suffrage.

Lafayette, Ind., April 20.—Judge Everett rendered a decision against Mrs. Helen M. Gougar, holding that, right or wrong, the constitution gives the right to vote to male inhabitants only, yet asserting that most charming was the idea that every subject of the law should have a voice in the making of the law. The case will go to the Indiana supreme court.

Two Killed; Three Fatally Hurt.

Chicago, April 20.—The lives of two workmen, Harry Blake and Patrick Harvey, were instantly crushed out, and three others, John Conley J. J. Rand Wm. McCallion, were fatally injured and one seriously hurt by the fall of a great derrick yesterday in the yards of the South Chicago Ship Building company. The accident occurred on the deck of the big steel merchantman Arcadia.

Reading Will Not Recede.

Philadelphia, April 20.—The report that the Reading would recede from its demand for 21 per cent. of the coal output and that a settlement of the dispute between the anthracite coal carrying companies would follow is apparently without foundation, and from a statement made by President Harris peace is further off than ever.

Animals from Abroad.

New York, April 20.—The steamer Prussia, from Hamburg, had on board a tiger consigned to a Zoological garden; also two leopards, two hyenas, four seals, three boxes of snakes, three boxes of monkeys and small animals and two dromedaries consigned to W. Burtels, New York.

MRS. PARNELL BETTER

Will Survive the Assault of Highwaymen.

Her Physician Declares That Her Skull Is Not Fractured, Although She Is Badly Bruised—She Regains Consciousness—Two Tramps Arrested on Suspicion.

Bordentown, N. J., April 20.—The assault upon Mrs. Delia Parnell, mother of the late Charles Stewart Parnell, the Irish leader, has caused much excitement throughout Burlington county. Many men volunteered to aid in the search for the assailant or assailants. Two tramps have been arrested, but there is not the slightest evidence against them.

Mrs. Parnell Much Improved.

Dr. Shipps visited Mrs. Parnell again this morning. He declared that his patient's skull is not fractured and that her condition is much improved. She had regained consciousness and asked for a drink of water. County Prosecutor Budd has ordered Justice Steele to leave nothing undone to bring about the capture of the highwaymen.

The Assault.

Daniel Griffin, a night officer of the Pennsylvania railroad, heard Mrs. Parnell's screams for help and quickly responded, but before he reached the scene of the assault the thieves had escaped. The highwaymen had torn open a small satchel which Mrs. Parnell carried, and had scattered its contents around on the ground. Mrs. Parnell was in a highly hysterical state when help reached her, so wrought up by the assault that she became unconscious. She was carried by Watchman Griffin to the farm house of one of her tenants, James Casey, a short distance away, and restoratives were applied.

Severely Bruised.

Dr. William Shipps was hurriedly summoned, and when he arrived he found that Mrs. Parnell was severely bruised on the back of the head. Her most serious injuries are a lacerated wound on the right side of the head back of the ear, and various bruises on the forehead and face, as if the patient fell forward after being struck. It was feared that she was suffering from concussion of the brain.

Had Cashed a Small Check.

Mrs. Parnell is nearly 80 years old, and her advanced age, is was feared, might prevent her from rallying from the severe shock she has sustained. Mrs. Parnell had walked from her residence to Bordentown, a distance of one mile, to get a small check cashed at the store of S. E. Burr. Her movements were watched by the highwaymen, who saw her receive the money. The men followed the aged and defenseless woman until she had reached a lonely spot near the entrance to the Ironsides mansion, the home of Mrs. Parnell, which is situated outside the city limits. Mrs. Parnell is a little below the medium height and is not in the best of health. A few months ago she was very ill, and she has never recovered from the effects of her sickness.

SHORTS BLED PROFUSELY.

Pardridge's Losses Yesterday Figured at $150,000 to $200,000.

Chicago, April 20.—Ed Pardridge was forced to cover his short line of wheat yesterday at a big loss. The bulls had the markets in their hands for the greater part of the forenoon session. The shorts were bled profusely and without mercy and Pardridge was the chief of the victims. His loss is figured at $150,000 to $200,000. He was credited with buying from 4,000,000 to 5,000,000 bushels at an advance of three to four cents over what he had sold it for. The lowest price for the day was at the opening.

IN SUPPORT OF CUBA.

Bill Recognizing Belligerency To Be Introduced.

Washington, April 20.—A bill recognizing the belligerency of the Cuban insurgents has been prepared in this city, and will be introduced in congress when that body convenes in December next. It was drafted at the suggestion of certain representatives and senators, who are in sympathy with the efforts of the Cubans to throw off the yoke of Spain, and these gentlemen will use their influence to pass it through both houses.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK

Activity in All Departments of Speculative Trade.

Considered an Unsatisfactory Feature of the Situation—Higher Prices Without a Larger Demand for Consumption—Bright Outlook in New England—Fewer Labor Troubles.

New York, April 20.—Dun's weekly review of the condition of trade will say to-day: In every speculative department business is growing, but this is really the least satisfactory feature of the situation. Cotton, oil and wheat climb above the export price, so that the marketing of products abroad must be checked, and the money is absorbed which ought to be employed in productive industry and in distribution of products to consumers. Everybody knows that oil has not risen 200 per cent. because it is intrinsically more valuable, nor is wheat actually worth more than it was two or three weeks ago, but the expansive and uplifting force has unfortunately taken to speculation rather than to production, and so we have higher prices in all speculative markets without a larger demand for consumption.

The Rise in Beef.

Outside of speculative markets the most important feature is the rise in the price of beef, but which is largely due to the control of sources of supply by a few strong corporations. There ought to be, but apparently is not, sufficient power in the hands of the government to meet any such conspiracy against the public, and the proposal of Secretary Morton to admit Mexican cattle and cattle from Canada on easy terms for the benefit of consumers is heartily commended, though it is not likely to have much influence. The actual decrease in receipts of cattle at the four chief western markets has been 200,000 head during the first quarter of 1895, and the quantity killed has been only 80,000 head less than last year, about 10 per cent., but facts have little to do with prices in this case, as in the case of oil.

Demand for Boots and Shoes.

Boots and shoes are in larger demand, although the jobbers have to pay ten cents or more above the prices paid two months ago, and there are more orders than when the advance in price was first demanded. Except from the west, there are indications of a larger consuming demand, but on the whole the market is perceptibly narrowed by the advance which higher prices for leather have occasioned. In iron and steel the situation is rather disappointing, although the output continues rather large, as the demand for finished products does not seem to increase.

Bright Outlook in New England.

Some large textile mills have advanced wages at Fall River about 10 per cent., restoring the rates paid after the reduction in September, 1893. Labor troubles are comparatively less serious this week and the tendency is toward larger returns for labor, which will increase the consuming power for other products. The cotton mills are encouraged by improving prices and are fairly busy. Sales of wool at the three chief eastern markets have been 18,334,309 lbs. for three weeks of April against 14,602,800 last year, which indicates that the production of goods is at present larger than it has been at any other time for nearly two years.

TO THE ENGLISH PEOPLE.

Papal Encyclical Regarding Union of Anglican and Roman Churches.

London, April 20.—The papal encyclical in regard to the union of the Anglican and Roman Catholic churches, which will be published here to-day, is addressed to the "English people who seek the kingdom of Christ in unity of faith." It opens with an expression of a long cherished desire to address them in a special letter and thus give the illustrious English race a token of sincere affection. After citing the evidences of the love and care of the Roman pontiffs for England from the time of Gregory the Great, the pope alludes to the exertions made by England to solve the social question, religious education, charitable objects, the strict observance of Sunday, and the general spirit of respect for the Scriptures. He dwells upon the increasing need of unity among those holding the Christian faith as the means of defense against the inroad of modern errors. The pope turns to all in England, to whatever community or institution they may belong, desiring to recall them to this holy unity. In this cause he calls first to his assistance the Catholics of England, and grants to all who piously recite the prayer to the Blessed Virgin, appended to the encyclical, and indulgence of three hundred days, and a plenary indulgence a month to those who recite it daily.

CUBA'S FIGHT FOR FREEDOM.

Reported Repulse of an Insurgent Band—The Allianca Affair.

Havana, April 20.—It is reported here that the rebels attacked Yuraguana, ten miles south of Manzanillo, but were repulsed with a loss of thirty-two killed. The rebel chief, Love, has surrendered to the Spaniards, not wishing to comply with the order of the insurgent General-in-Chief Maceo, that all former Spanish soldiers captured by the rebels shall be put to the sword. Five ex-soldiers have already been killed under this order. Captain-General de Campos is expected to arrive here on the 29th inst. Minister de Lome has concluded his investigations into the Allianca affair. When questioned he said that he had no doubt that the negotiations between the two governments would have an outcome satisfactory to both countries.

OIL CLOSES AT $2.20.

Everybody at Pittsburg Who Could Sold Out to the Standard.

Pittsburg, April 20.—Oil closed at $2.20 yesterday, and the Standard picked the exchange of about all the certificates that were left to trade. Everybody who could sold out to the Standard. John D. Barbour, a prominent broker, expressed the situation in this way: "The Standard wanted to squeeze out the certificate holders, and it has done so." There was no excitement in the oil market from 10:30 until noon. The price did not fluctuate much, and at noon stood at $2.25. Trading was very dull here, but more active in Oil City. There the trading was not confined to May option, but about 32,000 barrels of cash oil changed hands at $2.23a$2.25. Nearly the same amount of May option was sold on that exchange during the forenoon. Brokers are at a loss now as to what to expect.

YANKEES IN LONDON

Inaugurate a Permanent Society with a Banquet.

Mr. Bayard Presided—Queen Victoria and President Cleveland Toasted—Ambassador Eustis in a Plain and Stirring Statement Caused a Mild Sensation.

London, April 20.—The Americans constituting the new American society in London dined at the Cafe Royal last evening. There were about 150 persons present. Ambassador Bayard, who presided, had on his right James B. Eustis, United States ambassador to France, and Gen. Patrick A. Collins, consul-general, and on his left Andrew Carnegie. Among the others present were the staffs of the embassy and consulate, and Hiram Maxim and Col. Gouraud. On the wall behind Mr. Bayard's chair the American and British flags were draped over a large picture of George Washington. The dinner was very elaborate.

Honor Their Sovereign's Sex.

In proposing the first toast of the evening, the Queen, Mr. Bayard said: "The manhood of America responds to the manhood of Great Britain in this toast, as Americans of every opinion and party honor the British sovereign's sex." The toast to the president of the United States was then given by the ambassador. He referred to Mr. Cleveland's vigorous actions when the honor of the country demanded decisive steps and when America's equal rights in the counsels of the nations were involved.

Stirring Americanism.

Ambassador Eustis caused a mild sensation with his response to the toast "Our Guests." The stirring Americanism which he breathed in every sentence was the more remarkable in contrast with the sentiments of Ambassador Bayard's speech. "The chief indictment found against America by Europeans," he said, "is that we have no ancestors and no ruins. I hear this so often that I occasionally remark I am sorry Chicago and Boston were rebuilt after the great fires." After making several more points of the same kind to the great satisfaction of his audience, Mr. Eustis spoke of the inroads made by American wine growers upon the French market. A conspicuous French official had complained to him recently, he said, that the American wines, made in such immense quantities beyond the Rocky mountains, were in many cases supplanting French wines in France.

Far Fewer Sins.

"If there were to be an international confessional," Mr. Eustis said, "in which the nations were to confess freely, the United States, I am sure, would have far fewer sins than any other nation on the earth. Look at our foreign policy, for instance. Its acts are on a plane of justice and dignity. We know our power. We know that a great nation couples with its superior physical stregth more moral weight that can be thrown in the scales for the smaller nations. Yet what do we see in America as compared with Europe? We can say truthfully that no weaker nation ever suffered from aggression on the part of the United States. Our government metes out the same justice to the strongest and the weakest.

Mr. Eustis's Plain Words

"As far as foreign powers are concerned, I may say that I do not desire to criticise them. I wish merely to recall the facts—to illustrate our country's just and even policy and compare it with the constant spirit of aggression shown by the European powers. They have engaged in partitions in which we were invited to share, but declined. For more than a century Europe parcelled out the countries as she would cut a cake. We abstained from the desire to acquire territory. We kept down the spirit of conquest. Yet I tell you that after all this self-restraint if the United States were to manifest a desire for new territory they would encounter the unanimous opposition of Europe. The press would teem with sneers at the 'audacious stupidity of these filibustering Americans.'" Mr. Eustis spoke with great earnestness, and lest he leave doubt as to his meaning all he said, closed his speech with this statement: "I crossed the channel to tell you this, and I have done so."

Like the Fraudulent Debtor.

London, April 20.—In commenting on the American dinner the Standard will speak to-day of the splendid hospitality of American clubs in general. "The Americans, like the British colonials," it will say, "have improved on the British model from which they copied their ideas of club life. Englishmen who have been sumptuously entertained in New York feel somewhat like the fraudulent debtor in their inability to reciprocate such hospitality."

London, April 20.—The Daily Telegraph's Port Louis correspondent says: "The intrigues of the anti-foreign party have produced a crisis in Madagascar. All the English officers have resigned and several are already on their way home.

The Dunellen Rod and Gun Club had a day of good sport at their grounds yesterday. It was their first tournament, and a great success. The Climax members turned out and materially helped swell the numbers.

The club has all the latest improved devices known to trap-shooters, including electric pull and release for the trap. Empire traps, and the most popular of all targets, Empires, were used.

The club house is a good one, and the grounds are excellent. The club should be a successful one. President "Rusty" and Secretary Sisty were highly commended for their enterprise in starting the club.

Children Shrink

from taking medicine. They don't like its taste. But they are eager to take what they like—Scott's Emulsion, for instance. Children almost always like Scott's Emulsion.

And it does them good.

Scott's Emulsion is the easiest, most palatable form of Cod-liver Oil, with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda added to nourish the bones and tone up the nervous system. The way children gain flesh and strength on Scott's Emulsion is surprising even to physicians.

All delicate children need it.

TIMID GREAT MEN.

ALMOST ALL HAVE ODD HABITS FOR PREOCCUPATION.

Parkhurst Toys With a Button. Mayor Strong Drums Softly With His Fingers. Recorder Goff Twists a Pencil. Depew Does Almost Everything.

Dickens's close observation of human characteristics was shown in "David Copperfield," when he made Traddles draw skeletons all over his slate when he was agitated over anything. The skeletons were an outlet for his nervousness. As a matter of fact, most people are addicted to some habit when they are deeply interested in conversation or business. They may chew a pencil, drum with their fingers on a table or contort their features in some way—it is almost certain that they will do something of the kind involuntarily.

Step into the City Hall of New York and watch Mayor Strong as he is giving audience to some citizen who has a scheme. The Mayor sits huddled up in the big chair, with both hands grasping the elbows, while his head is thrust forward, and he looks from under his brow at the visitor. Soon he releases the elbows of his chair and rests his right arm upon his table, where the fingers move slightly in a drumming action, while his left hand falls lightly in his lap.

You can see he makes this change of position without knowing it, and that he is paying that close attention to the talk of the visitor that it may or may not be worth. When he gives a sigh you may know that he has had enough of the interview, and that it is time to get up and leave him.

Recorder Goff, in his office, is a pleasant man. He likes to receive visitors standing, and he is generally passing a pen or pencil from one hand to the other as he talks. He rolls the pencil between the thumb and finger of his right hand, passes it to his left, uses the thumb and finger of the left hand in the same manner, and then seizes the pencil in both hands, and keeps both thumbs and fore fingers rolling and twisting at the pen throughout the interview. He looks straight into the eyes of the person to whom he is talking, and is smiling all the time. His feet are firmly planted on the floor, and the only movement to be noticed in him is in the ever busy thumbs and fingers.

Chauncey Depew meets most people smilingly, and he has as many little tricks of manner as might be expected of so popular a man. The remarkable point about them is that they are all different, and that he has an entirely new set every time he meets a new visitor. He drums with his fingers or hits his teeth with a pencil, or crosses one foot over the other, and with an easy grace that is his all, and that may mean anything or nothing.

He is too mercurial to sit still while he is talking, but his manner can hardly be called a nervous one, for he has himself so thoroughly in hand that he seems to know what he is doing, no matter how airily he may be talking. His manner is charming beyond all else.

W. D. Howells has a nervous way that is suggestive of diffidence. When introduced he looks quickly and sharply at the stranger and then drops his eyes, to lift them occasionally as the conversation interests him or not. He has a way of looking about him as if he rather expected the walls to cave in or the ceiling to fall upon him, and he generally uses his handkerchief a great deal to wipe his forehead and disturb that little straight forelock or bang that may be seen in all his portraits.

He talks quickly and nervously, but always entertainingly, and he has a way of lifting himself out of his chair at times as if the seat were not exactly comfortable. He looks and behaves like a man with a highly strung and nervous nature, and he is a typical literary man in every movement.

Dr. Parkhurst has a quick, bird like way of tilting his head to one side as he talks or listens. He plays with his vest buttons or watch chain, and appears to be sitting huddled up in one corner of his chair. When he stands he turns his toes out almost at right angles with his body, and blinks behind his spectacles, which he takes off frequently to clean them. He has a winning way, particularly with ladies.

Family Weather Signals.

He was inclined to be humorous but sometimes unwise. He had forgotten to go home to supper, and he knew what was in store for him when he should finally get there, so just to be pleasant and entertaining he got some miniature flags and put them in his pocket.

"John Henry," exclaimed his wife, as he entered the house. "I should think you'd be ashamed of yourself to treat your wife with so little consideration."

He slowly unrolled his little package of flags, took out a square red one with a black square in the center and fastened it to the mantel.

"What is that?" she demanded sharply.

"Storm signal," he replied in a pleasant manner.

She drew herself up haughtily. Once or twice she seemed on the point of speaking but controlled herself, and finally turned coldly away. He merely took down the red flag and replaced it with a white one.

"Cold wave," he said.

There was a moment's silence and he saw that her feelings were hurt.

"You're cruel," she said at last. "You are late for your dinner and then you come home and make fun of me. I—I—"

He put up a blue flag.

"Rain or snow," he said.

"Why do you want to be so mean?" she asked. "Why can't you be the dear, kind man you used to be I won't be cross again."

He put up a white flag.

"Fair weather," he said, "and also a flag of truce. I capitulate to tears."

And the white flag floated that entire evening.—Chicago Post.

WE NEVER

forget that there are other stores that sell as good reliable goods as we do. The goods may not be seconds, remnants, auction trash or immense little purchases at receiver's sales, but their goods are just as good as ours. The only difference is—we have the knack of buying the right sort of goods and selling them at the right sort of prices. Such as

THESE.

TOWELS.

Never mind how it happened. May be a little spot here and there, manufacturers call them seconds, but you would never know it if we didn't tell you. You can buy as many as you wish and you get them for the price of one. There are 200 dozen in the lot, all kinds and sizes; some worth 15c, some 40c. They all go at one price—10c each. On sale Monday morning; come early.

MEN

there is a chance for you. 50 dozen natural wool shirts and drawers, spring weight; regular 75c quality. Our price 48c.

EDGING.

Another lot out of the auction room, but it don't hurt them a bit. Only hurts the price and that's cut in two—3 to 10c a yard.

DRESS GOODS

We mean to make tomorrow a red letter day in the dress goods. We have the goods and the nerve to do it. A visit will be to your gain. All on one counter, 100 pieces, all kinds, some were 50c, some 75c but they all go at 39c. A chance for you.

SILKS.

Every day our silk business grows. Must have the right sort or they would not sell so well. We tell of four lots that will interest you—30 inch Swivel silk, cream, pink and cardinal, price 27c; 50 pieces as many styles of fine wash silk, 39c a yard, well worth 50c; 30 inch wash silks, beautiful effects, 43c—a week ago they sold freely for 60c; 20 inch black Bengaline silk 59c, former price $1.

CAPES.

There will be no doubt in your mind where you will buy that cape. It's see ours and you buy. The price is right and they say that there is a style and fit about our garments that all don't have.

WASH GOODS.

Never such an assortment under one roof and the smallness of the price is as surpassing as the largeness of the stock.

27 inch crepons, the latest 12c; 30 inch dimities, the latest 9c; Foulle du noir dress ginghams 8c; 100 dress ginghams 6c; 30 inch crinkles 7c; 30 inch percales 6c; 32 inch French satine 15c.

CORSETS.

PIPE'S POWER LOST.

HYPNOTISM CURES THE TASTE IN HABITUAL USERS OF TOBACCO.

Instances in Which the Desire Yielded to the Power of Suggestion. Nauseating Results When a Patient Tried to Resume the Cigarette Habit.

Hypnotic influence may be made to serve innumerable uses. Among the very latest is that of taking away the taste for smoking. All confirmed smokers know what absolute suffering is involved in an attempt to forego the cigar, pipe and cigarette. They may therefore be relied upon to take peculiar interest in two cases recently treated by a specialist abroad, as related by the New York Herald, the details of which go to prove that if a man desires to rid himself of the smoker's habit and other methods fail hypnotic suggestion is capable of achieving the desired result.

The first case is that of a smoker sixty-three years old, who was a slave to tobacco. He began the habit at sixteen and continued it without a break for forty-seven years. He lit up as soon as he awoke in the morning and until he fell asleep at night there were few intervals in which he was not vigorously engaged in blowing a cloud. He had made some attempts during recent years to moderate his passion for tobacco, but without success. The warnings of his physicians were in vain.

They went so far as to tell him that he was showing symptoms of a lesion of the stomach, which might turn into a cancer, and that this was due simply to his abuse of the weed. They also promised him a complete cure if he would only stop smoking. But it was no use. After making one or two ineffectual attempts he resigned himself to the inevitable and smoked more obstinately than ever.

At this stage the hypnotizer—that magician of modern medicine—appeared on the scene. He offered to try the effects of suggestion. After some hesitation the smoker consented. He believed himself a doomed man, but he was willing to give this last chance of salvation a trial.

The doctor held up the index finger of his left hand. In less than three minutes the patient was fully hypnotized. Then the suggestion was made to him:

"Your desire for smoking no longer exists. From this moment you will not give another thought to tobacco. You will smoke no more cigars, cigarettes or pipes. You will refuse all tobacco, cigars or cigarettes that may be offered you by your friends. Tobacco will disgust you."

The patient joyously announced the next day that he had not smoked since and that he had no desire to do so. To ascertain, said the doctor in his account of the treatment, whether he was resolved, in accordance with the suggestion of the day before, to refuse any offer of tobacco made to him by another person, I took a box of cigarettes out of my pocket and offered him one. He gave a decided refusal. I begged him to try to smoke, but he would not. Then I lit a cigarette in his presence and leaving the open box in front of him went on to talk of other matters. But he did not make a single allusion to tobacco. He seemed to have forgotten all about it.

A friend called a few days later to see the former smoker and knowing nothing of what had taken place offered him a cigar. It was at once refused, and further the hypnotic subject proceeded, much to the other's astonishment, to make a present to his friend of all his own remaining cigars, declaring that he could no longer bear the sight of them. The doctor concludes his history of the case by saying that the cure has proved a permanent one.

The other instance of this novel use of the power of suggestion varied in some interesting details from the first. The patient was a man of forty-six who was an inveterate cigarette smoker. He had begun when fourteen years old and he smoked on an average twenty cigarettes a day. He felt that his health was suffering and last November he was hypnotized at his own request. The suggestion made to him while in the hypnotic state was:

"Your desire for smoking has disappeared. You will smoke no more cigars or cigarettes and will accept none from others. If you try to smoke a cigarette you will be ill."

The hypnotism took place in the morning. The same afternoon the patient felt a desire to smoke. No sooner did he try to do so than he was affected with a feeling of nausea and with constriction of the throat. He was obliged to throw away the cigarette which he had only just lighted.

He made no further attempt to smoke that evening, but the following day he tried on three occasions and each time with the same unpleasant consequences.

So far the suggestion had only partially influenced him. On the next day—the third—it ceased to influence him at all and he was able to smoke as comfortably as ever.

Forthwith he was hypnotized again and the first suggestion was repeated. The result of the second attempt was all that could be desired, for from that time to the present the patient has not smoked.

HE KNEW IT ALL.

Even that Finger Bowls and Batter Cakes Are Used.

The young man from Tamarackville was at the hotel with his bride and felt it to be his duty to know a good deal. It was at breakfast, and the young man had ordered cakes for himself and bride with the manner of the first Napoleon.

"What kind of cakes, sir?" inquired the studious waiter.

"Batty cakes, of course," he replied.

"I didn't know, sir." He came again in a short time with the cakes; and over them was one of those china hot cake covers with a hole in the top of it to let the steam out. This the waiter removed and set down by the gentleman with its top side down. The young man didn't notice it until he had finished his cakes and was ready for the finger bowl, a feature, by the way, he was new to. His eyes fell upon the inverted cover at once, and he picked it up and nodded toward the waiter.

"Here," he said superciliously to that obsequious worthy, "put a cork in this finger bowl. You must think we are green."

For Hypnotic Criminals.

A good story is told of a judge who lately had the hypnotic plea raised before him by a burglar. The prisoner claimed that he did not know that he was "burgling;" that he did it automatically and unconsciously, under the direction of a hypnotist. The judge said that he would give him the full benefit of the law and also of his hypnotic misfortune. He thereupon sentenced the man to ten years in State prison, but told him he could, if he chose, send for the hypnotist and have himself made unconscious for the entire term of his imprisonment.

"The same power," said the judge, "which enabled you to commit burglary, and not know it, ought also to enable you to suffer imprisonment, with hard labor, and not be aware of it. At any rate, this is the best I can do for you."—Albany Times-Union.

Reached the Point at Last.

It takes some persons a long time to come to the point of a story. They are lacking in that quality which newspaper men call "news sense," or in other words they do not appreciate the value of giving prominence to the important factor of their information.

It was such a one as this, a Pennsylvania Dutchman, by the way, who participated in a brief dialogue with a newspaper correspondent one day last summer. The man had been sent on a long journey to obtain some information and eventually brought up at a house which proved to be vacant.

Proceeding to the house of the nearest neighbor, the Dutchman, he asked:

"Can you tell we where I can find Jane Smith? She's not at home."

"Nein, Chane's nod ad home."

"Well, where is she?"

"She's gone the cemetery down."

"Can you tell me where the cemetery is? But never mind—perhaps you know when she'll come back?"

"Oh, she won't come back already any more."

"Why?"

"'Cause she's gone to stay. She's det."

There is a pretty sharp point in an illustrated squib in The Harlem Life. A well dressed lady and gentleman—the lady with a bird on her hat—are walking along a country road. On a branch of a tree sits an oriole with several young orioles by her side. And as she sees the lady she is represented as saying:

"Look, children there goes the monster that wears your poor father!"

A SYRACUSE LADY.

Suffered From Heart Trouble, Liver Complaint and Rheumatism, and Was Cured.

From Syracuse Herald.

The efficacy of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was never more substantially proven—than in the case of Mrs. C. S. Abell of this city.

Mrs. Abell lives at No. 114 Roberts avenue, where she was seen by a reporter. She talked freely of her case, and said: "For a number of years I have been troubled with liver complaint and rheumatism, that made me almost helpless. I became so ill I could scarcely walk across the floor. One of our home physicians informed that I had heart trouble, and began treating me for that. His treatment did no good. One day I read of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which I purchased, and began taking, and improved greatly. I have now taken six bottles, and was never so well in my life. I can say nothing but kind words for Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, to which I owe so much. I know of another case in which Favorite Remedy restored to health a friend who was thought to be incurable."

Mrs. Abell said she would be glad to describe her case to any sufferer who may call upon her. The family are quite as profuse in the praise of Favorite Remedy, as Mrs Abell herself.

Dr David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is a never failing specific in diseases of the skin and blood. It restores the disordered liver to a healthy condition and corrects constipation. It is a certain cure for the diseases peculiar to women. It cures scrofula, salt rheum, erysipelas, nervousness, loss of sleep, or that worn out feeling. In cases of rheumatism, dyspepsia, gravel, Bright's disease, diabetes, and bladder troubles, it has cured where all else failed. Dr. David Kennedy's Remedy is sold by all dealers in medicine at $1 bottle, or six bottles for $5.

COMMAND OF THE ARMY OF ITALY.

Begins His Career of Military Glory—Genius of the Great Soldier Displayed—Four Austrian Armies Beaten In Succession. A New Boundary For France.

[Copyright, 1895, by John Clark Ridpath.]

X.—FIRST CAMPAIGN OF ITALY.

Seven days before the marriage of Napoleon he was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Army of Italy. His star shone suddenly above the clouds. He tarried with Josephine until the 21st of March, when the honeymoon of the warrior—after twelve brief days of dallying young-husbandhood—broke suddenly; and he set out for the field of glory. His love-letters to Josephine indicate that his nature was deeply stirred by her influence, and that his affection for her was as strong as any other feeling that ever competed with his ambition for the mastery of his life.

To have an independent command of an army, or armies, had long been the prevailing motive with Napoleon. True, many of his current sayings and actions seem inconsistent with the predominant passion. Only a short time before departing on the first Italian campaign he wrote a letter to Bourrienne, then an emigrant at Sens, saying, "Seek out for me a small piece of land in your beautiful valley of the Yonne. I will purchase it as soon as I can get together the money. I wish to retire there; but recollect that I will have nothing to do with national property." Quite insincere and fitful! Indeed, General, "a small piece of land" is the last thing in this world that you wish for; and as to your "retiring" there, your retirement is fixed for another place—that far-off island to which you referred in the last clause of your school exercise at Autun. Your essay was headed "Possessions des Anglais;" and you finished thus: "Sainte Helene, petite isle." You will find it so!

The military glory of Napoleon properly begins with his first campaign into Italy. The States of that peninsula were about to be made the playthings of great ambitions. Whether the influence of Austria and the coalition should continue predominant from Piedmont to Venice was the question. The existing order in the Italian States and cities favored the Austrian power; but the popular party was in sympathy with Republican France. Bonaparte's mission into Italy was ostensibly for preoccupation and defense; but it meant, out of the nature of things, sharp war and speedy conquest.

Hardly had the campaign in Piedmont begun before the Directory in Paris would send out the veteran Kellerman to be second in command. This might be a compliment to a general-in-chief not yet twenty-seven; but not so to Bonaparte. He at once replied saying that it was indifferent to him (a thing most untrue) whether he should serve in Italy or somewhere else. All he wished—so ran his plaint—was a brief page in history awarded for service to his country. General Kellerman had more experience than he, and knew better how to make war; "but both together we shall make it badly. I will not willingly serve with a man who considers himself the first general in Europe." How strongly is here revealed the unconquerable will and self-sufficiency and purpose of Bonaparte to be all or nothing!

Let us scan the field. The coalition against France now embraced Austria, Bavaria, Piedmont, Naples, and England. The smaller States of Germany and Italy were also in the league. For the "protection" of Piedmont and indeed of all Italy, an army of about sixty thousand men, thoroughly equipped and supplied, and commanded by General Beaulieu, one of the ablest and most experienced in Europe, had been sent into Lombardy. Against this power Napoleon's Army of Italy was set, consisting of only thirty-five thousand new men, miserably destitute, and having enthusiasm for its principal resource. With this he must compete for the mastery of states and kingdoms.

But the Army of Italy had for a commander a military genius of so audacious a character as to rank its possessor with the two other prime warriors of human history. He had daring, military invention, the power of combination, the discovery of new expedients, sudden adaptation to unforeseen contingencies, courage, ambition, foresight, subtlety, and indeed every quality fit to make him what he was now about to become—the greatest commander of modern times.

At Montenotte, twenty-six miles west of Genoa, Napoleon fought his first field-battle. He attacked the Austrian division of D'Argenteau, and won a victory. Mark you, he fought with a division of the enemy! This was on the 12th of April, only twenty-two days after his departure from Paris. On the 14th he struck the Austrians and Sardinians at Millesimo, ten miles further on, and won another victory. On the next day he came on the enemy at Dego, and added a third. On the 21st, he reached Mondovi, forty-eight miles from Turin, and on the following day attacked and defeated the division of General Colli. In every engagement his blow was like that of a thunderbolt. The disciplined armies of his opponents broke before him.

An incident of these first wild days of battle and victory well illustrates the prevailing temper of the conqueror. His first passage with Colli was with pen rather than sword. Just after the conflict at Dego, the German General demanded the release of a certain Emigrant Moulin who had been taken by the French, though bearing a flag of truce. To this Bonaparte replied: "An emigrant is a parricide. You forgot the respect due to the French people when you sent M. Moulin with a flag of truce. You know the laws of war. If contrary to those laws you authorize an act of barbarism, all the prisoners taken from you shall be immediately made responsible for it with the most deplorable vengeance." There indeed, in his first field-note, spoke out the Corsican. Let no one trifle with him.

The king of Sardinia was already beaten. After Mondovi he made overtures of peace. Without pausing, Napoleon advanced on the main Austrian division under Beaulieu. Him he found strongly posted on the Adda, holding the bridge that led into the town of Lodi. Frederic the Redbeard had founded Lodi on the site of the ancient Roman Laus Pompeia. On the 10th of May the Austrians, sixteen thousand strong, were attacked at the bridge of the Adda by six thousand French grenadiers, led by Napoleon and Lannes in person. The action was bloody and decisive. The name of Lodi was added to the lengthening column of victories. Two thousand of the French were killed and wounded, and a much larger number of the Austrians. Here Bonaparte, fighting in the ranks, gained his famous title of LITTLE CORPORAL, which to the end of human annals will be repeated as his sobriquet.

Five days afterwards the conqueror entered Milan; Lombardy was at his feet. He made levies and requisitions with a freedom only equaled by the audacity of the things accomplished. He pulled down without compunction the magnificent artrophies of the city, and sent them as foretokens of his triumph to Paris. Well he knew the effect which the news of the startling events, and his treasures of ancient art as evidence, would produce on the Parisians. Naples, Modena and Parma went down before him; and the Pope, becoming petitioner, signed an armistice.

Such was the first passage of the war; and the second was like the first. The coalition was not to yield without further battle. Napoleon made Mantua his next objective. Field-marshal Wurmser, of great fame, a veteran of seventy-two, came swiftly out of the Tyrol with a new Austrian army. Before he could reach the scene of action, Mantua was already besieged by Napoleon. The defense held out until Wurmser's army came on in two divisions, and the French were forced to fall back.

The division of his forces proved fatal to the Austrian commander. Woe to the army that was ever divided in front of Bonaparte! At Lonato, on the 3rd of August, he attacked a division of Wurmser and gained a complete victory; General Augereau was the hero of the day. On the 5th and 6th of August a second battle, on nearly the same field, was fought with still more decisive results; Wurmser was hurled back, and Mantua again besieged.

The enemy soon returned to the onset. At Riveredo, on the 4th of September, the division of Massena defeated the Austrians with great losses. On the 8th, at Bassano, Napoleon routed the main force under Wurmser in person. On the 15th of November was fought the great battle of Arcole where eighteen thousand French, led by Napoleon, Massena and Augereau, triumphed over the Austrians nearly forty thousand strong. The battle was fought in a swampy region traversed with causeways and difficult bridges. After three days of desperate fighting Wurmser was so disastrously defeated as to end the contest.

Napoleon now sought to settle some of the issues of the war. He corresponded with the Directory; set forth the condition of Italian affairs, and his own purposes; indicated the necessity of subjugating Venice; granted armistices to the king of Sardinia, to the duke of Parma, to the king of Naples, and made with Genoa a convention for a permanent settlement.

After Arcole, Wurmser threw himself into Mantua, and was cooped up. In January, 1797, Austria sent her third army into the field under General Alvinczy. This great force proceeded towards Mantua as far as Rivoli, where it was struck by Bonaparte and routed with a loss of about twenty thousand men! At Faverita, on the 16th, the French were again victorious. The ruin of Alvinczy's army was complete, and on February 2nd Mantua was surrendered with eighteen thousand prisoners of war.

Swiftly Napoleon followed up these tremendous successes. A fourth Austrian army, under Archduke Charles, came down from the Tyrol as far as Tagliamento, where on the 16th of March, it was routed by the French. On the 7th of April, an armistice was granted by Napoleon, and on the 18th he made with Austria his provisional treaty of Leoben. That power was compelled to cede the Netherlands, and to accept, in mocking compensation, a bit of the state of Venice.

Meanwhile, another coup d'etat had occurred in Paris. By violence the two great Councils of State purged themselves of fifty alleged Royalists and Anarchists. Carnot and Barthelemy, members of the Directory, were sent flying into exile. Such was the savage indignation of the Republic that the coalition became willing for peace. At Campo-Formio, on October 17th, 1797, Napoleon met the representatives of the German Empire, and with astounding presumption dictated to that ancient power the terms of pacification. Openly, Austria should cede the Belgian provinces, recognize the Cisalpine Republic, and accept fragments of Venetia. France should have the results of the war, including the Ionian Islands. Secretly, the Rhine should henceforth be the boundary between Germany and France.

Before leaving the scenes of his glory Napoleon sent Joubert as his herald to Paris. He shall announce for us the following results: The campaign of the Army of Italy has extended from April 12th, 1796, to October 17th, 1797. We have taken 150,000 prisoners; 170 standards; 550 siege pieces; 600 field guns; five pontoon equipages; nine ships of 64 guns; twelve frigates of 32 guns; twelve corvettes; eighteen galleys. We have given "liberty" (whatever that may mean, General!) to Bologna, Ferrara, Modena, Carrara, Romagna, Lombardy, Brescia, Bergamo, Mantua, Cremona, part of Verona, Chiavena, Bormio, the Valtelline, Genoa, the Imperial Fiefs, Corcyra, the Ionian Isles, Ithica. We send to Paris all the Masterpieces of Michael Angelo, Guercino, Titian, Paul Veronese, Correggio, Albana, Carracci, Raphael, Leonardo da Vinci. Not all the masterpieces of these immortals, General; but the rest is true to the letter. And by order of the Directory your glories shall be written in golden catalogue on a Memorial Flag to be hung in the great Hall of Sittings, and be seen by shouting Paris and the world. You were never yourself a poor man afterwards!

A POETIC BURGLAR.

CHAPLAIN PLUMER'S DISCOVERY IN A STATE PRISON.

The Sonnets Written by Fred Irving, a Man of Many Aliases Who is Serving a Sentence of Twenty-five Years in Maine Shows Wonderful Genius.

Chaplain Plumer of the Maine State Prison, who is evidently a man of catholic literary tastes and a true friend of genius, has discoverved in Fred Irving, one of the inmates, a poet of no mean pretentions to fame.

Irving, who is serving a term of twenty five years for burglary, molds his poetic thoughts in the shape of sonnets which he writes in the hours of recreation allowed him by the prison rules. His style is fluent, racy and picturesque, and many an author who has won the public ear will envy him his facility of rhyme and meter.

Irving, who has masqueraded under other names while pursuing his career of crime, placed in the hands of Chaplain Plumer the other day a manuscript of sonnets, the penmanship of which would have been creditable to a writing master. The Chaplain discerned their merit at once, but he also saw that he must play the censor if they were to see the light, for Irving had abused the license permitted to poets in a manner offensive to chaste minds and shocking to ears polite. But after the work of expurgation had been done many passages had been left to challenge the attention of critical minds.

Irving is nothing if not daring, and he often repels by the brutality with which he sings of his chosen profession, for burglary is his business and poetry is merely a pastime which he takes up when he is a guest of the State. At such times he holds with the Elizabethan poet that "stone walls do not a prison make." But in the very grimness of allusion in which Irving sometime indulges there is a strength as of New England granite, which extorts admiration.

Occasionally the burglar poet wearies of base themes and then he attunes his harmonies to subjects of enchanting lyric sweetness of religious fervor and the strains that follow are as rolling, deep, and impressive as the melodious thunders of an organ with all the stops pulled out. In order to insure him a respectful hearing he should therefore be introdubed by such an emotional flight of rapture as his "Easter," which follows:

Sing, O my soul; the theme exultant sing.
Swift, swift, my feet the healing message take
To striken Earth that Christ, her Lord, doth wake.
And walks in majesty to-day a king.
Oh, haste thee, heart, thy richest offering bring;
Thine alabaster box of ointment break
Upon his feet; and joyful noises make
With flute and cymbals and the harp's loud string.

Lo! How the hills that late were gray and sad
Come forth all garlanded with verdant bloom;
White lilies pale and sweet besprink the plain.
So let men's hearts rejoice and make them glad
In that our Lord hath burst the awful tomb
And Judah's Lion doth triumphant reign.

By way of contrast between Irving's best and worst moods, and the gulf is immeasureable, an audacious trifle, in which he takes the reader into his confidence, should come next. It is called "The Gourmet," and in this sonnet he answers a question which the admirers of his verse would be likely to ask. He says:

Why do I burgle? Well, I'll tell you why;
One great big reason is I hate to go
To a cheap restaurant. It hurts me so
That if I had to, then I'd rather die.
I simply cannot stand the buzzing fly
And the waiter without a collar, that thinks to grow
A beard in a week. I shrink from the holy show
Of the tablecloth and the beans and the baker's pie.

But at 9 A. M. to step into Young's Hotel
Where a cool, well bred, cathedral quiet reigns!
For absinthe, coffee and rolls and canteloupe
Makes life worth living; of course it cost like——
But look at that ceiling, those delicate window panes
And this napkin, clean and white as a lady's throat.

It may be a startling thought to frequenters of Young's who read these lines that they have delved into the lush recesses of a canteloupe across the table from a professional burglar, but they should find comfort in the reflection that as a sonneteer he is probably more respectable than they are. Poets of nature will find in Irving a sympathetic brother, and they will thank him for soothing them with his "In the Woods."

Now quiet nature sets ajar for me
Her inner sanctuary, cool and sweet,
When overhead the branching arches meet
And tiny brooks trip down toward the sea.
While falleth on mine ear the symphony
That cymballed leaves eternally repeat,
As marching music set to fairy feet
That thread the tangled paths of memory.

Oh, days of long ago! When thoughts of thee
With wild regrets and bitter longings came,
At nature's healing shrine I bend the knee,
And ere I ask th' accusing voice is dumb.
Touching her green bound garment's hem, my soul
Receives a virtue that has made me whole.

The depraved side of this bad poet—i. e., bad in a moral sense—must be shown however, in its sombre colors. Duty to high art requires it. Therefore the reader must submit to be shocked by Mr. Irving's "Baffled," which was unquestionably inspired by Lucifer himself:

Once on a wild and lustreless midnight,
In a neglected graveyard by the coast,
I dared the Father, Son and Holy Ghost
To come right down and settle it in fight!
I cracked my fists and shrieked with all my might,
And raved and cursed until I was almost Exhausted unto death, and 'gainst a post
I leaned hard put and filled with bitter spite.

'Twould have gone hard with man or maid or child,
That had come o'er that road about that time;
For once—tho' that's another—see Rudyard Kip.
Yet I saw but one lone star that quiet smiled,
And heard but breakers in whose loud sublime
I caught the choke of many a strangled ship.

The famous Worth did not design the costumes which made him celebrated. The real designer was a young woman in his employ whom he married to prevent her starting a rival establishment.

THE ANGELIC HUSBAND.

There are husbands who are pretty,
There are husbands who are witty,
There are husbands who in public are as smiling as the morn;
There are husbands who are healthy,
There are famous ones and wealthy,
But the real angelic husband, well, he's never yet been born.

Some for strength of love are noted,
Who are really so devoted
That whene'er their wives are absent they are lonely and forlorn;
And while now and then you'll find one
Who's a really good and kind one,
Yet the real angelic husband, oh, he's never yet been born.

So the woman who is mated
To a man who may be rated
As pretty fair should cherish him forever and a day,
For the real angelic creature,
Perfect quite, in every feature,
He has never been discovered, and he won't be, so they say. —Boston Budget.

JEFFERSON AND RIP.

The Sturdy Old Actor Gives His Theories as to Stage Business.

Joseph Jefferson, who has played Rip Van Winkle so many years, was asked by a lady why he didn't have a dog in the play, as he continually speaks of "my dog Schneider."

Mr. Jefferson replied that he dislikes realism in art, and realism alive with a tail to wag at the wrong time would be abominable.

"But don't you think the public would like to see Schneider?" she asked.

"The public could not pay him a higher compliment, for it shows how great an interest they take in an animal that has never been exhibted. No, no; hold the mirror up to nature if you like, but don't hold nature up—a reflection of the thing, but not the thing itself. How badly would a drunken man give an exhibition of intoxication on the stage! Who shall act the madman but one who is perfectly sane? We must not be natural, but appear to be so."

"One question more and I have done," said the lady. "Why do you not refuse the cup that Gretchen offers you at the end of the play?"

"Should Rip refuse the cup," replied Mr. Jefferson, "the drama would become at once a temperance play. I should as soon expect to hear Cinderella striking for high wages or a speech on woman's rights from old Mother Hubbard, as to listen to a temperance lecture from Rip Van Winkle. I would prefer that the impression on the audience as the curtain falls should be suggestive so that they might terminate it in a manner most agreeable to themselves. If "Rip Van Winkle" had been treated in a realistic manner it never would have lived so long."

THE OUTPUT OF BICYCLES.

Estimated This Year at Double That of Any Previous Year.

The output of bicycles in the United States this year is estimated at 400,000 and it may reach more than that which will almost double the production of any previous year.

We now import very few wheels; the imports for this year may not exceed five thousand. The exports are increasing. We shall probably send to France this year from two to three thousand bicycles. We have made a beginning in England, but the business has been slow there, as it was expected to be.

Half a dozen American manufacturers now have agents in Europe. Only wheels of the highest grades are exported. American wheels are supplanting the English in the Mexican cities where wheels are used, and in Havana there are three or four agencies of American wheels.

The remarkable increase in the number of bicycle riders is due, of course, in large measures to the many and great improvements made in bicycles. Many of the best riders desiring to ride the most up to date wheel buy a new one whenever a new improvement appears. Sooner or later of course the wheel will be approximately perfected, and the number of bicyclists will have reached a limit; but the manufacturers do not look for any diminution of the interest in wheeling.

A Dog Utilizes a Telephone.

M. E. Church, proprietor of the Beddington tannery, relates a rather remarkable story, showing the wonderful instinct of his dog Don. Having occasion not long since to visit Bangor, he left Don at the tannery. But the dog soon became dissatisfied and returned to his home in Cherryfield, twenty miles distant. When Mr. Church returned to Beddington he called up his wife on the telephone, and in course of conversation inquired for Don. On being told that Don was home, he asked to be allowed to talk with him. Don was accordingly held up to the telephone and the receiver placed to his ear. As "Hello, Don," came from his master, the dog began to show signs of excitement, which increased as the conversation progressed. In a few moments after being released he disappeared, and in about two hours Mr. Church called again on the telephone and announced that Don had arrived at the tannery.

Have the Lazy Complaint.

Indolence is declared a disease. Malarial fevers induce it, and it is a frequent effect of dyspepsia and indigestion. It is a characteristic in neurasthenia so generally that it is usually safe to say that an indolent person neurasthenic to a certain extent. Hence, in cases of chronic indolence, the counsels of a physician are often more in place than those of a moralist.

Noted Barber.

Levi Childs, a colored barber of Middletown, N. Y., celebrated his ninety-seventh birthday Monday. He is living with his fifth wife, who is 78 years old. Childs bought his freedom 40 years ago for $2,000 that he had accumulated while working at the carpenter's trade. Childs had nine sons in the Union army and served in the civil war himself.

A citizen was walking up the street one dark night when a man sprung out from a passageway and thrust a six shooter in the pedestrian's face, saying:

"Hand over your pocketbook and don't make no noise about it."

"I am helpless," responded the citizen, "and will obey, but first let me inquire why do you expect me to comply so readily?"

"Because," said the man, obligingly, as he seized the citizen's swag, "I belong to the same political party that you do and our views on the tariff are the same."

This beautiful fable teaches how much national politics has to do with local elections.—Chicago Record.

CHAPTER III.

But Dick Wheeler did not so easily resign the hope that Mary would accept him. In his slow, honest, deliberate way, he went all over the situation in his own mind. He knew Don's worth, and he had felt, as had everybody who had come in contact with him, the attraction of the young fisherman's sweet, kind, careless nature. He knew all that with no jealousy or bitterness; with only a sober, kindly acceptance of the fact. He admitted the loyalty of Mary's heart, "and I like her all the better," he said to himself stoutly. He even realized, in an exact, reasoning way, the force of Mary's ideal of Don; "and the longer she waits, the more she'll care for him," he thought, soberly. He must not lose any time, that was clear. So he tried a dozen loving artifices; he called—not too often. He carried fruit to Mrs. Hayes; he sent books to Mary; and after awhile, to put her at ease, he talked to her about Don, and showed the affection which he had always felt for him.

It all seemed so natural to Mary that she began to feel, as he meant that she should, that he was a friend.

"He's forgotten all that nonsense!" she told herself, and grew to depend on his friendship. She was quite unembarrassed when she chanced to be alone with him; if he met her as she was walking home from school, or if he found her sitting alone on the beach, her hands locked about her knees, her eyes on the far line of the horizon, behind which Don's sails had dimmed, and dipped, and disappeared forever.

Another year passed in this way. Dick never spoke, but he went on loving. When at last he tried to speak, her perfect friendliness closed his lips.

"I'd better get shipwrecked," he told himself with a little bitterness which was foreign to his patient nature; "if I was dead, she'd think more of me." He did not give up hope, but he was discouraged. He hardly knew himself how deeply so, for he was surprised to find himself half sick, and by and by, altogether sick—"down with a fever," his man said, when he came to bring a pair of chickens to Mrs. Hayes' door, and explain that Mr. Wheeler couldn't come himself.

SITTING ALONE ON THE BEACH.

"Poor boy!" cried Mrs. Hayes, anxiously; "and not a wife nor a mother to take care of him. Well, there, Mary, it is too bad!" Mary looked sorry, and the next day she went to inquire about him.

"Well, he's worse," said the hired man, laconically. Mary took the news back to Don's mother, and was very silent.

"'Bout time to be concerned," old Mrs. Hayes thought, severely, but that was only for a moment. "Poor child," she said to herself, "she's worried about him!" "There, now, Mary, cheer up," she said aloud. "I guess it ain't nothin' very bad."

"I don't know," Mary answered, "I hope not. But I'm afraid it is." And then, later in the evening, when they had been talking of something else, she said, suddenly: "He hasn't a soul to look after him, except that stupid Jacob."

Mrs. Hayes looked at her inquiringly. "I just wish," said Mary, tremulously, "that you and I could—"

"Why, bless your heart," cried the old woman, "we will! I know what you're going to say—we'll go right up there to-morrow. I don't know why I didn't think of it first."

Good nursing is well enough in its way, but when added to good nursing the invalid hears a voice that he loves, talking outside his door, to his little, old, kind nurse, or is told that "Mary made that gruel," or watches, dreamfly, through feverish eyes, Mary moving about his room, or even feels her touch upon his forehead—why, he cannot help get well. At least that was what Dick Wheeler said, first to himself, and afterwards, shyly and awkwardly, when he was better and was sitting up, to Mary. But, poor fellow! Mary's blank look almost landed him back in his bed again. He began to realize, in a slow, pathetic way, that if she had been less kind he might have had more hope. "And Don dead seven years!" he told himself, as he sat propped up with pillows in a big, black wooden rocking chair that had roses painted on the head rest, and gay calico sleeves tied over its stiff arms.

It was a soft spring afternoon; he was much better; Mrs. Hayes and Mary had gone home, and only came in for an hour or two each day to see that he was comfortable. It was Mrs. Hayes who had packed him snugly into the big chair in the south window, and put a footstool under his feet, and drawn a little table with his medicine and a glass of water close to his side.

"Jacob'll help you back to bed, Dicky, as soon as you feel tired; now, mind, don't sit up a minute longer than you feel like it! And I'll come in to-morrow morning and bring some beef tea. Mary's great on making beef tea."

ANDREW JACKSON'S INAUGURATION.

The Greed For Office in 1829 Was Quite As Relentless As It Is To-day.

The following description of the first inauguration of Andrew Jackson is in the form of a letter written by Gen. Floyd, one of Georgia's famous men. The General at the time of writing was a member of Congress.

"As soon as the greeting had subsided, the President arose and read from manuscript his inaugural address. His manner was unassuming, dignified and calm, his voice low, without gesticulation or pathos. As soon as he concluded he was cheered again by the multitude, who were unmoved and perfectly silent, when the oath was administered by Chief Justice Marshall.

"This being the conclusion of the formalities the people rushed forward to congratulate him; the pressure was great. He, however, passed quickly through the Capitol and proceeded to the President's room. He was followed there by thousands.

"The streets were crowded with people on foot. The doors of the President's house were thrown open to the cardinal points of the Republic for the admission of all those who chose to enter. Sheer democracy prevailed, and produced a commixture of all colors, grades and sex. Many were nearly pressed to death. Pickpockets availed themselves of so favorable an opportunity to collect cash and other valuables, soon were detected. The President could make no arrangements to enforce order from the immediate connection of the scene with his elevation, and it seems the Committee of Arrangements had overlooked the propriety of restraining indecorum by precautionary instruction to the officers of the police.

"The pleasure of triumph is not without its alloy, the sweeping of Augean stables. The heads of departments being removed, the subordinates have become alarmed, and their wives with their applications and their supplications arrest the sympathies of the better feelings of the human heart.

"What their fate will be I know not. They are not, however, at the mercy of many of the ruling passions of revenge, and nothing but magnanimity of those in power can waive the misery of those dependent on office for subsistence.

"The President's quarters are surrounded with myriads of applicants for office, all desiring to button on Uncle Sam.

"I must now beg you to excuse the prolixity of this hurried and unceremonious epistle. Inclosed you will receive the President's Inaugural Address, showing the style in which it has been got up here. On Wednesday next I shall take my departure in the steamboat for Norfolk on my way to Georgia."

THE WHISTLE AND THE DOG.

A Boston Philosopher Traces the Development of Canine Reason.

It is so common a thing to whistle to a dog and to have the animal respond thereto that perhaps nobody ever stopped to inquire into the reason of the matter, but after some thought and a deal of investigation we think we have reached a solution of a problem hitherto unanswered, if indeed it ever were considered.

We take it to be a tenable theory at the outset that the dog being an animal of rare intelligence has naturally the same antipathy to the piercing sound of the whistle that obtains among the intelligent portion of the human race.

And right here let us say that we consider it a piece of unwarranted assumption on the part of man to dignify his thinking powers by the high-sounding name of reason, while characterizing the same faculty in the dog by the degenerate title of instinct. We suspect if the dog were given the opportunity to state his side of the question he might claim that he had the reason and man only the instinct.

But let that pass. It being wholly probable that the dog has a natural and congenital abhorrence of the human whistle, it is not at all unlikely that when the exasperating blast of this waste first fell on the outraged ears of the primeval dog it aroused a spirit of vindictiveness within him, and he rushed at the offender with murderous intent. In process of time, however, while the dog continued to rush toward the man at the sound of the latter's whistle, only the force of imitation remained, while its impulse had utterly changed. Whereas at first he sought revenge, now he responded as to a friendly invitation.

But it will be observed that the effect upon the dog's temperament is still pernicious. Undoubtedly it is being whistled to so continually that causes the dog to be nervous and irritable and subject to distemper and chorea in his youth.

When he becomes older and his nerves are hardened he still is liable to hydrophobia, which signifies dread of water. This because the man's whistle has to be wet occasionally, and the dog, being understood, not only hates the whistle, but the element wherewith it is kept in order.

We think we have now shown the connection between the whistle and dog and the philosophy of the latter's aversion to the former, and why it is prone to ruin his disposition and overwhelm his intellect.—Boston Transcript.

The Confederate Battle Flag.

Speaking of General Johnson, I am reminded of the explanation he once gave me of the origin of the Confederate battle flag:

"At the battle of Bull Run," said he, "the stars and bars proved a failure because they were so much like the Union colors. Indeed, both armies mistook their enemies for friends, and vice versa. After the battle I resolved to discard this flag and called for each regiment to procure its State colors.

"They were not able to do this, and I asked the army for new designs. Among those presented, one by Gen. Beauregard was chosen, and I altered this only in making it square instead of oblong. This flag was afterward adopted by the Confederate armies generally.

"It was a Greek cross of blue on a red field, with white stars on the blue bars." This flag, by the way, was designed by a Col. Walton, of Louisiana, and by him presented to Gen. Beauregard.—Kate Field's Washington.

THE SILVER WATCH.

ITS PLACE BEING TAKEN BY FILLED GOLD CASES.

Since Centennial Year Silver Watches Have Been Gradually Relegated to the Past. The Filled Case an American Invention.

"This is an effete age and generation," remarked the free silverite. "Not content with depriving the country of cheap money, the gold bugs of Wall street have so worked upon the passion for display that possesses the multitude that even a silver watch isn't good enough for the workingman and he must carry a gold timepiece. What has become of the silver watches our grandfathers used to wear? Nobody, or almost nobody, carries one nowadays."

His listener observed that grandfather's turnip was probably worn out by this time.

"But," he continued, "if you want to know why even people in very modest circumstances don't carry watches like it I'll tell you. It's because they can buy gold watches just about as cheap as your grandfather could silver ones, and they naturally prefer the more precious metal. Not solid, of course, but the filled case, which for the time it is guaranteed is just as good as the solid."

The filling of watchcases with baser metal is an American invention and the manufacture of filled cases is confined to this country, where, however, it has attained vast proportions. James Boss first conceived the idea of a substitute for gold, and his invention was patented in 1854. Its possibilities were not fully realized by manufacturers for about twenty years, but since 1876 the use of the new method has been steadily increasing, until to-day filled cases are carried by the great majority of owners of watches.

The use of filling is what has killed silver in the manufacture of watchcases," said a prominent expert. "The average life of a silver case is four or five years. A gold filled case, 14 carat, is guaranteed for twenty years, a 10 carat for fifteen, and a rolled plate for five. Here is one of the earliest make which has been worn for twenty years," showing a case which might have passed for gold. "I got that from a clergyman who said it was presented to him by his congregation and that he'd been lying about it for a score of years. It wasn't his fault, though. Manufacturers weren't squeamish in those days and it had the 18 carat mark inside.

"When the panic struck the country the factories of this country were turning out 6,000 watches a day. This huge production was stimulated by the artificial demand created by the watch club and other schemes which had such vogue four or five years ago. The courts have since ruled these schemes illegal and the watch trade is coming slowly back to a legitimate basis.

"Almost every part of an American watch is now made by machinery. Even the designs on the cheaper cases are stamped in."

"But are machine made cases equal to hand made, aside from the stamped 'engraving?'"

"Better; the different parts are hardened by the pressure and are more uniform in quality. Of course you know that the gold is stamped on both sides of the filling by great mechanical pressure. You'd be surprised to see how little gold will spread over that filling, and last, too. We never make an 18 carat case except to order, because a 14 carat case wears best.

"This is only by the way, but look at that bow. You wouldn't believe that a piece of work apparently so simple of construction had twenty-five or thirty patents on it, would you? But it has. That's to prevent a thief from wrenching your chain off your watch, when he is unable to get at the timepiece itself."

"About how much has the adoption of the filling process reduced the price from that of a fine case?"

"Well, it wouldn't be any exaggeration to say that the reduction has been nearly one half. This is due to the machine process, of course, as well as to the filling."

All the great watchcase factories are in and around New York and Philadelphia.

IT MAKES PEOPLE WELL.

Paine's Celery Compound is as Superior to the Ordinary Spring Medicine as the Diamond is Better than Glass.

When women become invalids, homes, children, friends, all must suffer.

With an impaired nervous system pure blood is impossible; health is impossible.

Why not be well?

Women and men all over the country whose health and vitality have been brought down during the winter months are now taking Paine's celery compound, because their physicians order it, or because they have learned from other equally trustworthy sources its unfailing power of building up the strength, reinvigorating the nerves, purifying the blood and making people well.

Paine's celery compound continues week after week and year after year to cure the most difficult cases of nervous weakness, and to renew the health of countless ailing, desponding women.

Paine's celery compound is relied on with implicit confidence by thousands of diligent wage earners, who must keep up their strength at this trying season.

But when labor is excessive, protracted or done under great mental and bodily strain, as is usually the case with the work women are called to do, the health of the nerves should be carefully watched over, and the small beginnings of nervous weakness immediately checked by the use of Paine's celery compound. The smallest as well as the largest cities are full of brave women, who might lead dependent lives, but prefer to work. They keep well and equal to their duties by prompt recourse to this genuine nerve regulator and blood renewer. Paine's celery compound, whenever they feel overworked, run down and in danger of serious illness. This great spring remedy today enables countless men and women to keep steadily at work with strong, well-fed nerves and healthy, richly-nourished blood and tissues.

Every woman, if she is "run down," in poor health, fretful or weak, if her blood is in poor condition, her nerves unstrung—every such woman should heed such testimonials as this from Miss Edith R. Meek of Fall River, Mass., whose picture is given above:

"I was advised by a friend, to try Paine's celery compound," says Miss Meek, "as I was all run down from a long season of hard work and travel. Nothing that I have ever taken has had such a speedy and lasting effect upon me. I am now advising all of my friends to take it. For that tired, irritable condition resulting from an overtaxed nervous system, there is nothing to equal it."

Take Paine's celery compound now. It makes people well.

ALL WORE SMILES.

Old Sol Made Everybody Happy Yesterday, Including the Coal Man.

Old Sol and the bicyclists were very much in evidence yesterday. The former's warm rays of sunshine put the wheelmen in the best of spirits for enjoying runs, and the city streets and county roads where literally alive with perspiring and dust-begrimed wheelmen. This city seemed to be a great mecca for riders from nearly every city and town within a radius of thirty miles—the most of them coming in parties of from three to fifteen and twenty. Likewise Plainfield wheelmen circulated around about Jersey, so that representatives could be seen in every section.

The bicyclists were not the only happy ones. The liverymen went about with smiling countenances, for nearly every stable in the city rented its full equipment of rigs before sundown. And those who had neither bicycles nor horses, nor the wherewithal to hire them, were just as happy, for they went promenading about on foot, visiting and admiring places that six months of frigid weather had forbidden their visitation. In a word, yesterday was a great Summer-like day, and even the coal merchant was happy at viewing the happiness of other people.

Played to Small Money.

The Waite Comedy Company only played to $900 during their engagement in Music Hall last week. They left for Orange this morning, where they will appear this week, after which the company will disband. A number of the best people will then go to Poughkeepsie, where they will join company No. 1 and finish the season with a two-weeks engagement in that city—the home of Mr. Waite. Harry Woods and his wife, Carrie Louis, who played leading parts with the company here last week, then expect to purchase bicycles and ride from Poughkeepsie to Erie, Pa., where they make their home in the Summer. It is said that company No. 2 has not been a paying investment for Mr. Waite, though his old company, which gave such satisfaction here last season, has been doing a big business.

Where the News Plant Will Go.

The New Brunswick Home News says: "Henry D. Morrison of Plainfield, at present connected with the New York Tribune, was in town a few days ago and obtained an option for the lease of a building on Hiram street, in which to start a daily Republican newspaper. His idea is to commence with a six or seven column, four page paper, to sell at 1 cent a copy. Mr. Morrison has the plant of a defunct paper [the Plainfield Evening News] at his disposal, and may move it here early in May, when he can get possession of the premises on Hiram street."

Post-Lenten Brilliancy.

Next Monday afternoon one of the principal and most elaborate social events of the post-lenten season will take place, in the dinner and reception of the Monday Afternoon Club in the Casino of the Country Club. Covers will be laid for over 200, and it is expected that a number of women of national reputation will be present to add their brilliancy to that of the cultured Plainfield women. The menu will be arranged and served under the direction of Thomas Toombs, steward of the Country Club.

Easter Reception and Sale.

In another column is advertised the Easter reception and sale to be held by the ladies of All Souls Church Thursday and Friday of this week. Similar events arranged by them in the past have been so enjoyable and so thoroughly appreciated by those who attended, that their present invitation to the public should meet with a cordial response. One pleasant feature, it is said, will be the little refreshment room where tea and ices will be served.

Park Club Bowlers.

In the two-men team bowling tournament at the Park Club Messrs. Hegeman and Leonard are the leaders. The highest individual score yet bowled is 256, made by Peter Matthews. It is expected that the tournament will be finished in a few days.

And There Were Others.

During the dinner hour yesterday an observing man counted bicycles aggregating $5,000 in front of McVey's on North avenue, where their owners had left them while they ate.

Our better halves say they could not keep house without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is used in more than half the homes in Leeds. Sims Bros., Leeds, Iowa. This shows the esteem in which that remedy is held where it has been sold for years and is well known. Mothers have learned that there is nothing so good for colds, croup and whooping cough, that it cures these ailments quickly and permanently, and that it is pleasant and safe for children to take. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

BASEBALL PROSPECTS.

The Delay Seems to Be in Securing Proper Grounds.

The baseball enthusiasts about town are wondering whether or not there is to be any local team this season. The trouble seems to be in the difficulty of securing grounds at a reasonable rental. So far as the makeup of the team is concerned, the city and borough afford plenty of good material, the only lack seeming to be a catcher. There is no doubt that sufficient financial aid would be accorded to the club to fill this position if the team were organized. Plainfield has been without a good team too long, and any determined effort to put one in the field will meet with ready support from the admirers of this national game. The Y. M. C. A. athletes should hurry along their plan of providing this sport for the local kranks.

An Honest Tribute.

The following is from The Oneonta, N. Y., Herald:

"Charles E. Bunk, manager of the Oneonta Fertilizer and Chemical Company, died of pneumonia last Sunday evening at his home on Watkins avenue in this village, aged 32 years, 4 months and 11 days. Mr. Bunk had been ill less than a week and it was not until Saturday that it was generally known that his condition was critical. The funeral was held Tuesday morning, Rev. C. C. Pierce officiating, and the body was taken on the afternoon train to his old home in Plainfield, N. J., for interment.

"Such, in brief, are the facts concerning Mr. Bunk's demise. When, however, such a man passes to another world, it may well be that a few words of honest eulogium should be permitted to gild the bare statement of fact. Such men as he are not so plentiful that departure of one of them should be unheeded.

"Though for less than two years a resident of Oneonta, and withal a modest, unassuming, unpretentious man, Mr. Bunk had in so brief a time won to a remarkable degree the confidence and respect alike of his associates and of the community. Under his judicious management the fertilizer plant, which for more than a year had been idle, became again a scene of activity, and business was built up to a degree which appears little less than wonderful to one who knows the difficulties which beset his way. Energetic and straightforward as he was in business, he was no less affable and lovable in private life, and to many, as to the writer of these lines, his demise came as a heartfelt personal calamity.

"Mr. Bunk leaves a wife and one little daughter, besides an aged grandmother whose hope it was to spend the brief remnant of her life with him. His father, George E. Bunk, who came from New Jersey about a year ago to reside with his only son, died last August."

In The Casino Tonight.

No one who heard Mr. Underhill in "A Midsummer Night's Dream", or who having missed that pleasure for himself has been told by friends what a delightful occasion it was, will fail to attend the second recital which takes place at the Casino this evening. "David Copperfield" is a favorite with all lovers of Dickens, and dear old fisherman Peggotty is the character of whom everyone is fondest. Mr. Underhill is thoroughly at home in the Park, as indeed he is with all in the narrative. No one reads; the characters tell their own stories.

To Address in Plainfield.

Miss Frances M. Parsons, who expects soon to go to Palestine as a missionary to the Jews, and Miss Noah Herndon, an evangelist from Georgia, will address the Christian Alliance meeting at 317 East Front street Tuesday evening at 8. Miss Parsons and Miss Herndon will also address the Junior society at Warren Chapel on the subject of missions, Tuesday afternoon at 3:45. All are cordially invited to these services.

To Organize for Suffrage.

A meeting to organize a Union County Woman Suffrage Association, auxiliary to the New Jersey State Association, will be held in Plainfield Friday, May 10, morning and afternoon. A number of prominent citizens will address the meeting, and delegates are expected from Elizabeth and other towns of the county and State. The time and place of meeting will be announced later.

To Give Objectors a Hearing.

Action on the Building Ordinance at the Common Council meeting tonight will probably be postponed in order that a hearing may be given to those who are opposed to portions of it.

REHEARSING THE HONEYMOON.

Plainfield Amateurs Preparing for Their Greatest Triumph.

The boards of Music Hall will be trod tonight for the first time in the existence of the theatre by Plainfield amateurs, as the cast of the "Russian Honeymoon" will then have its first rehearsal on the stage on which the play is to be given May 9. The effect of the continuous rehearsing that has been going on the past few weeks is being seen now in very gratifying results, and if the same rate of improvement continues until the night of the play there will certainly be a most excellent performance in every respect.

Eugene Rose, who with his Lyceum Theatre musicians has furnished such excellent music at previous plays, will be present on the 9th with an orchestra of more than twice the size of any he has ever led in Plainfield.

The play will be costumed in all respects as when first produced in New York, except in the matter of a few details which the stage manager has seen fit to improve upon.

The management has stated that the announcement of the sale of tickets, prices, etc., will be made on Wednesday of this week. Those who propose taking theatre parties should lose no time in making them up, as it is expected that there will be a rush for seats.

OBITUARY.

Thomas Bagot.

The death occurred Saturday evening at his home, 119 Schermerhorn street, Brooklyn, after a brief illness, of Thomas Bagot, brother of Mrs. Sarah Bradshaw of 82 Duer street, North Plainfield. Decedent was in his 84th year, and one of the oldest citizens of Brooklyn. He lived for over half a century in the house where he died, which was one of the first houses built on the street.

"Uncle Thomas" as he was familiarly called by all who knew him, was of striking appearance, his snow-white hair and beard giving him a patriarchal presence.

He was one of the oldest members of Beecher's Plymouth Church, and a regular attendant at service there. A few weeks of each Summer he spent in Plainfield with his sister and other relatives, and his visits were greatly enjoyed, as he was a man none knew but to love and respect. By trade he was a glassblower, and was one of the pioneers in that business from England to this country, where he continued his work till failing eyesight forced him to retire.

The news of the death of "Uncle Thomas" awakens much regret in Plainfield, where he had many warm friends. Chief Engineer T. O. Doane, J. Hervey Doane, John H. Doane, Charles E. Doane, Mrs. A. L. Force, Mrs. S. P. Craig, and Mrs. T. S. Barrett, are among the relatives. Four daughters and two sons survive him.

GOOD REPORT FROM HOLY CROSS.

All Indebtedness Canceled, and an Encouraging Outlook for the Coming Year.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy made the following announcement to the congregation of the Holy Cross Church yesterday morning:

"I take this opportunity to thank the congregation for their generous response to my annual Easter appeal. You gave the amount I asked for. In consequence I am glad to state that all indebtedness is canceled and that we start the year from Easter free from debt. Our annual report to the Diocesan Convention which meets May 7 will be a highly creditable one. During the past year there have been baptized 25, confirmed 27, and communicants added to the parish 44. The societies or guilds of this parish have made a most excellent showing. We have great cause to thank God for His blessings and be stimulated to do more during the year that is before us."

THE WONDERFUL PARKS

They Conquer Every World They Play Against.

CHAMPIONS OF NEW JERSEY NOW.

Finish First in the Six-Men Team Contest of the State Tournament by Defeating the Montclair Club, with 84 Points to Spare.

The Park Club whisters continue to win victories at this great American and scientific game of cards. Having won, held and lost the National championship trophy, they again distinguished themselves Saturday afternoon by conquering the Montclair Whist Club and winning the six-men team championship of the New Jersey Whist League Tournament championship, and also the pair championship; they also stand tied with the Fanwood Club for the four-men team championship of the same league, and there is every probability that they will win, thus adding more glory and fame to their already widespread reputation. The game Saturday was played in the elegant club-house of their Montclair contestants, and was won by one point, the score being as follows:

PARK.		MONTCLAIR.
Lyman and Reed	8	VanVleck and Harrison	13
Rogers and Howell	6	Kloman and Mulford	11
McCutchen and Townsend	15	Fennery and Piper	4
	29		28

The pair champions are Townsend and McCutchen, who have won nine and lost one game, and Rogers and Howell are second, having won eight, lost one and tied one. Messrs. Townsend, McCutchen and Rogers have played in all games; Howell in all but one, when C. A. Reed took his place as Mr. Rogers's partner; others who have played more or less games are J. B. Drayton, J. M. Leonard, Benjamin A. Day, Charles Horne, Charles Lyman, George Dupee and Henry McGee.

The standing of the clubs who constituted the league, was as follows at the finish:

	WON.	LOST.
Park Club	8	2
Montclair	7	3
Newark	6	3
Fanwood	4	6
N. J. Ath. Club, Bergen Point	2	6
Elizabeth	1	8

On the total points of the tournament the Parks lead Montclair, who finished second, by 84.

The best two out of three games will decide the winner of the four-men team championship, the first game of which will be played in the clubhouse Wednesday evening. At that time the Park team will consist of McCutchen, Townsend, Reed and Rogers. The trophy of the six-men team is a permanent one, and the four men team a challengeable one. What the first-named will consist of has not yet been decided.

WILD RUNAWAY.

A Horse Owned by Terrill & Cole Causes Sunday Night Excitement.

A runaway horse on West Second street caused considerable excitement last night at 7. The rig was owned by Terrill & Cole, and had been rented during the afternoon by John Hodgetts, a clerk in Werner's clothing store. Shortly before 7 he tied the horse to a post in front of his residence on West Second street. In some manner the animal slipped the bridle from his head and started up the street towards Park avenue, at a terrific pace, drawing the wagon after him in a zigzag course. He attempted to turn into the lane leading to the livery stable, but his momentum was such as to carry him on, and when in front of the Elkwood Building he made a lurch sideways and came in collision with a carriage hitched to a horse at the Salvation Army hall entrance.

The check in his wild flight was so sudden that the animal seemed to turn a complete somersault, landing on his back with the buggy piled on top of him. Several bystanders rushed out and held the head of the horse before he had a chance to rise to his feet and continue his dangerous flight. After considerable effort the horse and carriage were righted up, and the property returned to its owners. The animal was uninjured, and the damage to the buggy consisted in a broken dashboard and shaft, and a bent axle. The vehicle with which the collision occurred escaped without injury. It is almost miraculous that no accidents resulted from the runaway, for the streets were filled with people going to church.

STRUCK A SNAG.

New Jersey Central Stops the Building of the Trolley Trunk Line.

Somerville, April 21.—The New York and Philadelphia Traction Company has run against a snag in laying its tracks between this place and Bound Brook, and, in consequence, no work has been done on the line for over a week.

About six weeks ago the company began putting down its track two miles from Bound Brook, and said that the road would be finished through to Raritan by April 15. The work progressed rapidly, and a week ago ties and rails were laid to a point one mile from here, near Finderne.

Then the work was stopped owing to the serving of a writ of certiorari on the trolley company by the Central Railroad of New Jersey, through its counsel, John L. Conover.

This writ, which calls for the review of the grant of right of way through the town by the Board of Commissioners, is returnable June 10, and, as it acts as a supercedeas, not a stroke of work can be done until a decision is given. In case the decision is adverse to the trolley company, then they will be without permission to go through the town, nor can they obtain such permission until the Legislature gives it to them.

STREET SPRINKLING.

If the People Don't Want Dust, They Must Pay for Water.

The Press is astounded to learn that the merchants on Park avenue from Front street to Second street pay only $1.60 a week for street sprinkling. As a result of the meagre pay, threat is made to stop sprinkling. The benefits of the sprinkler are so apparent that it seems as though every storekeeper and householder in town would be willing to pay the small sum required, for the sake of having the dust nuisance abated.

FOR LEGITIMATE TRADE

Spain To Guarantee to the United States Protection.

Campos To Make the State of Siege Fall as Lightly as Possible in Cuba. Senor de Lome Doubts the Alianca Captain's Story—Sore on the American Press.

New York, April 22.—A cable dispatch from Havana, Cuba, says: Before sailing for New York Senor Dupuy de Lome expressed himself freely on matters of interest to Americans. Speaking of Marshal Martinez Campos he said: "He brings instructions, besides his own determination, to make the state of siege fall as lightly as possible on the rest of the provinces. On this basis it will be easy to guarantee to the United States every protection on the part of our government for legitimate trade. The commanders of our cruisers have been instructed to that effect.

Doubts the Captain's Words.

"No doubt the captain of the Conde de Venadito fired two blank shots at a suspicious steamer with the object of making it stop. The steamer raised the English flag and increased her speed. I am in doubt therefore whether it was the Alianca. It may have occurred to the Alsa or the Alien, both English liners, going to Kingston. Possibly the captain of the Alianca put together some information gathered by him and gave it out later as happening to himself and persisted in the allegation hoping to benefit by a claim against the Spanish government."

American Press Deceiving.

Speaking of the American press Senor Dupuy said it was unlike that of other countries. "It does not reflect public opinion. It is sensational and gossipy by temperament and custom. Details appear in opposite columns thoroughly inconsistent with one another. The American press cannot be taken in earnest. Anybody who feels the pulse of the American people by the press will be deceived. It is not the opinion of the government. We will proceed with that coolness and sagacity of which Mr. Cleveland has given us so many proofs."

BUCHANAN STILL HOPEFUL

Another Batch of Matter To Be Presented to the Governor To-day.

Sing Sing, N. Y., April 22.—Dr. Buchanan is bearing up remarkably well under the circumstances. He still clings to hope that the governor may yet do something in his case. Warden Sage called on Buchanan at 8:45 o'clock this morning and found him still sleeping soundly. He did not awake until after 9 o'clock. He ate a hearty breakfast. Warden Sage called on him shortly after he finished breakfast and informed him of the governor's action. He seemed disappointed, but not entirely discouraged. His wife called at the prison yesterday and had a long interview with the condemned man. He gave her instructions in regard to the new matter which is to be presented to the governor to-day in a further effort. He also sent a number of telegrams to his lawyers and friends in New York in reference to his case. Warden Sage does not think there is any chance for the condemned man. The invitations to the electrocution will probably be sent out to-day and the execution will take place Thursday or Friday, in the event of the governor not interfering.

JAPAN'S GREED.

Comment of a French Journal on the Peace Conditions.

Paris, April 22.—The Debats says in a leader on the situation in the Orient: "The Japanese occupation of Liao-Tong is a menace to both Pekin and Corea. If Japan expects Russia to renounce her policy toward Corea, she probably has made a great mistake. Moreover, France will not leave Russia isolated in the east, and Germany is not disposed to regard indifferently Japan's encroachments. Japan's conditions of peace are immoderate. Her ambitions ought to be brought down at once. England will incur a grave responsibility if she separates herself from the test of Europe at this decisive moment. Prior to the exchange of the ratifications Japan ought to see that a revision of the treaty is necessary and effect it voluntarily."

SULLIVAN SAVES A LIFE.

His hands and arms were badly burned. The woman was removed to the City hospital, where she lies in a precarious condition. Sullivan tried to have the incident withheld from the press.

NEW POINTS BY HILL

The Senator Expounds the Monroe Doctrine.

United States Not Pledged To Assume a Protectorate at All Times—Discrimination Must Be Exercised Between Legitimate Disputes and Illegitimate Purposes.

Albany, April 22.—In view of the general interest which is now being attracted to the subject of this country's relations with foreign governments and especially the discussion now in progress regarding the true features of the much talked of "Monroe Doctrine," a representative of the United Press interviewed Senator Hill at his residence, "Wolfert's Roost," in the suburbs of this city, upon this interesting topic. Senator Hill was asked, among other things, "Whether experts in public law think the Monroe doctrine has given to the United States a special right, not given by the general law, to intervene between Great Britain and Venezuela in the pending boundary dispute, or assume a protectorate over Spanish-America?" He answered that he had never thought so. "But does not the Monroe doctrine," was inquired, "declare that the United States cannot permit any Spanish-American republic on this continent to be oppressed, or its destiny controlled, by a European state?"

Not Legitimate Dispute.

"That would not have referred," he said, "to a legitimate dispute such as we, or any other government, might have to-morrow with a Spanish-American state. It protested against using such a controversy with an intention to increase European political dominion on this hemisphere, or control the destiny of an American state, or transfer a colony like Cuba, to a new European owner, but did not change what was then the law of nations. The establishment, a year or two before 1823, of more than a dozen independent states at the south of us, naturally forced the United States into new lines of thought and action.

Exerted a Powerful Influence.

"John Quincy Adams, our then minister of foreign affairs, had the eyes to discern it. Entangling alliances on this side as well as on the other side of the ocean were to be avoided so far as could be. We had to maintain impartial neutrality in the affairs of the new and independent Spanish-American states and suppress as we should do to-day piratical expeditions from our shores against any of them, or any remaining European colony. The Monroe doctrine has exerted a powerful influence, at home and abroad, in regard to Cuba, Yucatan, Nicaragua and its tribe of Mosquito Indians, invented by England; a Napoleonic dynasty set up thirty years ago in Mexico, and dominion over all the regions of projected interoceanic canals."

Not a National Pledge.

"But, was not the Monroe declaration to congress a national pledge, a guarantee of our intervention, forcible if need be, in behalf of each Spanish-American republic whenever, in our opinion, oppressed by a European state?" was asked. "I think not," he replied. "Not otherwise, certainly, than if Chili shall oppress Peru, or Mexico shall be unreasonable in dealing with Guatemala. Congress has never affirmed the Monroe doctrine. In 1868, President Johnson projected a treaty with Colombia, which was signed, embodying the Monroe doctrine; but neither the Colombian senate, nor our own senate ratified it. You remember, that when, two years after President Monroe made his declaration, a congress was convened by Bolivar at Panama for the confederation and discussion of an 'American alliance,' to enforce the declaration, there was substantial concurrence of opinion between President John Quincy Adams, who had formulated the Monroe doctrine, and the members of the senate and house, especially the democrats, including Senator Van Buren of New York, participating in a long debate, that the declaration did not pledge the United States to forever thereafter prevent a European power from interfering with the independence, or form of government, of a Central American state."

Discrimination Must Be Made.

"So you think that President Monroe has the reputation of having given his name to a rule of conduct by the United States for which neither he nor Mr. Adams contended?" "Precisely that," the senator answered. "The doctrine' cannot be formulated in a treaty, or a statute, but yet its moral influence has been, is, and ought to be very great. Discrimination should, however, be made between legitimate disputes and illegitimate purposes behind the disputes such as imposing by force European political control over the destiny of a reluctant independent Spanish American state.

Should Not Dictate.

"In 1883 President Arthur did authorize Secretary Frelinghuysen to go so far as to say officially that the state department will not sanction arbitration by European states of South American difficulties, even with the consent of the parties. Two years before that, Secretary Blaine had written to our minister a Paris that the president would regard with grave anxiety an attempt by France to force, by hostile pressure, the payment by Venezuela of her debt to French citizens. Interposing our good offices between England and Venezuela is one thing, but dictating to one or the other in a peremptory way is a very different thing, unless it be a clear case of self defense."

Emergency Hospital

Doctors and nurses realize the necessity of counteracting the effects of the "shock" which accompanies all accident and surgical cases, and which more often proves fatal than the original cause.

Animation is temporarily suspended. Something must be done to start "the wheels" going again, as it were. The stomach is in no condition to digest a sufficient amount of food to nourish the other organs of the body, so they resort to the original raw food, because the least amount of it contains the most life, strength and blood-producing qualities of anything known to medical science. It will, unaided, sustain strength for weeks, and can be retained by the Weakest Stomach.

Bovinine is not a medicine, but a builder of flesh and bone, and a maker of blood. For all cases of sickness, chronic invalids, infants or the aged, it is indispensable. 25,000 physicians endorse it. Sold by all druggists. The Bovinine Co., New York.

CONSUL WALLER'S CASE

Strong Instructions Sent to Ambassador Eustis.

Investigation To Be Made of the Summary Court Martial Proceedings—Waller Taken from the Steamship Djemnah and Conducted to Fort Saint Nicol.

Marseilles, April 22.—Jonn L. Waller, once United States consul at Tamatave, who arrived here from Madagascar Saturday afternoon under guard aboard the steamship Djemnah, has been taken to Fort Saint Nicol, where he will be confined until transferred to the civil authorities. Waller is accused by the French of conspiring with the Hovas against the protectorate in Madagascar.

Action Taken at Washington.

Washington, April 22.—While the action of the French goverment, in having ex-Consul Waller brought to France under guard, will only add to the amount of indemnity it will be called upon to pay should Mr. Waller's friends show that the charge upon which he was sentenced is baseless, it will facilitate efforts of the department of state to develop fully the facts in the case.

Instructions to Eustis.

Ambassador Eustis has been instructed to pursue the matter to an end. He will also make a special examination into the legality under treaty stipulations of the trial of a citizen of a friendly nation by court-martial, instead of the regular civil tribunal. Moreover, the case may involve the right of France to exercise jurisdiction over the internal affairs of Madagascar, from which she appears to have been expressly excluded by the treaty of 1885, which gave her only jurisdiction over the foreign relations of Madagascar.

Senator Voorhees Interested.

Washington friends of Mr. Waller are bringing all the influence possible to bear in his behalf upon the state department. Senator Voorhees has had one or two interviews with Secretary Gresham, and has presented to him in a strong light the importance, as well as the propriety, of the United States investigating the question of Waller's treatment. After seeing the secretary, Senator Voorhees said he had found Mr. Gresham quite as much interested in the case he was.

Waller's Large Concession.

There can be no doubt that the Waller incident will prove to be one of the most difficult that this administration has had to contend with in its treatment of foreign affairs. It is an interesting question as to what has become of Mr. Waller's concession. He had an absolute grant of about 200 miles of most valuable lands in Madagascar, abounding in rubber trees and other tropical products, which he had partly arranged to market. It is well known here that every effort had been made to dispossess him by other holders of concessions, who desired to seize upon these lands. But so far as the facts are known Mr. Waller obtained this concession in a perfectly legitimate manner.

Harrison's Eastern Trip.

Indianapolis, April 22.—Ex-President Harrison expects to go east as soon as the trial at Richmond ends, which he thinks will be some time the first of next month. He said last night he would probably attend the semi-centennial of the New Jersey Historical society at Newark. The society will present the ex-president with a gold medal in honor of his participation in the 100th anniversary of the inauguration of President Washington.

Waite Voted a Mixed Ticket.

Denver, Col., April 22.—The statement that ex-Governor Waite aided in the election of the republican ticket in Denver this spring is unwarranted. The governor said yesterday that he took no active part in the campaign. He voted for the prohibition candidates for mayor and clerk, for one candidate on the American ticket, said to be a populist, and for the remainder of the taxpayers' candidates.

Another Ripper Murder.

New York, April 22.—Alice Walsh, 23 years old, a dissolute woman of the town was murdered some time early Sunday morning in the Thompson street district. She had been stabbed in the pelvis region and her body from her waist down showed marks of terrible beating. She was found dying in a hallway. Two arrests on suspicion have been made.

Guilty of Murder.

Scranton, Pa., April 22.—Leonardo Rosa was found guilty of murder in the first degree yesterday for killing Vito Lorussa, in February last. The evidence against Rosa was mainly circumstantial and the jury was out twenty hours. There are now three aliens under sentence of death in the county jail.

New York, April 22.—A special cable from Colon, Colombia, says: The government has issued an order for the discontinuance of the censorship over telegraphic despatches. The censorship, however, continues on the Atlantic coast.

SAD DROWNING AFFAIR.

A Young Couple's Strange Actions in a Boat at Washington.

Washington, April 22.—A sensational drowning affair occurred in the eastern branch of the Potomac river yesterday afternoon. Irving Lyles and Miss Chase Cantor were out rowing, and when the boat was off Second street people on shore saw them standing up in the boat holding each other's hands. Suddenly Miss Cantor released her grasp on Lyles' hands and fell or jumped in the water. Lyles followed her immediately as if to rescue her. They struggled together for a moment and Miss Cantor disappeared. Lyles caught hold of the boat, which was a large flat bottomed skiff, but despite the shouts to hold on from the occupant of a boat rapidly nearing them, he let go and sank. It is believed that either Miss Cantor dragged Lyles down with her, or that when he realized that she was drowned, he purposely relaxed his hold upon the boat and sank with her. Lyles was 20 years of age and Miss Cantor about 18, and were engaged to be married. They were both members of the choir of Emanuel Episcopal church of Anacostia and had participated in the morning services there.

FALL RIVER'S BRIGHT OUTLOOK

Mills Resume This Morning Under Old Wage Scale.

Fall River, Mass., April 22.—The mills resumed operations this morning under the scale of wages in operation previous to August 20, 1894. Twenty four thousand workers will be benefitted. There is every prospect of a fair trade during the coming summer, as the mills are now fairly well sold ahead. Since the last reduction of wages there has been the greatest scarcity of help ever noticed in this centre. Overseers of mills say this has been due to sickness, low wages and a feeling among the floating help that a strike would take place here during the warm weather, if wages were not advanced.

PERRY IN CLOVER.

He Receives a Basket of Fruit and Another Boquet.

Jersey City, April 22.—Oliver C. Perry, the train-robber, passed a quiet Sunday in jail here. One of his admirers sent him a basket of fruit and another a large boquet. It was said that the fruit was the gift of a young lady, but her name is not known. The praying band of the Newman mission visited the jail, and, although there was no services in Perry's behalf, a hymn was sung at his request. The taking of testimony in Perry's case began at 10 o'clock this morning before United States Commissioner Nugent.

Mr. Moore is 52 years of age, and has been riding a wheel but three months. He is consequently very proud of his record.

Feared That She May Not Survive Her Injuries.

FIVE NEGROES LYNCHED

Two Women and Three Men Swung Off.

Taken from Their Guards at an Early Hour Sunday Morning Near Greenville, Ala., by One Hundred Armed Men—They Were Accused of Murdering a White Man.

Montgomery, Ala., April 22.—A gentleman just arrived from Greenville, Ala., forty miles south of here, reports that five negroes were lynched near there Saturday night. Just before his train left Greenville the sheriff of the county came into town. He reported that in passing through the Buckalow plantation, three miles distant, he had found the five negroes.

Three Men and Two Women.

There were three men and two women. They were hanging by their necks to trees. Their bodies were cold and they had evidently been dead for several hours. Saturday night news reached Greenville of the brutal murder near Butler, in that county, of Watts Murphy, a popular young white man, by three negroes. Murphy was a nephew of the late Gov. Watts of this city.

Murdered and Burned His Body.

After murdering him, the negroes placed his body in a brush heap and burned the heap. The debris was examined and parts of the victim were found. The balance of the body had been consumed. An investigation was instituted. Three negroes were arrested. One of the negroes confessed the crime, implicating two other men and the negro women.

Overpowered the Posse.

A posse who had charge of the negroes started from Butler Springs, a distance of sixteen miles west of Greenville, with the prisoners at about 10 or 11 o'clock Saturday night with the object of placing them all in the county jail for trial. At 3 o'clock yesterday morning, at a lonely place, the party was halted and commanded under pain of instant death to be still. A hundred armed men took the five prisoners from the guards and hung them to limbs of trees leaving their bodies dangling there.

THE BABY WOULDN'T CRY

How Edison Finally Secured the Phonographic Record of His First Born's Woe.

Here is a story they tell over the teacups in Orange, N. J., where Edison lives:

The phonograph came to the Edison laboratory and the first baby to the Edison home about the same time, and when the baby was old enough to say "Goo-goo" and pull the great inventor's hair in a most disrespectful manner the phonograph was near enough perfection to capture the baby talk for preservation among the family archives. So Mr. Edison filled up several rolls with these pretty inarticulations and laid them carefully away.

But this was not sufficient. The most picturesque thing about the baby's utterances was its crying, and the record of this its fond father determined to secure. How it would entertain him in his old age, he thought, to start the phonograph a-going and hear again the baby wails of his first born.

So one afternoon Mr. Edison tore himself from his work and climbed the big hill leading to his house. He went in a great hurry, for he is a man who grudges every working moment from his labors. A workman followed at his heels carrying the only phonograph that at that time had been sufficiently completed to accomplish really good results.

Reaching home and the nursery Mr. Edison started the phonograph and brought the baby in front of it. But the baby didn't cry. Mr. Edison tumbled the baby about and rumpled its hair, and did all sorts of things, but still the baby didn't cry. Then he made dreadful faces, but the baby thought they were very funny and crowed joyously. So back to the laboratory went Mr. Edison in a very unpleasant frame of mind, for the baby's untimely good humor had cost him an hour of work. The phonograph was also taken back.

But he did not give it up. The next afternoon he went home again and the phonograph with him, but if the baby was good natured the day before this time it was absolutely cherubic. There was nothing at all that its father could do that did not make the baby laugh. Even the phonograph itself, with its tiny, whirring wheels, the baby thought was meant for its special entertainment and gurgled joyously. So back to work the inventor went again, with a temper positively ruffled. The next day and the next he tried it, but all to no purpose. The baby would not cry, even when waked suddenly from sleep.

But to baffle Edison is only to inflame his determination, which, by the way, is one of the secrets of his success. So at length after much thought he made a mighty resolve. It took a vast amount of determination on his part to screw himself up to the point of committing the awful deed, but he succeeded at last, and one morning when he knew his wife was down town he went quietly home with the phonograph and stole into the nursery, where the baby greeted him with customary glee.

Starting the machine Mr. Edison ordered the nurse to leave the room. Then he took the baby on his knee and bared its chubby little leg. He took the tender flesh between his thumb and finger, clinched his teeth, shut his eyes tight and made ready to—yes, actually to pinch the baby's leg.

But just at the fateful moment the nurse peeped through the door and perceiving the horrid plot flounced in and rescued the baby in the nick of time.

Mr. Edison breathed a mighty sigh of relief as he gathered up the phonograph and went back to the laboratory. He then gave up the project of phonographing the baby's crying.

But not long afterward he accomplished his purpose after all, and quite unexpectedly, too. As soon as the baby was old enough to "take notice" its doting mother took it down to the laboratory one sunny day, and when the big machinery was started a-roaring the baby screwed up it face, opened its mouth and emitted a series of screams that made Edison leap to his feet.

"Stop the machinery and start the phonograph!" he shouted, and the record of the baby's crying was then and there accomplished.

A Pair of Pet Wasps.

A young woman residing near Monroe, La., in the river country, has a pair of pet wasps which are as interesting as they are unique. She has trained them to perform a great many wonderful tricks, and it is indeed marvelous to what degree of intelligence and agility her kindly care and patient perseverance has brought them. As the young lady is an invalid she manages to get a great deal of diversion from her queer little pets.

Among other things she has taught them to drink water from a thimble and to perform the "skirt dance," as she calls it, by fluttering their wings as they rest in the palm of her hand. They will sing at her bidding, making a faint, almost inaudible cheep, and seem to be passionately fond of music. The young lady is a musician, and when she plays on the piano the wasps take up their positions on the music rack and never budge until the performance is over.

The wasps seem to have a good deal of vanity, and nothing delights them more than to be allowed to walk about and inspect themselves on a little hand mirror which is kept for their exclusive use. Strange to relate, the wasps have never been known to attempt to sting anybody, although they have free access to all parts of the house and are seldom confined, even at night.

WHITE OF PLAINFIELD.

A SUMMER NIGHT.

BY MAXWELL GRAY.

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

CHAPTER I.

Sunbeams falling slant and soft towards the close of a long, glowing, glorious summer day, shooting through translucent hangings of gold-green leaves and interstices of grass and cornstalks, stretching long vague shadows upon sun-drenched turf and dusty roadway, burning in smouldering luster on the west face of the church tower, resting caressingly on the chimney-pots, roofs and garret windows, and dazzling from high western window panes, while the sun-baked streets below lay in cool, deep shadow, and townsfolk began to breathe freely and to think of restful, pleasant things. Sunbeams caught by glass of dormer windows and tossed back upon the wall opposite an open casement, where the tailor's son sat coughing, large-eyed and hectic, made his heart faint with longing at the thought of sunlight upon the cliffs and sea-waves, meadows, woods and hill-slopes he would see no more.

The streets began to echo with leisurely steps of tired people strolling in the coolness, voices floated, softened yet distinct on the pleasant still air with the indescribable tonal quality so distinctive of summer time. The tailor's son heard snatches of talk rising thus pleasantly to the window with the scent of his father's pipe and the sound of his father's slow steps on the pavement, where he paced, with rolled-up shirt-sleeves and unbuttoned waistcoat, stopping now and again to exchange a word with a passer-by.

Over the way a large private house with two doors was set among the shops. One door stood wide and offered through a back doorway a glimpse of foliage and garden turf, translucent in the late sunshine, suggestive of infinite stretches of wood and meadow and mossy stream. It was the doctor's house. By and by perhaps the doctor would step over the way, run up the creaking stair, feel the lad's pulse, chat for ten minutes and run back again. He often did this; it was always a pleasant possibility to look forward to. The boy was developing a tranquil philosophy; the pleasantest things in life, he thought, are the things that may occur and sometimes do. They are also the saddest; but he was not old enough to know that.

The doctor's old red brick house was a source of perennial pleasure, a tranquil stage on which dramas were shown but seldom played through; an act here, a scene there, suggested endless combinations to be worked out by idle fancy; the framework of the daily domestic comedy was always visible. The next scene would be lighting of windows and descent of blinds. The table in the room to the right of the door was laid for supper; he caught gleams of a white cloth, glitter of silver and glass, and color of red-shaded candles ready to be lighted. The doctor's young wife stood by the table, smiling faintly and putting the last touch to a cool and pleasant arrangement of tenderest greens of crisp lettuce, transparent ivory of cucumber, shell white of young onion, and deep red of radish. Such a salad, in the pretty porcelain bowl that had been a wedding present, such a salad, she thought, as would surprise the doctor and fill him with delight and make him repent his saying that no female hand could rightly mix a salad. And it did surprise him; because she had used, in generous plenitude, excellent clear castor oil, mistaking it for olive. The doctor's wife had yet to learn what tragedy may mar the honeyed peace of early conjugal felicity; so she went on faintly smiling, adjusted her slices of hard-boiled egg to perfect symmetry on the top and daintily crossed the spoon and fork above, all unconscious of the doom that lurked within the bowl.

THE YOUNG WIFE STOOD BY THE TABLE.

A cheerful pop sounded through the the open window across the street, the kind of pop that inspires a delicious thirst on a hot day, conjuring up visions of cool and ruddy claret, surf-like creaming of bright champagne, or clear amber and ivory froth of the honest native drink for which the banks of Trent are justly renowned. The amiable gurgle that followed as the doctor's wife poured the claret into the tall, slim cup was inaudible save to herself. She liked the maids to be out of an evening, if only to give her an opportunity of impressing the doctor with due respect for her household capabilities. One last touch to the bowl of fresh roses a farmer's wife had tucked under the seat of the doctor's dog cart, another to the parsley adorning the cold fowl, a slight pause to consider the advisability of lighting candles, and she went out, slim and pretty in her white gown, softly singing to herself, to call the doctor to supper, while the tailor's son watched the gas burst into flame in the surgery and witnessed the execution of a breakdown, ending in high kicks that would have assured wealth beyond the dreams of avarice to a lady on the London boards, by the surgery boy, whose subsequent enjoyment of a nefarious effervescing drink out of the glass physic-measure, was also tantalizingly visible.

"Horace! Horace!" called the doctor's wife, her white figure swallowed up in the green lucent gloom beyond the garden door.

The doctor supposed himself to be reading the Standard in the summer house in the company of a short black pipe and a small white dog. But in this he was mistaken. He was but just home from a long dusty journey, or rather round of journeys, his head had fallen forward on his chest, the Standard was slipping over his outstretched legs from one limp hand, and his pipe dropping its dead ashes on the dog's back and the gravel path from the other, while those rhythmic mellifluous sounds that give pleasing assurance of a good man's slumber played upon the summer air.

"Horace!" cried the doctor's wife. "Lazy fellow!" and the little dog jumped up and barked. "Ay—hum!" muttered the doctor thickly, as he opened and closed his heavy eyes, "no night bell—heaven!"

Through the now open doors of garden and street the town sounds floated in; a boy whistling, the far-off roll of a solitary carriage, murmur of voices, the church clock striking in lordly leisure nine mellow strokes on the tremulous waiting air, and then—a long way off, a sharp, quick click rousing a thin, sharp echo. The click grew sharper, yet fuller, it broadened and was a click no more, the echo ceased, and the tailor's son recognized in the fuller sonority of the strokes the hoof-beats of a galloping horse on the hill; they quickened down the steep descent, grew louder and hollower over the bridge, and full and strong on the hard street road with a confused ring of echoes from the houses. The people turned at the sound of the mad, ever-quickening gallop, to see a strong, firm-necked cob, streaming with sweat, flecked with foam, red of nostril and with bleeding mouth, ridden by a hatless man in shirtsleeves, tear along the street and thunder up to the doctor's door, where, pulled on his haunches he stopped and seemed to shoot his rider to the ground. No sooner did the man touch the dusty road than he was at the door, tearing at the bells labeled "Night" and "Surgery," leaving the panting, streaming horse to blow noisily and shake himself on his quivering legs with down-drooped head. The surgery boy leisurely finished his nefarious drink and even rinsed the glass before responding to the furious ringing of the bells, faintly curious to see how long and how loud the man could or would ring. The doctor's wife jumped nervously at the first sharp peal, the little dog barked passionately, the doctor dropped his pipe and made a face.

"Come di-rectly; the chickens are taken with the pip; old Granny Jones has the tooth-ache; pray ring a little louder. Where is that scamp of a boy?" he murmured with sarcastic resignation.

"Horace you shall not go," Mrs. Newman decided. "You've had nothing to eat; you are tired out, and such a salad I've mixed."

"I won't go, I'll be hanged if I'll go!"

"Come to supper, before the ice melts in the pail. I'll say you are—"

"Say I'm out, I'm dead, I shan't be home all night, I'm at church, I've got the smallpox," grumbled the doctor, steadily moving all the time, not supper-wards, whither his wife tried to draw him, but towards the surgery. "I've not been home half an hour. Am I a slave? Can't I have a minute's peace? May I never eat?"

"And the claret you ordered yesterday dear. And the salad," pleaded the anxious wife.

"I'm dog-tired, and not a horse in the stable fit to go."

"Please, sir, it's Mr. Adams, of Thornly, and come at once and he's rode hard and his horse is blowed," panted the surgery boy.

The tailor's son was excited, he heard not only the loud, continuous ringing at the surgery door, but the urgent summons of the hatless rider, who now leant, pale beneath the brown of his drawn, wet face, panting against the door-post, staring vacantly at the opposite window, regardless of the comments and inquiries of a little group of loungers, including the tailor, while the blown horse snorted and shook his quivering flanks and reins thrown loose on his neck.

Presently the man, after a word with the doctor, moved heavily from the door, and, taking the cob's bridle on his arm, led him slowly up and down the road. The doctor and his wife, the latter conspicuous in her white dress, moved quickly about the surgery and consulting-room, opening drawers and brass-bound mahogany boxes, taking things out and making up a parcel, while the surgery boy fled like one possessed down the street and round the corner, returning soon in a dog-cart driven by a groom who leapt to the pavement at the door, when the doctor as quickly leapt into the cart, stowing the parcel under the seat and driving off with a lessening clatter and rattle down the echoing street, over the bridge and up the hill into the silence of the sweet summer night.

THE DISPENSERS OF PHYSIC.

The Brooklyn Eagle Defend the Latin Prescriptions of Doctors.

A correspondent of the Eagle, Mr. Leander J. White, wants the legislature to pass a bill requiring doctors to write their prescriptions in English instead of in Latin. Mr. White presents a variety of reasons why, in his judgment, the change would be desirable, the main one being that the use of Latin renders it an easy matter for the doctors and the druggists to form a conspiracy to plunder the public. In order that we may not do an injustice to our correspondent, we quote his exact words:

"To illustrate, suppose a doctor wishes to give a patient an ounce of salts, value 5 cents; this he would take upon the old plan at one draught, dissolved in half a tumbler of Croton water. Now the doctors write it this, always beginning with the sign of Jupiter, and generally ending in excellent hog Latin, more especially if the druggist cannot understand the language; moreover, they write it in a miserable hand, because that looks learned, and abbreviate each word, because their time is so valuable:

R.

Sulph. Mag. ℥i
Ag. Fol. Rosar ℥viii
(Initials of name.)

Now follows the abbreviated Latin directions: 'Cap. coch. mag. guacumber.' This may be hog Latin or not, just as you please, for by not finishing the words they avoid error. What does it all mean? An ounce of epsom salts and eight ounces of rose water, take a large spoonfull every hour; that's all. It only costs the druggists 7 cents. The patient is told that it is very particular and expensive medicine, and his doctor always gets his medicine more carefully and reasonably prepared at Mr. So and So's; innocently swallows the lie and a dose of this medicine every hour; he rarely gets off for less than eight. In conclusion, give us prescriptions in English in lieu of hog Latin."

We have no doubt that there are thousands of people who are disposed to take a similar view of this subject. But with due respect, we must beg to differ with them, and that for reasons based both on scientific no less than on grounds of expedience and common sense. The dead languages are the only ones the words of which have an invariable meaning. The names of some of our commonest vegetable medicines would, in English, be very misleading because they would mean one thing in one State and something entirely different in another State. The varieties of those medicines are both indicated and differentiated in botany by the careful use of Latin expressions. It is the same way with the animals—the cat tribe and the dog tribe for example. Under the Latin designations for these terms there are thousands of variations which are indicated with precision, a precision that the inflexible, unchangeable, solidified and dead character of the Latin language alone renders possible. Until zoology and botany can be written in English it is idle to expect that there shall be a departure from the Latin language so far as medicine is concerned.

The press is the best instrument for enlightening the mind of man and improving him as a rational, moral and social being.—Thomas Jefferson.

Notice is hereby given that the ordinance of the Borough of North Plainfield requires that flagsidewalks be laid, and prohibits the laying of new board walks or repairing of old board walks.

An impression seems to exist that old board walks may be repaired without violation of the ordinance.

Public notice of this fact is now again given so that no one need feel aggrieved if they are required to replace a newly laid or repaired board walk with stone.

MATTHEW LEWIS.

He was the eldest son of a Scotch baronet of old family, and when the most memorable of all his experiences befell him he was about 23 years of age. He went from London on a holiday trip to a seaside town on the southeast coast of England. The month was August—toward the close of it, when the shadow of September was in the air and when you might sometimes hear a sullen noise of winter in the beat of the sullen breakers dissolving upon the sand.

Directly opposite the town he visited, at the distance of about six or seven miles, stretches the yellow line of the most dangerous shoal in the world—the most dangerous I say because of the prodigious annual traffic in the historic waterway upon whose surface it seems to float. This shoal is called the Goodwin Sands.

Let the name of the hero of this adventure stand as Matthew Lewis. On the morning of the third day after his arrival at Broadstairs Mr. Lewis, seeing that the morning was fine, the sea smooth, the sunshine warm and the sky full of the promise of pleasant weather, walked down to the little, primitive, tarry stump of pier with the intention of killing an hour or two by rowing in a boat. He fell into conversation with a waterman who lounged out of the Tartar Frigate Inn as Mr. Lewis stood viewing the sea.

"How far distant are the Goodwin Sands?" asked my friend.

The longshoreman told him.

"About fourteen miles there and back," said Mr. Lewis, eying the boatman's wart-ridden face with a musing countenance. "Five miles an hour and a spell of rest; call it about four hours and a half."

He looked at his watch, recollected that the town was exceedingly dull, that his object in visiting the seaside was to spend on the water all the time he could snatch from meals and sleep and that a visit to the Goodwins and a short walk on the hard sand of the shoal would furnish him with something to talk about, and even to boast of, on his return.

He was a smart yachtsman, and in a fresh water sort of way "knew the ropes." He made certain inquiries touching the tides and then stepping into the Tartar Frigate Inn he obtained a bottle of water, a small quantity of brandy and a bag of biscuits and stowed them in his coat pockets. He now walked down to the little harbor, selected and hired a light, clean boat, entered her, and rowed away out to sea, all alone.

Until he reached the Goodwin Sands nothing in any degree noteworthy occurred. The air was sweet and refreshing. The chalk cliffs shone in the morning light with a milk white softness. Whatever Mr. Lewis's eye rested upon he found idealized by distance, and the blue and silver splendor in the atmosphere and by that wonderful sense of material spaciousness and human lightness which works like a spirit in the mind's perceptions and interpretations at sea.

The long, serpentine sand bank lay uncovered, hard, firm, gleaming yellow in its sinuosities into the southern and northern distances.

About a quarter of a mile from the spot where the nose of Mr. Lewis' boat struck lay a wreck, buried in the sand to her covering board.

She had been a brig, loaded with coal, and had gone ashore some fortnight or so before this time. Her foremast and topmast still stood with the yards across, supported by the shrouds and backstays and by the stays leading to the bowsprit, which forked at a considerable angle out of the sand.

Mr. Lewis eyed the wreck yearningly. No imagination of shipwreck could have found such forlorn expression as that sand buried one masted brig.

He determined to get on the sand and walk to her, and made no doubt of effectually securing his boat by staking an oar and attaching the wherry's painter to it. This he did and then walked to the wreck.

The nearer he approached the less picturesque and admirable he found her. Her gauntness grew shocking; he caught himself glancing around for the sight of a human skeleton, or the more dreadful spectacle of a drowned mariner in his clothes. Discovering that a portion of the decks were uncovered, he grasped the lanyards of a shroud and vaulted over the rail.

Mr. Lewis had inherited from his mother a poetic cast of mind, and whenever accident landed him in a novel situation, where there was no danger, he loved to surrender himself to sensation and feeling. He sat down and realized that he was on board a brig wrecked to the very last extremity, whose utter evanishment, as though she had been wrought out of smoke, could only be a question of a few days of calm weather, or an hour that afternoon of a gale of wind.

Now was he horrified to discover that something more than time had slipped away. His boat was gone! He did not need to look long to see her; she was floating some few hundred yards off, towing the oar with her, and drifting away with the tide at a speed that every minute would increase.

His consternation was profound. The menace was that of death, and of a death to be rendered more awful by cruel delay and tardy approach.

He gazed in the direction of the Downs. Many ships were assembled there. Galleys and punts were crawling about among them, but everything was far too remote to be of use to him.

He looked round the sea. A distant sail gleamed here and there, and here and there some iron tank of a steamship, with half her hull hidden, ploughed through the water with the grace of a cart horse's trot.

Mr. Lewis' one hope of deliverance was that the boatman to whom the wherry belonged would be rendered uneasy by the long absence of his customer and put off to seek him.

The afternoon was now advancing and the tide was beginning to make. The stealthy lift of the water had already buried a considerable portion of the sands in places. Mr. Lewis ate a biscuit, and then, understanding that there was no hope of saving his life except by climbing the mast of the wrecked brig, he walked to the vessel, and drawing forth his knife, cut off a length of rope wherewith to attach himself to the rigging.

About this time the sky thickened in the south. The wind came on to blow in sighs and pauses and little playful rushes, until presently it had settled into a steady, strong wind, with short, snapping seas rolling and worrying in snow along the whole line of shoal. Many clouds sailed up fast off the land of France.

Mr. Lewis remained upon the deck of the brig until the seas began to jump aboard. Then he climbed into the foretop—a little platform that provided him with a seat, where he found some shelter for his back in the head of the mast. He attached his white handkerchief to a shroud and it blew out like a flag. He hoped this tiny signal might attract attention ashore.

But his handkerchief blew out in vain; no boat put off to his rescue. Nothing came near him. The three lightships, moored at wide intervals, and all of them at a great distance, heeded him not.

The night drew down, cloudy, but clear in the spaces between the shadows. The bright moon touched the troubled waters with a glance of splendor as she sailed into the wide lagoons of deep, dark blue.

Mr. Lewis felt wretchedly cold and miserable, but not entirely hopeless. The mast stood bravely; the wind, too, was fast scanting. The tide was ebbing; the nights, moreover, were short, and he could not question but that at daybreak something would pass by close enough to perceive and take him off. His little stock of brandy and biscuits helped to support his strength.

When the sands were hard and bare he descended the rigging to walk about, that he might trudge the cramp out of his limbs and set his blood a-flowing. While he paced vigorously, growing warm with the exercise, ceaselessly casting eager looks about him in search of help, he beheld a pallid shadow drawing near out of the south.

The moon was then hidden. Mr. Lewis stood straining his eyes. The satellite flashed out of the edge of a cloud, and in the ivory white gush of brilliance Mr. Lewis spied a little cutter, helpless or abandoned, drifting broadside on to the sand. Her peak halyards had been let go and her staysforesail fluttered, half hauled down.

My friend waited until he thought she was within reach of his voice; he then put his hands to his mouth and roared out:

"Cutter ahoy!"

He was answered by a woman's voice that came along in the now soft and gentle wind with the note of a shriek in it. He bawled again, advising whoever might be on board to let go the anchor before the vessel came ashore, and send a boat, if they had one, to take him off. The woman's voice answered shrill and clear:

"We are four girls; we are quite helpless and don't know what to do. We have a boat but we are unable to make use of her."

All this while the drift of the little cutter was tolerably rapid, and in twenty minutes from the time of Mr. Lewis first perceiving her she sailed on to the bank and hung with her head looking southeast.

Mr. Lewis stood close to the spot where she came ashore. She was a cutter of about fifteen tons, and he perceived by the moonlight that she carried a small punt in her gangway. Four female figures stood on the after part of her deck—all young girls of 18 or 20 so far as my friend could tell by the troubled light of the night. The surf ran softly along the edge of the shoal and the little air of wind was nearly gone.

"Whoever you are, come and help us!" cried one of the girls.

"Have you no man on board?" called Mr. Lewis.

"No. We are four young girls. We ventured out for fun out of the port of Boulogne. The wind rose and we've been blown all this way here. We don't know where we are and we are helpless."

Without speaking a word Mr. Lewis walked into the water to the side of the little craft, and nimbly clambered to her deck.

"Now," cried he, "this is no time for questions or explanations. You are four young girls but you must help me, and keep up your heart and do what I say or we may be all drowned people before the sun rises."

He ran to the bow and found there a little anchor attached to its cable. He called to the four girls and with their aid got the anchor, which might have weighed something over a hundredweight, over the bow, where Mr. Lewis left it hang. He then opened the little gangway, and, still bidding the girls to help him, he ran the punt smack fashion into the water and paddled her to the bow under the anchor.

He regained the deck and lowered the anchor into the boat; then swiftly explaining his intentions to the girls and telling them what to do, he jumped into the punt and sculled as far as the scope of cable attached to the anchor would admit of. He then threw the anchor overboard and returned to the deck of the cutter.

"This way, if you please," he cried, "and help me as briskly as you can. I believe we shall yet be able to save ourselves."

So saying he shipped handspikes in the windlass, and they all went to work to heave the vessel off. The weight of the five people being forward, lifted the tail of the vessel off the sand, and materially assisted the strain on the cable.

After ten minutes of heaving, Mr. Lewis was overjoyed to find that they had started the cutter. Happily the anchor dropped where its grip was good.

They hove until the cable was up and down. Mr. Lewis, then spying two long oars, threw them over, stationing two girls at each oar and with his own hands, his coat off and straining very hard, broke out the anchor.

"Now pull!" he roared; and the girls, giving way, swept the cutter out right athwart the delicate, soft blowing of the night air.

My friend clapped his hands with delight, and lifting the anchor clear of the water with a few revolutions of the windlass, made all fast and sprang to help at the oars. They pulled until the shoal was a good half mile astern of them.

Mr. Lewis then masthead the foresail and hoisted the peak of the mainsail, setting the sail properly, and went to the little tiller while the girls still ground at the oars. But as soon as he found the cutter under command, drawing away from the sands and holding her own, he requested the young ladies to throw their oars in.

They did so, panting, and gathered about him with many signs of weakness and exhaustion in their manner. He, too, as he told me, now that he had been miraculously delivered, felt half dead from exposure in the rigging of the brig, and from long protracted, keen distress of mind. It was impossible to distinguish faces, for now the moon had westered and her light was dull.

The girls' story was this: Three of them were daughters of an English gentleman on a visit to Boulogne-sur-mer; the fourth was a young French lady, an intimate friend of the family. The cutter belonged to the English girls' brother. Out of wantonness and fired by the desire to be talked about and looked at, the four young ladies had agreed to sail the yacht without help out of Boulogne Harbor, cruise awhile off the coast and then return.

They had sailed with their brother and imagined that they knew how to handle a boat. The French girl had assured them that she could steer incomparably well. It is perfectly true that she managed to navigate the cutter between the two piers without running into either; but when they were at sea and the breeze took them, the young French lady lost her head, and the English girls saw that she did not know which way to put the helm as occasion required.

They were blown out to sea, but their situation of distress was not noticed on shore. They had no knowledge of tacking; the breeze which had come on hard when Mr. Lewis was up in the brig's mast blew dead off the Boulogne coast. The girls let go a rope or two, and they also let go the helm, and the little cutter, sometimes giving her stern to it and sometimes her broadside, made as pretty a course as could have been contrived by a steersman with the help of a compass card for the deadly Goodwin Sands.

This was the young ladies' story; and while they conversed with Mr. Lewis, who in his turn related his own experience, the day broke. Now they could see one another.

The three English girls were pretty, but their faces were pale, and wore as complete an expression of shipwreck as though they had been brought ashore in the lifeboat from a hideous scene of storm and panic and drowning. The French lady was paler still than the English girls. Their names—but that matters not.

Mr. Lewis, giving the helm to one of them to hold, descended into the cabin to seek for refreshments, and found biscuits, fruit and other trifling matter in sufficient quantity to provide them all with a meal.

The yacht had come ashore on the eastern side of the Goodwin Sands; and as Mr. Lewis proposed to carry the ladies to an English port—either Dover or Folkestone—he kept the little vessel on a westerly course parallel with the long line of shoal.

Unfortunately the wind slackened and a dead calm fell; and to save the yacht from drifting ashore Mr. Lewis was forced to let go the anchor. When this was done he half masted a color, hoping that the distress flag would be seen across the sands at Deal or Ramsgate.

They lay until the afternoon in a dead calm, motionless at anchor, in all of which time Mr. Lewis sought to keep up the spirits of the young ladies by assuring them that there was no danger, and by making them understand that even if their half masted flag were seen a boat would occupy a long while in pulling round the southernmost limb of the shoal to get at them.

About 4 o'clock a vessel was observed heading in their direction out of the south. She came along fast and direct. Mr. Lewis, putting the cutter's telescope to his eye, told the ladies that the vessel was a tug and that there were several people on her bridge, and that he believed that she was out in search of the cutter.

It proved as he conjectured; the tug, with the father and brother of the young ladies on board, drew close to the yacht. A boat was lowered, the party were quickly transferred, and the tug with the yacht in tow started for Boulogne harbor.

Mr. Lewis was cordially received and warmly thanked by the father and brother of the English girls, and much was made of him as the deliverer of the four young ladies from a situation of direst peril.

This is a true romance of the Goodwin Sands—one of hundreds—in which, however, I am bound to say there occurs but little moonlight and less sentiment. The boat which had gone adrift and left Mr. Lewis in the lurch was picked up and towed to Broadstairs, and it was supposed that my friend had been miserably drowned until his landlady heard from him from Boulogne.—W. Clark Russell in Youth's Companion.

AT A PENNY READING.

"Charge of the Light Brigade" Naturally Brought Down the Stage.

After the waltz at our parish penny reading came a recitation by Ignatius Brockley, or something like it.

Ignatius was a tremendous fellow.

He recited "The Charge of the Light Brigade."

He was only moderately insane up to the place where "some one had blundered;" but these latter words appeared to excite him to frenzy, and he suddenly became a dangerous lunatic. He shook his fist at us all as he careered up and down the stage; he ducked his head as though dodging cannon balls; he reached the foe and dug at him fiercely with ugly bayonet thrusts; he spiked the guns with cheers and hoarse shouts, and then he galloped home like the hero that he was and wiped the perspiration from his brow as he came down amid a storm of shouts and yells.

I'm sure we all felt very proud of ourselves as Britons and wished we could all be as noble as Ignatius.

But Ignatius gave us to understand that his feelings were too much for him—at least that is how I interpreted his actions; he returned to the stage and bowed and smiled, but waggled his head in a negative manner and continued to wipe his brow with one hand while he covered his heart with the other.

Reciters, I have observed, are occasionally much affected by their own performances; the audience likes them to be so and thinks great things of the reciter who can make himself cry—they take him for a poet and tell one another that "that young fellow will be heard," and so on.—Cornhill Magazine.

When this here country's goin' down,
When thar's a mortgage on the town,
When cotton's sinkin' out o' sight

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Amos H. VanHorn, Limited, 73 Market Street, Near Plane Street.

Note the Name Amos Before Entering the Store.

COME EVERY DAY.

Whenever you come you find fresh features in Furniture and Household Wares to greet you. Just now nothing seems impossible in the line of economy in this store. Whatever you want maybe you can fill it here at a third—often half—the price you'll pay elsewhere. For instance:

PARLOR SUITS.

$20—Whoever thought to see such a splendid suit as this for such a little price? You'll wonder how the material can be bought for so small a figure and not count the making. Not many, only enough to keep the sale going this week, so you'd best be quick. Mahogany finished frame, five pieces.

MATTINGS.

15c. the yard and made in Japan. You know what that means. Quaint patterns, woven carelessly on a bright colored background. Some of the very prettiest patterns of the season. Brand new styles and the kinds that will win your approval.

DINING CHAIRS.

Fragile and delicate, stout and sturdy, and every one of them serviceable as can be. You needn't spend much time; close your eyes and choose, you can't go wrong. They are the most cheerful looking chair you ever saw, and the prices $1.25 to $3.00, with twenty-five cent go-betweens.

CARPETS.

High priced or low priced, the lining and the making and the laying free. That's what brings business to our carpet room. And you pay less here for the carpet than you're likely to pay elsewhere. Scores of fresh rolls added weekly, among them new patterns in the 65c. Tapestry Brussels and Super Ingrains.

ASTOUNDING SUSAN.

"Wolves was wuth $25 apiece time me an' Susan lived on our clearin'," said old Cuthbert Miles, the Indian Run hermit, "an' wunst I was so hot foot to git a couple, 'count o' the bounty on 'em, that I come pooty nigh never bein' heerd on ag'in. I wouldn't a ben, nuther, if it hadn't a ben fer Susan. Nothin' surer'n that, sir!

"'Twas the day afore Chris'mas, an' me an' Susan was going to Parks's, five mile down the creek, nex' day to eat Chris'mas dinner.

"'Susan, I says, 'seems to me I ought to go out an' git a deer, so's we kin take some ven'son 'long with us to-morrow as sort of a Chris'mas present to Joe an' Sally Ann. Hadn't I?' I says.

"'Course ye had!' says Susan. 'Git a nice fat one.'

"So I took ol' flint lock an' went out. I hadn't gone more'n two mile 'fore I jumped up as nice an' fat a buck as I ever see. I let ol' flint lock holler, an' I see by the way the buck twitched his tail and sprung away that I had touched him an' touched him bad. I went on an' found the snow all splattered with blood an' blood markin' the deer's trail.

"'Here's goin' to be a saddle o' ven'son,' I says, 'setch as 'll make Joe an' Sally Ann Parks glad they come into these here woods!' I says.

"I follered the deer's track, thinkin' how tickled Susan 'ud be when she see that nice, fat deer, an' the blood got thicker an' thicker, an' the buck's tracks slower an' slower, till I know'd I'd soon come up to him dead or dyin'. Pooty soon, though, I seen somethin' that jist made my blood bile. Some other tracks showed in the snow right along the deer's. They was wolf tracks—two on 'em a follerin' the deer!

"This is sad,' I says. 'That nice, fat buck o' Joe's an' Sally Ann's goin' to be fodder for two 'tarnal wolves! This is sad!'

"I hurried on an' hadn't gone a hundred yards when I come square out on the wolves an' the buck. The buck was down an' the wolves were tearin' an' gnashin' away at him tremendous. I up an' blazed away at one o' the wolves an' hit him bad. Away they both went, the wounded one havin' a hard time of it an' leavin' lots o' his worthless blood stainin' the snow as he went. Goin' up to the buck I see he was dead, an' the wolves had tore him so that my blood took to bilin' wuss'n ever.

"'Them wolves is wuth $25 apiece,' I says, 'an' I'm bound to hev 'em, but if they wasn't wuth a cent I'd hev 'em anyhow, jist fer their mummixin Joe an' Sally Ann's deer,' I says, 'an' disapp'intin' Susan,' I says.

"So I follered the bloody wolf track. The two devourin' varmints kep' together an' I know'd where one went t'other un'd go. They led me a tol'able long chase, an' they'd a led me a longer un if the one wolf hadn't a ben wounded so bad. The trail led to an openin' in a ledge o' rocks, an' there, squattin' right in it, was the wolf. I whanged away. Old flint lock didn't seem to be feelin' jest up to the mark that day. By rights she ought to tumbled the deer square in its tracks, an' she oughtn't to let the first wolf git away, an' now she hadn't acted square with me in dealin' with the second wolf. She had tumbled it, o' course, but not so it'd stay tumbled, an' the wolf drug itself back into the hole though it was a hard job fer it.

"'Cats!' I says. 'You ain't treatin' me right, flint lock,' I says. 'I'm afeard you've give me a bad job here,' I says. 'But I've got to hev them wolves,' I says. 'If I'd go home an' tell Susan I let a couple of wolves git away from me,' I says, 'she'd give me a look an' say: "Moses, I'm ashamed o' ye!" an' she'd more'n likely say: "Milk the heifer: I'll go an' git them wolves myself," setch an astoundin' woman is Susan.'

"That's what I said to ol' flint lock an' laid her down more in sorrow than anger. Makin' an inspection o' the openin' in the rocks, I seen that it run in amazin' narrow fer three or four foot an' then spread out into quite a nice showin' of a cave.

"'That entry to them wolves's house is awful close work fer the eyes!' I says. 'There's got to be some tight squeezin' done 'fore I git in to hev it out with them wolves,' I says. 'But they'm in there, an' they've spiled Joe an' Sally Ann's deer, an' they've disapp'inted Susan, an' they'm worth $25 apiece!' I says. 'I've got to hev 'em, squeeze or no squeeze!' I says.

"So I took my buckhorn handled huntin' knife in one hand an' started in. By wigglin' an' squeezin' an' twistin' an' turnin' like an eel goin' up a dam, I got half through the narrow entry, when I heerd a terrrible objection to my goin' any furder. There was an ugly growl first, then a snarl, then a snappin' o' jaws, an' then the hull of 'em together, an' then the wolf that made 'em sprung fer me an' socked its teeth in my left shoulder. I had my knife in my right hand an' I didn't engage to lay there an' let the wolf do all the sockin', so I begun to sock the wolf with the knife. The wolf hadn't skeert me, fer I was 'spectin'somethin' o' that kind; but the fight hadn't more'n begun 'fore I diskivered somethin' that jist turned me cold from head to foot, an' it seemed to me as if I could feel my hair turnin' white.

"'Susan!' says I, 'I'm afeard yer as good as a widder!'

"What was the diskivry I made? Why, sir, I was stuck fast in that narrow p'ace as if I'd a ben built in there when it was made! I couldn't wiggle ahead nor I couldn't backward. I didn't keer fer the wolf. As fer a matter o' that, layin' there half on my side, I socked my knife so hard an' so fast into that wolf that he was a goner 'fore he could do more'n give me that first sock with his teeth in my shoulder.

"T'other wolf was dead, I knew, or he'd been makin' some kind of a fuss. So wolves didn't cut no figger in the situation at all. It was me bein' held fast in the bowels of the earth, so to speak, gettin' wedged there tighter an' tighter the more I tried to get myself loose, an' no more chance o' any one comin' by there than there was o' them stones openin' of their ownselfs an' lettin' me out. It was overpowerin' cold an' gettin' colder. I knowed that Susan wouldn't think nothin' o' my bein' away not until some time after dark, an' then she couldn't do nothin' till mornin'.

"'Susan,' I said, 'then you'll be a widder!'

"'Twa'n't that I was afeard to die that I felt so tremendous awful 'twixt them narrow stones, but it was the thoughts o' leavin' Susan all alone on the clearin'. So I'd work away ag'in, chopping the stones with my knife, hopin' to make a hole big enough to let me out, but the way I lay I couldn't get to work where it'd do any good, or I could a done it in no time. At last, after, I guess, three hours 'o labor, I was jest petered all out. I couldn't hardly raise my head nor my hands no more, an' the cold was eatin' to the very marrow o' my bones. I don't know how long I laid there like that, but by an' by I heerd somethin' at the openin' outside, an' then some one hollers in an' says:

"'Moses! Be ye dead or alive?'

"It was Susan! Of all things in the world, Susan! But I mowt a know'd it. Astoundin' woman that she was, I mowt a know'd it!

"'Susan,' I says, 'I'm betwixt and between!'

"Then I told her the fix I was in an' how I run into it deliberate an' with my eyes open. Susan, she crept in, an' with my knife she dug an' she pried an' she chipped. She kep' it up fer an hour, an' made room enough fer me to turn in. A few more chips an' chops an' pryin's an' I sqeezed my way out! An' me an' Susan both sot on the ground an' hugged an' bellered.

"Then by an' by Susan got up an' crawled in an' dug out the two dead wolves. An' how do you suppose it happened that Susan come along an' rescued me? If she hadn't been an astoundin' woman she wouldn't a ben there an' she'd been a widder.

"Not long arter I had left the clearin' to go an' git Joe an' Sally Ann a deer fer Chris'mas, a wolf came sneakin' up an' was nosin' around to git one o' Susan's chickens. Susan diskivered it, an' bein' as sly as the wolf, she snuk around with her clothes pounder, an' 'fore the wolf know'd what was up, she fetched him a whack with it that sent him endways. But he was up again 'fore Susan could git in another lick an' started fer the woods. The whack with the clothes pounder had hurt him so bad that he couldn't run fast, an' what does Susan do but start on his trail. She could keep him in easy sight, but couldn't quite come up with him.

"As it happened the wolf took a course that brought him square to where t'other wolves had ketched an' tore my buck. Soon as Susan sees the dead buck she'd know'd what had happened, an' the bloody trail leading away from it, my tracks on the trail, kind o' sot her to thinkin', and she give up the wolf she was chasin' an' took my trail. Consekently she wa'n't a widder, an' we had a jolly Chris'mas at Parks's next day, though we didn't hev no nice fat deer to give 'em for a present. Lord! what times we did usety hev on that clearin'! An' how astoundin' Susan was!"

Collided With a Cash Basket.

A very tall woman with a very tall bonnet, covered with feathers as big as a Newfoundland dog's tail, walked into a Market street store yesterday. She was standing at a counter waiting for a clerk to take her order, when there was a snap, a whirr and a scream. The woman made a wild grab for her bonnet as it went sailing across the store with part of her hair, but it was whisked out of sight in a second. One of the little cash baskets had collided with the bonnet and carried it into the office.—San Francisco Evening Post.

Sensation in a City.

Persons moving along Union square the other day were attracted by a knot of eager watchers near the northwest corner of the square. There was a boy hopping about in stooping posture on the grass, and twenty or thirty men were watching him, while others were moving toward the spot. Presently the boy rose, holding in the air by the tail a tiny mouse, and then everybody went about his business. —N. Y. Sun.

BY MARGARET DELAND.

(Copyright by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller)

When she went away Dick sat there in the sunshine, looking out of the window. He made up his mind that he must get over thinking about Mary; there was no use; it only worried her, "and it kills me," he thought simply. He wondered if he could always feel so dully indifferent to everything, just because he couldn't have Mary? The sun was warm on the grassy slope in front of the house; a big vessel, coming slowly up the river with the tide, leaned, and her white topsails swelled and gleamed and flapped loose again; the trees at the foot of the garden showed a faint mist of green; a pigeon wheeled and fluttered down to the doorstep and sat preening itself and puffing out its white breast. The feeling of spring, and joy, and promise was in the air.

"And I don't care a darn!" Dick groaned to himself. "Well, I've got to get over this. I'll go away; I'll get out of it; Mary shan't know why; I'll let her think I've never thought of her since the last time I spoke. Good Lord—it was two or three years ago! and I've not gained an inch with her." And then he opened his eyes, and saw Mary coming up the path; she was on her way home from school, and stopped to know how he was getting along.

"Look at you, you careless fellow," she scolded, "you've dropped that shawl off your knees; what would Mother Hayes say?"

"Oh, Mary," he said, and somehow the tears stood in his eyes, he was so weak, "I—I've got to go away!"

Mary's instant look of concern, and light touch upon his wrist, showed what she thought of such crazy words, and poor Dick gulped and tried to get back to his resolution not to tell her. "I don't know why I said that—I didn't mean to," he told her.

"You are tired," she said, soothingly, "you've been sitting up too long."

"Nothing of the sort," Dick answered, crossly. "I am only tired of this business! Good Lord! Mary—there! I can't help it; will you take me? I didn't mean to ask again; I was just saying I wouldn't, when you came up the path. Mary, will you take me? If you won't, I'm going off. I've stood this just as long as I'm going to."

Poor Mary turned red and white with pity. "Oh, Dick!" she said.

"You know he's dead and gone; you're only making another man miserable; and — and you'd be happier yourself."

"Of course he's dead," she said, tremulously, "that isn't it; it's because I—I shall always love Don!" she burst out, and then fell to crying; and Dick swore at himself and was ready to tell her that he didn't care the least in the world for her—if it would comfort her any.

But nothing comforted her. She went home along the river road in the pleasant spring dusk, her eyes blurring and smarting. She did not want Don's mother to know she had been crying, so left the path and sat down under a little pine tree that clutched at the rocks and stretched its starved, lean branches out over the tumbling foam below. She and Don had often sat here and listened to the steady beat of the waves on the broken rocks. The light paled and faded, and the sea grew gray and cold; far off a sail leaned like a wing against the sky and caught a sudden flush from the glow in the west. How often she had watched Don's boat beating in, when the twilight was settling over the lonely shore. He used to know without seeing her, that she was there, under the pine. She wondered if he knew that Dick had asked her to marry him? The sea was quite dark, except where a faint wreath of white came and went where the waves broke on the rocks. How dear and kind Don had been; how full of laughter; how simple and trusting; how careless and good-natured; she remembered this or that drollery, this or that dear unreasonableness; a hundred tendernesses. No wonder she loved him; to love such a man was enough for one girl's life, she thought. And yet, Dick Wheeler had thought she might marry him!

"But I've been true," she protested to herself, as if in excuse. Then she turned back to the path, and went on to the little gray house. "Don thought it wasn't as nice as Dick's," she thought, half smiling; "well, you see, I've chosen it, anyhow," she said, half aloud, as though he were beside her. She saw the kitchen door open and shut, and heard a burst of laughter.

"Why, who is here at this time of night?" she thought. And then she saw that there were people in the door-yard, and two figures at the gate suddenly saw her, and came running towards her:

"Mary, he's back! Mary! Don's home!"

Mary stood still at the gate; she was perfectly silent. Eager hands clutched her and would have pulled her along the path. "He's home! He's back, Mary; do you hear? He's back; he says he's been meaning to come these five years; but he's been on three voyages."

Like a woman walking in her sleep, Mary was pushed to the door, which swung open again to admit these friendly on-lookers, who had come to rejoice with those that did rejoice.

Afterwards she did not know whether she saw him or not; the kitchen was crowded. She heard Mrs. Hayes laughing and crying, and saying:

"And Mary's been true to you—but not because she hasn't had chances. But why didn't you ever write to her?"

And then a voice, a voice from the grave, a dead voice, that made Mary thrill with horror; a voice that made her heart quiver, as though the foundations of the solid earth moved and melted—a hearty, kindly voice, said:

"Well, I was always meaning to—" and, somehow, she turned and slipped away between the pushing, jostling, congratulating friends; slipped out into the night, and ran, stumbling, crying, shivering, away from the house of joy and thanksgiving.

Dick Wheeler was certainly tired enough to have Jacob help him back to bed; but Jacob was at the grocery store listening, open-mouthed, to the story of Donald Hayes' return; so the young man sat in the darkness, feeling miserably faint and miserably unhappy. He wished Jacob would come; he wished he had a lamp; he wished he had some supper; he wished Mary would be kinder. And then he drew a long breath, and set his lips, ashamed of his unmanly irritability, his cowardly collapse.

Some one knocked, but did not wait for his "Come in" to push the door open and enter. It was Mary; she came right to his chair and knelt down and took one of his big, thin, gentle hands in hers.

"Dick—he's come back. Don's alive. And—and—and, Dick, take me, please. I want—you; because Don's alive."

THE END.

Paid a Quarter for Harrison's Nickel.

General Harrison was a passenger on a crowded North Pennsylvania street car a short while ago. The day was a disagreeable one or Mr. Harrison would have been walking. As the General entered the car a man rose and politely offered his seat to the distanguished passenger. Mr. Harrison looked at the man, and no doubt his observing eye noticed that the man was tired and that he carried his lunch basket, indicating that he was on his way home from a day's work.

"Keep your seat, sir," said Mr. Harrison, bowing politely. The man took his seat, and General Harrison took hold of a strap.

With a manner of importance the conductor stepped forward to collect the General's fare. Mr. Harrison handed forth a nickel, and the conductor returned to the platform with it in his hand.

"I'll give you a quarter for that nickel," said a stranger on the platform.

"It's yours," replied the conductor, and then he continued: "Mr. Harrison is just a citizen, like the rest of us."

"Yes," replied the stranger, as he pocketed the nickel and gave the conductor the quarter, "but he has done a little more in this world than the rest of us." And the conductor answered: "That's right."—Indianapolis Journal.

The Value of Good Roads.

That was a significant item the other day which showed how a city was drawing all the trade from its neighbors by making the road approaches pleasant and easy.

People who travel on foot, by bicycle or in vehicles drawn by horses easily learn the easiest road and take it always, except when necessity drives them another way. Road reform is almost as pressing as municipal reform.

Nothing delights an American abroad more than the fine roads, and nothing disgusts a foreigner, afoot or awheel, in this country like the obstacles he encounters on our country roads. Good road beds and good grades will change the whole life of the American people. Nothing else will do more to cheapen the cost of living in the cities.—Waterbury American.

Will Live Together.

"Mamma," said an inquisitive little girl "will rich and poor folks live together when they go to heaven?"

"Yes, my dear; they will all be alike there."

"Then, mamma, why don't rich and poor Christians asssociate together here?"

The mother did not answer.

GRANT IN POVERTY.

SKIPPED MANY MEALS BECAUSE HE HADN'T THE PRICE.

His Early Struggles and Frequent Rebuffs. Obstacles That Would Have Proven Insurmountable to Less Persistent Youths.

Grant went to Galena to serve his father as a clerk in the leather store and tannery of J. D. Grant & Co. He gladly accepted such employment a year or two before the outbreak of the war. He received at first $40 a month and his pay was afterward raised to $75. He hired a little cottage, still standing, and paid $12 a month rent, leaving a sum upon which he could support his family only by scrimping and the hardest sort of economy.

At the breaking out of the war, thinking that there might be an opportunity in St. Louis, he went there, and although he met one or two old army comrades and even rode with them when they set out to disperse a hostile demonstration, nevertheless he found no encouragement that Missouri would accept his services. Returning to Springfield and again almost determined to go to his home, he happened to think of McClellan, who was then in Cincinnati preparing to leave for the front. He knew McClellan slightly and was certain that McClellan knew of him. But in Cincinnati he faced the same indifference and bad luck. McClellan had just gone to Washington, but his brilliantly uniformed staff were in and about the hotel, and there was no offer of comradeship when Capt. Grant timidly introduced himself to two or three of them. There was nothing to do but to return to Springfield, and on his way thither he stopped over for a day in Indianapolis, thinking that perhaps his services might be accepted by Gov. Morton. A few hours there showed him plainly that the political colonels and political influences were quite as strong in Indiana as they were in Illinois. Then his mind was made up. He went to Springfield. That evening he met Capt. Chetlain and told him that he decided to remain in Springfield, but that he had got to practice the strictest economy in order to support himself. Then he made a suggestion:

"I can't live at the hotel any longer; it costs too much. But I have found a room right across the street. It is of good size and has a double bed in it. The price is $3 a week. Now, if you will come and share the room, it will cost us only a $1.50 a week apiece, and we can get our meals where we can find them."

Capt. Chetlain agreed to this proposition, and that evening he became Capt. Grant's roommate and remained with him until the company was mustered into service and joined its regiment. Capt. Grant must have lived very plainly at that time. He did not complain, but there is some reason to believe that he now and then skipped a meal, and when he did eat he bought the plainest food. He went to the State capitol every day and returned every evening more and more despondent.

At last he returned to his home in Galena, believing that for the time at least there was no chance for an obscure military man, since the politicians were making the officers for the regiments and brigades.

A few days later Capt. Grant, sitting in his father's leather store, received a telegram from Gov. Yates asking him if he would accept an appointment as colonel of the Twenty-first Regiment. Accept the appointment! Would an eagle fly if it had the chance? Grant telegraphed back instantly that he would gladly command the regiment and as soon as possible went again to Springfield. He received his commission and joined the regiment, and the first impulse of his discipline was immediately made apparent. Yet Grant was not freed from humiliation. He had been unable to procure any better clothes than those which he wore when he first went to Springfield, and while those served him well enough, having upon the shoulders of his coat the straps which were the only indications of his authority when he was drilling the regiment, yet of course he could not appear upon dress parade unless in full uniform, and he did not possess the money to buy a uniform, a sword or a horse. Therefore for more than two weeks he left to Lieut.-Col. Alexander the duty of appearing upon dress parade, no man in that regiment then knowing that the only reason why he himself did not take command was because his clothing would not permit him to do so.

In that emergency Col. Grant wrote his father and asked for the loan of $400, the money to be used in buying uniform, sword and horse. Col. Grant's father did not see his way clear to advance him this money, but "Ulyss," as he was always known in the store, had a good friend in the junior partner of the house, Mr. Collins. He knew of this request for a loan, and he procured the money at the bank and sent it to Col. Grant, not even indicating at the time that it was sent by the junior partner and not by the father. In the inclosure containing the draft for $400 was a promissory note put in out of motives of delicacy so that Col. Grant would feel that he had borrowed the money, whereas Mr. Collins looked upon that sum as a contribution to the cause of the Union. With a part of the money Col. Grant bought the famous yellow horse which became afterward known as "Old Clayback," and as soon as he could have the uniform made he appeared upon dress parade.—McClure's Magazine.

Consistency.

A laughable little story is told of a woman on the witness stand in a French court. She was asked her age, and she answered that she was thirty years old.

"But," said the magistrate, "did you not tell me you were thirty when you appeared before me two years ago?"

"I think it very likely," she replied, smilingly acknowledging her falsehood and not at all abashed. "I am not one of those women who say one thing to-day and another thing to-morrow."—Youth's Companion.

Gaggs—Oh, cheer up, old fellow, and take things as they come.

Has Earned His Diploma.

Stephen Crick, who resided in this city two and a half years ago, and left here for New York, was graduated and has received his diploma as trained nurse, from Mills Training School, Bellevue Hospital. Mr. Crick is well suited to his profession. He is kind, thoughtful, and very attentive to his business, and is now on his third case since he left the school which was in January. While in the hospital he had charge of the most critical cases and proved himself competent to the satisfaction of the doctors and superintendent of the school, Mrs. Willard. The class of '95, numbering 21 male nurses, was larger than that of any preceding year since the school was established, which was in 1888. Mr. Crick has the best wishes of his friends for his success, and has well earned his diploma, after many months of hard work and self-denial. He was born in England, and came to this country nearly five years ago.

THE UNDERHILL READINGS.

Another Delighted Audience in the Casino.

A large and interested audience greeted Charles F. Underhill, the reader, at his second recital in the Casino last evening. The subject was Dickens's masterpiece, David Copperfield, and Mr. Underhill carried his audience with him from the start through the adventures—dramatic, humorous and pathetic—of Mr. Peggotty, Micawber, Uriah Heep, Miss Betsy Trotwood and all the rest of the dearly loved characters of this dearly loved book.

The stage was most attractively set with the garden scene for a backing and a veritable garden of carnations, roses and growing plants flanked the reader's desk on either side. The Casino was well ventilated, a circumstance as rare as it is pleasing, and everybody was most comfortable.

Mr. Underhill chose his selections from the most effective parts of the novel and so well were they chosen that the thread of the story was almost unbroken. These are the scenes he read: The Old Ark on the Sands, At Mr. and Mrs. Micawber's, Law Office of Wickfield and Heep, Little Emily's Flight, Mr. Peggotty's Narrative, Mr. Micawber Excited, Mr. Micawber's Explosion, Emily's Return, The Shipwreck.

The reader's rendering of the character of Mr. Peggotty was most effective, and he made Miss Betsy Trotwood very amusing and lovable. Mr. Micawber fairly stepped forth from the pages to crush the miserable, cringing Uriah Heep, and the rest of the less important characters were read with the same careful attention and discrimination that marks all of Mr. Underhill's work.

Recitals from David Copperfield have generally included the funny pages of David's and Dora's housekeeping, but Mr. Underhill confined himself to the story growing out of the attachment between "little Em'ly" and Ham Peggotty, and the sad wrecking of it all by David's friend, Steerforth. Lovers of Dickens enjoyed the treat of seeing the imaginary characters take on themselves the semblance of real life, as Mr. Underhill, with changing tones and facial expressions, made one after another appear upon the scene. Peggotty ceased to be merely Peggotty of the book, but was an honest Yarmouth boatman, commanding respect by "doing his endeavors in his line of life". Poor Ham Peggotty with his slow speech and shy manners appealed for sympathy as the audience were made to understand anew his great love for little Em'ly that was turned into great grief and ended in his tragic death. As Uriah Heep, Mr. Underhill was so "umble", cringing and sinister that one felt a new detestation for the character that has become a synonym for hypocrisy and deceit. As Betsy Trotwood, he was so naturally sarcastic and refreshing that the audience could heartily wish there was more of Betsy to hear and enjoy. Micawber, the unfortunate and bombastic, with all his violent explosions, won the regard of his listeners, as he exposed Uriah's rascality and overthrew his machinations for evil.

The description of the shipwreck was vivid, and the closing scene of Ham's and Steerforth's lives was full of pathos.

The next reading will be from "The Rivals", Sheridan's well-known comedy and will take place Thursday evening, May 2.

Crushed His Foot.

Louis Swazey, a brakeman running on the way freight train on the Central, was the victim of a painful injury at the local freighthouse yesterday afternoon at 4. He was attempting to carry on his back a barrel of mineral water from the car to the freighthouse platform, and in crossing one of the tracks his foot slipped. The barrel rolled off his shoulder and fell with great force on his foot, crushing it into a pulp-like mass. The unfortunate man was taken to the baggage room and Dr. Fritts called, who dressed his wounds. At 5:15 he was taken to his home in Phillipsburg.

Got Drunk Before Breakfast.

William Callaway, a denizen of Short Hills woods, became inebriated this morning before breakfast, and when on the bridge that spans the brook assaulted a Mrs. Herman. Then he came across into the city, and when on Park avenue, opposite North avenue, made such a spectacle of himself that Policeman McCue conveyed him to the police station, where he was left to sober up before appearing before Judge Coddington to answer for his disorderly conduct.

—Crescent Division, Uniformed Rank, K. of P., will have a drill tomorrow night.

Equine Excitement.

A team of gray horses attached to a coal wagon belonging to George O. Stevens, the coal merchant, and driven by Walter S. Mollison, furnished considerable excitement for the residents of East Front street this forenoon. As the man passed Washington street, the pole strap broke, letting the pole drop, and at the same time the wheels struck the horses' hind feet, frightening them into a run. Mollison was thrown off the seat of the wagon, and lost control of the horses.

He attempted to turn them into the driveway by the First Presbyterian Church. Two women and a little girl stood near, and came very near being injured.

The wagon pole struck an electric light pole, the body of the wagon was upset and the man thrown out. The horses were subdued and fortunately no damage was done. Several men who happened to be near assisted Mr. Mollison in straightening out his difficulty.

A Temperance Talk.

The temperance talk of Robert Clark of Manning avenue before the Christian Endeavor Society of Trinity Reformed Church last night was one filled with practical suggestions. His subject was "On Guard; over what; how?" He spoke first on the bearing of the subject to the Christian life and then of its bearing towards temperance. He spoke of the great vigilance necessary to be maintained in order to cope with the great evil, and illustrated his points with quotations from well known authors and authorities.

It will be an agreeable surprise to persons subject to attacks of bilious colic to learn that prompt relief may be had by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. HYMENEAL.

Thomas—Burke.

Beneath a canopy of roses and smilax the marriage of Miss Ida Louise Burke, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Pascal C. Burke and granddaughter of William Swalm of this city, to William Marvin Thomas was celebrated Wednesday evening, April 17, at the home of the bride, 175 McDonough street, Brooklyn, Rev. E P. Terhune of the Puritan Avenue Congregational Church officiating. The decorations were very elaborate, Easter flowers and foliage banking the mantel of the front parlor adorning the hallway, while the back parlor was decorated with American beauty roses.

The bride was attended as maid of honor by Miss Harriett V. Thomas, sister of the groom. The best man was William de la Montagnie of New York, and the ushers were Everett S. Swalm, Edward H. Bergen, Frederick Sherwood and A. de Forest Sanford.

The bride's gown was of white ivory satin with trimming of point lace, and her bouquet was bride roses and lilies of the valley. The maid of honor was attired in rose pink satin and chiffon with pearl trimming and carried bridemaid roses and hyacinths. Mrs. Pascal C Burke wore turquoise blue brocade trimmed with bronze velvet and duchess lace, and Miss E. Eloise Thomas wore canary color peau de soie and turquoise velvet with trimming of oriental lace. A reception to about three hundred guests followed the ceremony, and later Mr. and Mrs. Thomas left on an extended tour in the South.

Among those present were Mr and Mrs A Ammerman, Edward Annan, Dr and Mrs Joseph B Brown, Mr and Mrs Seward S Beard of Lakewood, N J; Miss Josephine Bailey of Philadelphia; Mr and Mrs Ira Corwin of Middletown, N Y; Mr and Mrs Henry Elliott, Miss Elliott, George P Ely of New York; Mrs A DeForest Keys of Elizabeth; Miss Mae Kimball of Chicago; Rev and Mrs Kenneth McKenzie of Westport; Mr and Mrs R Morris of Pottsville, Pa; Howard E Raymond of Chicago; Dr and Mrs W H Swalm, Mr and Mrs A Swalm of this city; Mrs William Swalm, Mrs. Everett S Swalm and daughters, the Misses Julia and Florence Swalm of Middletown, N Y; the Misses Sandford of New York; United States Senator George L Shook; H W Van Cortlandt of Tuxedo; William H Thomas of Westport; Mrs J C Wemple, and Gen William C. CATTLE ACTUALLY SCARCE.

High Prices for Beef to Prevail Through the Summer.

R. I. Tolles, local representative for Armour & Co., supplies to The Press as an explanation of the prevailing increase in the price of beef, an extract from a recent article in the Breeders Gazette, one of the acknowledged authorities on all matters pertaining to the cattle industry of the country. This article is a review of the situation from an intelligent and reliable standpoint, based upon a practical knowledge of the situation as it really exists. It says:

"There is an actual scarcity of prime cattle, or cattle of any kind. Within a short period the price of good cattle on the hoof has risen two cents per pound, and we see no reason why the advance should not continue. In fact, we look for a continuation of high prices for beef all of the coming Summer. The amount of range cattle offered for the market is now forty per cent. less than last year. There has been a drouth on the ranges, hard Winters, a lack of increase in cattle-raising, and, to sum it all up, a strong American demand for consumption not equaled by the producers of beef. As far as we can see every circumstance of climate, and the laws of supply and demand have for a number of years combined against the American cattle-raiser, until we are confronted with an actual shortage of beef.

"This situation has long been foreshadowed by reports which have appeared in The Gazette from all quarters. The calculating farmer, the man who keeps posted, has not failed to see the drift of affairs, and when he has governed himself accordingly, he is not now caught with his bucket upside down when it is raining dollars. The long era of low prices has cost us much, but it has likewise taught us much, and it would be lamentable indeed if the present upward flight of prices should induce any farmer to forget the economies in production and feeding which he was forced to learn."

The Blow Failed to Land.

The examination of Harry Munckton, who was charged with fighting, was called before Judge Coddington at 10 this morning. Munckton, it was alleged, struck Michael Sedar on Somerset street Saturday night. He pleaded guilty to the charge of hitting at him, but missing him. Sedar was n't sure whether or not he was hit, and several others saw the blow struck but thought that it did not land.

The charge not being sustained, sentence was suspended, the Judge admonishing Munckton not to throw his fists around in such a promiscuous manner hereafter.

FIRE ESCAPES FOR SCHOOLS.

The Board Awards Contract—Census Takers Appointed.

A special meeting of the Board of Education was held last evening to take action in the matter of providing fire escapes for the school buildings.

All the members were present, and Principal H. M. Maxson acted as clerk.

Plans were submitted by the New York Architectural Iron Works and by W. T. Kirk. There were several other bids, but when considered they were found very much higher than these.

The bids of the two plans considered were as follows: W. T. Kirk, not including inside landings, $3,139 49; New York Architectural Iron Works, including landings, $1,965. Adding to Mr. Kirk's bid the estimated cost of inside work of the Stillman School, omitted by him, which was $161, a difference of $335 was found in favor of the New York Architectural Iron Works, and the contract was awarded to them.

George W. Moore was appointed census taker for the schools in the First and Second wards, and Abram Angleman for the Third and Fourth wards.

The Board adjourned.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about; but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at L. W. Randolph's drug store.

A SCHOLARLY TRIBUTE.

Historian Bigelow Publicly Recognizes the Services of ex-Mayor Randolph to the Tilden Trust.

In his scholarly "Life of Samuel J. Tilden", just issued in sumptuous style by the Harpers, John Bigelow, LL. D., pays this merited tribute to Plainfield's ex-mayor, whose management of the Tilden estate materially increased the millions of the estate:

"On the 16th of November, 1886, a few weeks after the probate of the will, Mr. L. V. F. Randolph, who had been for many years a director and treasurer of the Illinois Central Railroad, was appointed the secretary of the executors and trustees under the will, to the duties of which position were subsequently added those of secretary to the Tilden Trust.

"I feel it to be a duty, as certainly it is a pleasure, for me here to make a public acknowledgment of his invaluable services in both capacities, and formally to recognize the very substantial obligations under which his varied accomplishments as a business manager, his indefatigable assiduity, and his high personal character, have placed all who are or may hereafter be in any way interested in this estate."

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Frank Blatz is confined to his home with illness.

Morris Fitzgerald of Spooner avenue is the proud father of a newborn baby.

Mrs. C. L. Goodrich of West Seventh street is visiting relatives in Montclair.

Walter Smalley is today being broken in as a motorman on the street railway.

Lettercarrier J. W. A. Bauersachs has sold his property on Manning avenue to John Stocker.

Miss Lucie P. Davis left yesterday for Philadelphia, where she will make a stay of several weeks.

Mrs. Peter Gulick of Raritan is spending a few days with Mrs. V L. Frazee of West Front street.

Postmaster Hetfield has removed from Central avenue to his recently purchased home, 926 Park avenue.

Miss Emma Buckle will entertain a party of friends at her home on Westervelt avenue Friday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Miller are rejoicing over the advent of a daughter who was born yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Benjamin Day of Rockview avenue is planning a trip to Europe, expecting to sail in the early part of May.

Charles P. Daly has recovered from the operation recently performed on his eye so as to remove the bandages therefrom.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hyde, after spending a few days with Mrs. Frederick Knowland, left yesterday on a trip to Mississippi.

Rev. C. L. Goodrich of the Congregational Church is in Baltimore attending the meeting of the Congregational Association.

Mrs Isaac L. Miller, President of the Monday Afternoon Club, gave a luncheon to the Executive Committee at her home yesterday.

REPRIEVE FOR DR. BUCHANAN.

Albany, April 23.—Gov. Morton today granted a reprieve of one week to Dr. Buchanan, sentenced to death for wife-murder, and whose execution had been arranged to take place tomorrow in Sing Sing prison.

Somerville Highwaymen.

C. J. Keiderling of East Front street was in Somerville yesterday visiting his father, and in returning to the Somerville station last evening to come home he was stopped by two men, one of whom attempted to steal his watch. Mr. Keiderling held an umbrella and made an effort to put it into service, but before he could do so the sneaks made their escape, and he was unable to catch them. As he only had a few minutes to spare he did not have time to hunt up the town beadle.

Sad Fire Service.

A barn belonging to Henry Kotderling at Somerville was set afire Sunday afternoon, and an alarm was sent in. There were no firemen around the engine house, and those that heard the alarm went home and changed their clothes. They thought the fire was in Raritan and the apparatus was taken to that place. By the time they reached the fire the building was entirely destroyed. This is a sample of quick response by the Somerville department.

—A new bicycle store will be opened in this city next week.

I recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm for rheumatism, lame back, sprains and swellings. There is no better liniment made. I have sold over 100 bottles of it this year and all were pleased who used it. TO FIGHT FREE SILVER

The Administration To Begin a Vigorous War.

Cabinet Officers Writing Letters To Their Local Papers and Friends. They May Also Take to the Stump. All Government Employes Expected To Join the Army Against It.

Washington, April 23.—A strong and vigorous fight against the free and unlimited coinage of silver, independent of international agreement, is to be made by the administration. With that end in view officers in the various executive departments, appointed under the present administration, are being urged to organize systematically for the purpose of conducting the contest along the lines laid down in the president's message. Many of the higher officials who enjoy reputations at home as stump speechers will probably take to the field early in the summer and others are even now engaged in writing letters to their local papers or personal friends, impressing upon them the importance of sustaining the administration in the position it has outlined.

To Rally an Army Against Silver.

Federal officers in the several states will be organized as a nucleus about which all who uphold the administration, or, rather, who are opposed to the free and unlimited coinage of silver, will be expected to rally. There are nearly 200,000 government officers, postmasters, internal revenue officers, customs officers, district attorneys and innumerable contractors scattered throughout the country. These will be expected to do the aggressive fighting in the field, and will be amply furnished with documents and the necessary sinews of war from Washington.

Cabinet Officers To Take the Stump.

Nearly all of the cabinet officers will take the stump for one or more speeches. Secretary Carlisle will certainly make two or more speeches in the Kentucky campaign. Secretary Morton will deliver an address in Chicago and perhaps one in St. Louis. Secretary Herbert and Congressman Clarke will probably speak in Alabama. Postmaster General Wilson is being urged to go west and speak in Illinois and Indiana, and may find time to do so late in the summer.

Cleveland Thoroughly in Earnest.

The president is represented as being thoroughly in earnest in this proposed crusade against the free and unlimited coinage of silver, and will leave no stone unturned to prevent the free silver sentiment from gaining headway, and to crush it out if possible. As tariff reform was the test of party fealty in his three campaigns for the presidential nomination, active support of his demand for the repeal of the Sherman purchasing clause the test of party fealty in 1894, so in 1895, the test of party fealty will be uncompromising opposition to the free and unlimited coinage of silver by the United States independent of internal agreement. Perfected state organizations will be extended to the counties and even into districts.

CHARGED WITH CONSPIRACY.

A Pittsburg Minister and Other Church Officers Arrested.

Pittsburg, April 23.—Rev. J. R. Henry and Elders J. W. Hamsher, J. L. Penny, C. K. Smith and J. Kelley Buchanan, all of the Wylie avenue Cumberland Presbyterian church, were arrested last night on a charge of criminal conspiracy, preferred by Mrs. Hattie D. Lincoln, wife of Rev. C. H. Lincoln. When arrested the defendants were in the church holding an investigation of church troubles. In her allegations Mrs. Lincoln says that the men did and have maliciously conspired, confederated, wilfully and unlawfully conspired to keep her husband out of the Presbytery, and that he has been injured morally and physically by the same. The defendants were released on their own recognizance until to-day, when they will give $300 bail. Rev. Lincoln had been pastor of the church for a year and for some reason yet unknown was not re-engaged. This is the cause af the trouble.

TO BE RELEASED TO-DAY.

Cuban Authorities Find the Two American Sailors Innocent.

Santiago de Cuba, April 23.—At the urgent request of United States Consul Hyatt the authorities here have hastened the inquiry into the cases of August Belton and Gustave Richlieu, American sailors who were imprisoned weeks ago on the suspicion of aiding the insurgents. They have found both men innocent and have decided to release them to-day.

Martel at Jacksonville.

Jacksonville, Fla., April 23.—Manuel Martel, or Mantel, of yacht Lagonda fame, is in this city and will leave for New York in a day or two. It is alleged that his business in the United States is to arrange for another filibustering expedition. Cubans here say he comes direct from Cuba, but he refuses to talk.

Started on Full Time.

Elizabeth, N. J., April 23.—The Graff stove works at Elizabeth, which furnish employment to a large number of men and has been in operation three and four days a week for the past six months, has started on full time.

Venezuela To Settle with Italy.

Rome, April 23.—An official dispatch from Caracas says. Venezuela is about to pay the Italian legation in that city $100,000 indemnity for losses suffered by Italian subjects in the last war.

Higgins and Addicks Even.

Dover, Del., April 23.—One ballot was taken yesterday for a United States senator. It resulted as follows: Higgins 8, Addicks 6, Massey 3, Pennewill 2, Ridgley 10, Tunnel 1.

Chief Arthur To Visit Europe.

Cleveland, O., April 23.—P. M. Arthur, chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, will sail for Europe with his wife this week. He has been granted six months absence with pay.

Peel Gets a Peerage.

London, April 23.—The Right Hon. Arthur Wellesley Peel, ex-speaker of the house of commons, has been elevated to the peerage with the title of viscount.

PATENT OFFICE EXPLOSION.

Employes Blown Through Doors and Windows.

Washington, April 23.—An explosion in the photographic room of the patent office yesterday afternoon caused a mild panic, injured several people and did considerable damage. The photographers and assistants had many narrow escapes for their lives and nearly all were on fire as the explosives flew all about the room. Besides Mr. Flint, the chief, there were at the time of the explosion, Assistant Photographer Theilkill, J. B. Wheat, jr., J. E. Latimer and Mr. Blackage, assistants in the room.

Broke an Ether Bottle.

Mr. Theilkill's story of the occurrence was that while Mr. Flint was pouring five gallons of ether into a bottle it fell to the slate floor and broke, the contents running along the place. He began sweeping it toward the door, remarking to those about to be careful with the lamps, etc. Some of the fluid reached the stove and there was an explosion, which was quickly followed by a second with considerable force, blowing up about seventy-five bottles.

Blown Through the Door.

Mr. Flint was blown through the door, his head striking a mass of papers piled in the hallway. He arose, his clothing in a blaze, and rushed for the area, calling for help. J. B. Wheat, jr., was standing near Mr. Flint and was also blown through the door, his hair ablaze and clothing torn. He received no permanent injuries and attended to Mr. Flint.

Blown Through Windows.

J. E. Latimer was blown through the open window on to the lawn and was followed through an adjoining window by Mr. Blackage, who was in the dark room at the time. Mr. Theilkill was blown across the room by the first explosion. He was blown through the window by the second. His escape from injuries was a miracle. His apron was on fire, his head singed, his hat blown into fragments and his coat torn in numberless places.

Dangerous Chemicals.

Stored in the room were eighteen gallons of collodion, 200 gallons of ether and 100 pounds of gun cotton. Of course these and everything else in the room were totally destroyed.

DURRANT'S EXAMINATION.

A Young Woman Creates a Scene in the Court Room.

San Francisco, April 23.—The preliminary examination of Theodore Durrant, charged with the muder of Minnie Williams, is still under way. The testimony of the witnesses examined have not differed from that given at the inquest. When the name of A. E. Williams, the dead girl's father, was called a sensational incident occurred. A handsome and well dressed young woman who had been standing all the morning on the edge of the crowd behind young Durrant stepped to the witness platform and said: "I shall refuse to say a word until I have spoken to the defendant." Judge Conlan ordered her to step down, but she refused and exclaimed: "I declare this man free." The woman had evidently become insane from brooding over the murders. She was put in charge of a bailiff.

A NATIONAL BANK IN TROUBLE.

The Late Cashier's Books in Disorder and a Receiver Appointed.

Washington, April 23.—The First National bank of Willimantic, Conn., has closed its doors, and the comptroller of the currency has named Michael P. Dooley as receiver. The bank was capitalized at $100,000. Its troubles began with the death of its late cashier, Mr. Risley. His books were found to be in disorder, and the directors thought it wise to wind up the affairs of the bank and determine later what should be done permanently. It is believed by the receiver that the assets will be sufficient to pay the bank's debts dollar for dollar.

INCOME TAX REARGUMENT.

No Announcement on the Application for a Rehearing.

Washington, April 23.—The United States supreme court did not make any announcement yesterday concerning the petition for a rehearing of the income tax question. The chief justice announced that on Friday, May 3, the court would cease the call of cases on the docket for the present term. The two facts together are taken to mean that whatever the decision of the court on the motion for a rehearing may be, the court has no expectations of a reargument during the present term.

The Compromise Candidate.

Indianapolis, April 23.—An Indiana republican, who was in Washington during President Harrison's administration, and takes a hand in national politics, said last night that Benjamin Harrison will be the compromise candidate of the currency factions next year. "He is the coming man," said this republican. "He will be nominated on a conservative bimetallism platform."

PARDRIGE HARD HIT

Said To Have Lost Nearly $1,000,000.

The Bulls Formed a Syndicate Against the Daring and Persistent Bear, and He Overstayed the Market—Believed Not To Be Ruined by His Losses.

Chicago, April 23.—The board of trade saw the liveliest day yesterday than at any time during the last two years. The bull movement in wheat culminated with a swoop at the opening of two and one-half cents for the May option. The present spurt owes much of its activity to the fact that the big bulls have been gunning for Pardridge, the boldest and most persistent bear that has ever operated on the board of trade. It is estimated by those in position to know that he has made in less than two years from $200,000 to $350,000.

Pardridge Hit Hard.

Pardridge, however, overstayed his market. Despite the change in the statistical position, he has been a persistent seller. Late in February it was known that he was short about $4,000,000 of the May option. A syndicate was organized late in February to engineer a bull movement and incidentally to squeeze Mr. Pardridge. Since then there has been an almost constant advance in the price of speculative options. It was estimated this morning that he was 3,000,000 bushels short against 5,000,000 bushels a week ago. This does not mean necessarily that Pardridge is ruined. It is said, however, that his total loss will be very nearly if not quite $1,000,000. It is thought that he has saved at least $1,500,000 out of the wreck.

THE TERMS OF PEACE.

All the Powers Are To Share in the Chinese Concessions.

London, April 23.—A dispatch from Tokio to the Central News states that, in view of the various European misstatements and misrepresentations in regard to the China-Japan treaty of peace, the government affirms that the commercial concessions obtained by Japan were not exclusive, but extend to all treaty powers. Japan secured these privileges for the general good of all countries, and therefore expects to meet with friendly appreciation. The reported offensive and defensive alliance between Japan and China is positively denied by the Japanese government. It was said that Japan had secured for herself from China a 2 per cent. ad valorem duty on her imports into China instead of a specific duty. The mikado's government now explains that the concessions obtained by Japan, beyond those already obtained by the treaty powers under the favored nation clause comprises the right to navigate the Yang-tse-Kiang, the Chung-Cing and the Woo-Sung river, and canals leading to Soo-Chow and Hang-Chow; the right to import certain goods duty free and to establish factories. But these privileges are to apply to all the powers coming under the favored nation clause. In securing these privileges for all Japan expects the approval of all.

THE NICARAGUAN COMMISSION.

All the Members on Hand and Ready for Organization.

Washington, April 23.—The board of engineers selected by President Cleveland in accordance with the act of congress, to visit Nicaragua and investigate the feasibility, permanence and expense of constructing the interoceanic ship canal, will probably organize to-day. Maj. William Ludlow, the army member, having arrived in New York from London, where he has recently been military attache to the American embassy, will report at the war department to-day. Commander Mordecai T. Endicott, the naval member, has been stationed in Washington in charge of the public works of the navy for several years. The civilian member, Alfred noble of Chicago reached Washington yesterday and is ready to commence his duties at once. The formal appointment of the membership of the board has awaited the arrival of the members, and their commissions will be issued this afternoon.

BETWEEN $850,000 and $875,000.

Amount of Income Tax in Connecticut and Rhode Island.

New Haven, April 23.—Collector Byxbee says that the amount to be derived from the income tax in this revenue district, consisting of Connecticut and Rhode Island, will be between $850,000 and $875,000.—Corporations handing in returns will number 1,510, and individuals 4,240, of which about 1,000 corporations and 2,500 individuals will pay taxes.

The Sentiments Were His Own.

Washington, April 23.—Referring to his interview of last Saturday on the silver question, Secretary Morton said this morning that he did not profess to speak at that time, nor any other time, for the president or any other member of the cabinet. The sentiments were his own, and he alone was responsible for them.

FRAUD AND CONSPIRACY

Injunction Against South Carolina State Officers.

Gov. Evans, Tillman and Others Accused of Fraud at the Polls Last Fall—The Governor Hurls Defiance at the Order and Declares That He Will Treat It with Contempt.

Columbia, S. C., April 23.—Another sensation has been created by the publication in the State of the fact that Judge Goff, of the United States circuit court, had issued another injunction against the state authorities, on the grounds that the registration act of 1882 was unconstitutional; that there was sufficient fraud at the polls in the election last fall to vitiate the calling of the constitutional convention, that there was then a conspiracy between Tillman, Evans and others to commit frauds; that the agreement between Tillman, Evans, Barnwell, Hemphill and others was a couspiacy to defraud the negro of his right of suffrage; that Evans, as governor, had sought to carry out these conspiracies by removing notaries, for taking affidavits from negroes; that the illegal acts of the supervisors of registration were part of the same conspiracy.

Hurls Defiance at the Order.

Governor Evans hurls defiance at this order in similar language to that employed by him in referring to the injunction against the dispensary, and says that he will pay no attention to it. He made this statement to-day: "I have not been served with any order or any paper from Judge Goff, but from the published accounts it seems that I have been enjoined as governor of the state of South Carolina and Mr. McCoy, as a commissioner of elections of the state of South Carolina, and not as individuals. The state of South Carolina is still sovereign and independent, and it is my duty, under the constitution of the state, to execute the laws of the state. I shall continue to do this without fear of presumptive interference of a United States circuit judge.

Will Treat It with Contempt.

"I shall treat the proceeding with the contempt it deserves. We will, of course, act at the proper time, in accordance with the respect due to the constitution of the United States, and at the same time all arrangements necessary for the carrying out of the will of the people in reference to the constitutional convention will be made, and all duties required of me by the constitution and by the statute laws of the state of South Carolina will be faithfully performed. If I am in contempt of Judge Goff he must make the most of it."

FOLLOWED BY A WARSHIP.

City of Para's Experience Near Where the Allianca Was Fired Upon.

New York, April 23.—The Pacific mail stemer City of Para, just arrived from Colon, reports that from midnight Wednesday until daybreak Thursday morning she was followed by a Spanish warship. The Para at that time was off Cape Maysia, and in the vicinity of the place where the Allianca was fired upon by a gunboat some weeks ago. During the night, which was intensely dark, the port and starboard lights of the warship glimmered dead astern. At daybreak the sun broke over a calm sea, through which the Spaniard sheered to the westward and was finally lost to view. The Para was not molested.

Bangor, Me., April 23.—The special election in this city for mayor resulted in the election of Charles L. Snow over Mayor Beal, who was a candidate for re-election, by a majority of fourty-two. A large vote was polled and stood as follows: Beal, republican, 1,900; Snow, democrat, 1,942; Ellis, prohibition, 40. Party lines were more or less ignored as many republicans voted for Snow and many democrats for Beal.

MARRIED HER COACHMAN.

Wealthy Mrs. Parmenter Surprises the People of Summit, N. J.

Newark, N. J., April 23.—The people of Summit were much astonished when they learned that Mrs. Sarah J. Parmenter, widow of Isaac C. Parmenter, who was one of the wealthy residents, married her coachman, Charles Kelloway, Sunday afternoon. The groom is 24 years old, while the bride is 59 years of age. Kelloway was employed as coachman previous to the death of Mr. Parmenter, four years ago. For a long time the woman and her coachman were seen frequently in each other's company, and when out driving in their handsome equipages she usually occupied the seat beside Kelloway. Previous to Mr. Parmenter's death the coachman partook of his meals in the kitchen, but for a long time the widow and employe dined together. Her sister and other relatives, it is claimed, were strongly opposed to her actions. Mr. Parmenter at the time of his death was worth $50,000, and it is understood the widow received the income from that amount, besides owning the handsome residence she occupies in East Summit. It was stated this morning by one of Mrs. Parmenter's former intimate friends that there was a proviso in the will which would materially cut off her income, because of Sunday's marriage. The ceremony was witnessed by some relatives of the groom, but none of the bride's friends were present. The happy couple departed on their honeymoon on the noon train. It is said they went to Old Point Comfort.

SHE SAVED THE TRAIN.

Mrs. Lawyer Will Be Rewarded by the Pennsylvania Company.

Fleming, N. J., April 23.—Mrs. Mary Lawyer, who lives alone on the Belvidere division of the Pennsylvania railroad at Somer's Point, has been thanked and will be rewarded by the Pennsylvania company for heroism which she showed on Saturday evening. She discovered the bridge burning near her house a little while before a fast passenger train was due. She saw she had a little time to fight the fire, and did so until she heard the rumbling of the train in the distance. She succeeded in putting it nearly all out, and then realizing the danger to the occupants of the train, she ran down the track and signalled the train. It stopped a few feet from the bridge. One of the sleepers on the bridge had caught fire from a hot coal that had been dropped from a locomotive of the train that had passed over the bridge just ahead of the train Mrs. Lawyer signalled. The sleepers of the bridge were nearly burned and the bridge was much weakened.

TREE TRUNK IN EVIDENCE.

Two Wills Two Hundred Years Old Also Presented in Court.

Camden, N. J., April 23.—Among the evidence presented before Vice-Chancellor Pitney in the Camden chancery chambers yesterday, was part of the trunk of a tree said to be over 200 years old, and two wills 200 years old. The suit was the case of Ruhannah Creesse, et al, against the Security Trust company in foreclosure on a mortgage for $40,000 on valuable ocean front property at Five Mile beach. In the wood of the tree, several inches beneath the bark, marks were found which, it was claimed, were surveyors' marks defining one of the boundaries of the property in dispute. This was admitted in evidence. The case was not concluded.

MANACLED ON BOARD

Permission To Write Was Denied Consul Waller.

Story of His Alleged Offense—Indicted on Two Charges, Violation of an Order of the French Admiral Governing Correspondence and with Writing to the Enemy.

Marseilles, April 23.—The case of John L. Waller, formerly United States consul at Tamatave, Madagascar, and who, as announced in these dispatches, arrived here last Saturday on board the steamer Djemnah, is attracting considerable attention. Mr. Waller was manacled while on board the Djemnah, between Tamatave and Majunga, on the northwest coast of the island of Madagascar, but from that port on he was allowed to take two hours' exercise daily on deck, guarded by a soldier.

Refused Permission To Write.

During the voyage Mr. Waller spoke but little, although he frequently asked to be allowed permission to write. The French officers declined to grant his request. When before the court-martial, Mr. Waller, it is claimed, refused to speak in French, and the services of an interpreter had to be employed. Mr. Waller's nephew, who is 25 years of age, is said to be implicated in the proceedings which led to his uncle's arrest, trial and condemnation, and the young man was condemned to expulsion from Madagascar. He embarked as a second-class passenger on board the Djemnah, but landed at Zanzibar without having been able to communicate with his uncle.

To Undergo His Sentence.

It is thought probable that Mr. Waller will again be called upon to appear before a court-martial. Otherwise it is expected that he will be transferred to the central prison to undergo his sentence, if he is not taken to the island of Corsica or to the Safety isles, one of these places having been selected, according to report, for his incarceration.

His Alleged Offense.

Paris, April 23.—The correspondent of the Temps at Tamatave, Madagascar, states that John L. Waller, formerly United States consul at that place, was indicted on two charges, namely, violation of an order of the French admiral governing correspondence, and secondly, writing to the enemy. The evidence, it is claimed, showed that Mr. Waller entrusted to an officer of a steamboat a bulky letter which was posted at Natal and which was addressed to "M. Tessier, Merchant, Antananarivo, via Vatomandry." The English mail was not dropped at Vatomandry, but was landed at Tamatave, where the large sealed envelope attracted the attention of the authorities.

Contained Government Secrets.

They opened it and found, it is claimed, that it contained particulars regarding the strength of the French garrison, the number of sick, the importance of the outposts, etc. The envelope, it is stated, also contained an enclosure addressed to Mr. Waller's friend, E. Underwood Harvey, editor of the Madagascar News, asking the latter to insert it in that paper. This enclosure, it is alleged, contained abominable calumnies regarding the conduct of the French soldiers on the island of Madagascar, and denounced two of Mr. Waller's compatriots, American merchants, who were going to Antananarivo, as being spies in the pay of France.

Trial Lasted Only Three Hours.

The trial of Mr. Waller lasted only three hours and three-quarters, and he was then condemned to twenty years' imprisonment. He appealed from this sentence, but it was eventually confirmed. According to the correspondent of the Temps, it was the son-in-law of Mr. Waller, Paul Bray, a native of Texas, and not his nephew, who accompanied him on board the Djemnah. Bray was expelled from Madagascar for constant hostility to the French authorities and troops, and complicity with his father-in-law in communicating with the enemy.

DIAMOND CUTTING.

Skilled Hollanders Coming to This Country to Engage in the Industry.

When the duty went down on diamonds in the rough and went up on the polished gems there was an impetus given to the manufacture of the precious stones in this country. Then came the importation of diamond workers from Holland, which promised to move the center of the diamond industry from Amsterdam to New York, for Americans are the largest buyers of precious stones in the world.

There promises to be no change in the commercial stream that has begun to carry the center of the diamond cutting industry from the large cities of Holland where it has been for hundreds of years, to the metropolis of the New World. The Amsterdam dealers have been greatly troubled over the outlook, for they saw that they were to loose their best customers, and they hoped that the American law against the importation of contract labor would help them. They are to be disappointed.

"We must have these workmen," said a dealer. "It is impossible to carry on the work without them. Diamond cutters are not made in a day or in a year, or at all out of many. These Hollanders are born diamond workers, for their families have been in the business longer than their history tells. The ability is born with them and it is trained from early youth. I have never known an American diamond cutter, and I don't believe that there is one—at least, not a good one.

"There is danger of overstocking the diamond labor market rather than danger of us not getting all the workman we want, and the very best in each department, too. Certainly the late impetus has brought new men into the business and we expect to see new factories started. Though most of the old concerns are fully supplied with workman, the new establishments will take all the recent arrivals and those who will come in addition for some time.

WOMEN AS ACCOUNTANTS.

Mrs. Slooper Buys a Book and Starts In On Expenses.

There was Mrs. Slooper for instance. Shortly after her marriage she decided to keep accounts. Not in the silly way that women are said to do, oh, dear no! She would never put down every five cents car fare and forget the $50 coal bill, like the women in the newspaper jokes. She would simply and unreservedly jot down every penny and every dollar that passed from her purse into the purse of some one else.

Mr. Slooper aided and abetted this good resolve by at once handing her over $25 with the remark that she might begin by accounting for that. To this end Mrs. Slooper went immediately down town and bought the loveliest red morocco account book. On its cover she had the name "Serena Slooper" put in letters of richly chased silver.

There were several other things that she had to do downtown, and time slipped by so rapidly that it was quite late and she was very tired when she arrived home.

The next morning, however, she drew forth the new account book and put down on the first of its fresh pages the following item:

"Received from Mr. Slooper, $25.00." Then she opened her purse. There was just 7 cents remaining.

"Why, what could have became of all that money?"

Mrs. Slooper racked her brains diligently, but not a single expenditure could she remember. Oh, dear! what wearisome work it was. But after three minutes' cogitation it was all clear to her. It was really very stupid of her not to have thought of it before. And directly opposite the item, "Received from Mr. Slooper $25," she gravely wrote, "Spent the same."

LIFE IN PHILADELPHIA.

Bits of News from the Newspapers of the Quaker Metropolis.

Some of the Philadelphia libraries are great places for dozing away a quiet afternoon.

The corridors of the post office are popular meeting places for engaged young persons.

Only the wealthiest citizens have thus far been able to afford an attack of shad rash.

Suckers are being caught in large numbers in the Schuylkill at Flat Rock dam.

The boys are playing "hop scotch"—an unfailing sign of spring.

Amateur brass bands are resuming practice in anticipation of summer engagements.

To Combine For Protection.

At a meeting of the grocers association last night the advisability of taking all merchants into active membership was discussed, and there was a unanimity of opinion that such a move should be made. As it is now, only grocers are admitted to active membership, other dealers being allowed honorary membership. By placing all on the same footing it is thought that better results can be obtained, and a more thorough protection maintained against poor debts. The matter will be considered further at the next meeting, which is to be held May 6, and in all probability the proposition will be put into operation.

—A meeting of the Crescent Wheelmen will probably be held next Wednesday evening.

—Clarence E. Teel, who knows what's what in a wheel, has purchased a Czar of E. Frank Vail of North avenue.

—Manager Mills of the United States Express Company has shown good business management by placing a large blue and white sign on the passenger station side of the company's office.

—The third annual conference of the Missionary League of the Christian Endeavor societies of the Reformed Church will be held in Somerville Thursday. Delegates from this city will attend.

Local Physicians Puzzled.

SOUTH PETERSBURG, N. Y.—For two months Melvin Church of this town was confined to his bed, suffering from lumbago, rheumatism and kidney complaint. The regular treatment was prescribed by his physicians without benefit. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was then used with the most satisfactory results.

In speaking about his case Mr. Church said: "After taking about two-thirds of a bottle, I began to get relief, and when I had taken three bottles I was well and strong."

Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy will build up a person suffering from debility quicker and better than any preparation known. For dyspepsia, biliousness, liver complaint, neuralgia and rheumatism, it has again and again succeeded where everything else has failed.

Stone Square Lodge Parade and Ball.

Stone Square Lodge, colored Masons, are arranging for a big parade and meeting to be held Decoration Day, which several out-of-town lodges will attend. In the evening a grand ball will be given, Saengerbund Hall having been rented for the occasion.

WHITE OF PLAINFIELD.

SOME FAMOUS TREES.

ONE WAS PLANTED AT THE CAPITAL BY WASHINGTON.

Historic Memorial Trees to Be Seen at the National Botanic Garden—The Harrison Tree and the Confucius-Dana-Cummings Tree—The Cameron Tree.

Washington claims to have more trees and more famous trees than any other city. On the south side of the White House grounds, on the lawn close to the executive greenhouses, are two beautiful little fir trees, planted by Benjamin Harrison in the spring of 1892, while president. One of them is only four feet high as yet, but it is growing famously, and the other, six feet high, is also doing well.

The "Thaddeus Stevens tree," a magnificent example of the perfection to which the oriental sycamore, or plane tree, can be brought, forms the central arboreal attraction of Lincoln park, on Capitol hill. It stands just east of the bronze statue of Lincoln unshackling the slave. The tree was planted by Stevens in 1862 down in the Botanic garden, but in 1870 was removed bodily to Lincoln park, 15 blocks distant, where it now thrives with wonderful vitality. Its topmost branch is fully 90 feet in the air, while its lower branches sweep the ground. Without doubt it is the grandest of all the grand sycamores at the national capital.

But it is in the National Botanic garden—that famous wonderland of beautiful trees and shrubs, of which Superintendent William R. Smith is the chief magician—that the greatest collection of historic memorial trees extant in this country can be seen.

Superintendent Smith probably knows more about trees, both theoretically and practically, than anybody else in the United States, and he loves trees almost as though they were endowed with human souls. He has been in charge of the garden ever since Millard Fillmore's administration, and for a generation back it has been a favorite fad of his to invite statesmen in Washington happening to visit the garden to plant memorial trees, of which he keeps an accurate record. At the east end of the garden, near the young Washington elm planted by Senator Beck of Kentucky, is a great overcup oak, set out in 1861 by Senator John J. Crittenden, the famous peace orator of Kentucky during the rebellion. Not far from it are two little cedars of Lebanon, planted from the seed—one, in 1889, by Senator Hoar of Massachusetts, and the other, in 1890, by his friend, ex-Senator Evarts of New York. Hard by is a good sized Kentucky oak, planted some ten or twelve years ago by Congressman and Governor Proctor Knott of the Blue Grass State.

Near the center of the garden and just south of the conservatory tower two rare cypresses, transplanted from Broad street, Philadelphia, in 1866, by Edwin Forrest, the actor, and John W. Forney, the influential Washington and Philadelphia journalist. A few paces to the west of these is the "Albert Pike tree," an odd shaped growth, known as the Masonic cassia, planted in 1882 by the late General Albert Pike, while occupying the position of chief of the Scottish order, the highest rank of Masons. Between this and the main walk is a shapely linden, planted by the late Senator Zebulon Vance of North Carolina, and close by this are two cedars, planted, respectively, by the late Senator Lott Morrill of Maine and Senator Justin S. Morrill of Vermont.

A stone's throw from the "Albert Pike tree" and close by the western end of the conservatory, is a young sapling, christened by Captain Smith as the "Confucius-Dana-Cummings tree," seven feet high. It is a Chinese oak and has a unique history, considering its youth. It was planted in 1893 by Congressman Amos J. Cummings of New York from a stem presented to Superintendent Smith by Charles A. Dana, editor of the New York Sun, who had caused it to be raised by his gardener, William Faulkner, at his country place on Long Island, from an acorn picked up from the grave of Confucius, in China, and forwarded by a friend while traveling in the Flowery Kingdom. It is doing remarkably well under the tender care it receives, and its long name is not likely to retard its growth.

Farther down toward the western end of the garden is the "Holman tree," a beautiful Crimean fir, planted in the spring of 1862. It is now 25 feet tall, and hundreds of cuttings have been taken from it to ship elsewhere for the dissemination of the species in other parts of the country where it has not been introduced. In the vicinity of this is the "Tim Campbell tree," a small leaved elm from Siberia, planted two years back by the genial congressman from the east side of New York city, and near it is the "Garland tree," a zelkova, planted five years ago by Mr. A. H. Garland, President Cleveland's first attorney general.

Over on the west side also is the "Blackburn tree," a graceful big leaved magnolia, set out by the Kentucky senator in 1879. Not far from it is the "Bayard tree," a red leaved British oak, planted by the present American minister to the court of St. James eight years ago, while he was serving as secretary of state.

Near the west gate of the garden is the "Sherman tree," a wholesome buckeye, planted by the senior senator from Ohio in the spring of 1891. It bears a tag on its stem to indicate its species. A dozen paces off is the "Frye tree," a curiously variegated "freak" maple from the Scottish highlands, planted two years ago by the Maine senator in the presence of Superintendent Smith, who happens to be of Scottish blood and who stood by watching the operation in silent rapture and admiration.

Turning eastward again, standing close behind Superintendent Smith's cottage or 'keep," is the "Frank Blair tree," a huckleberry, planted 25 years ago from a cutting brought from Kentucky by the elder Blair. Superintendent Smith calls it the "necessity tree," from the fact that the birds in the garden never go near it to eat the berries or seeds until cold weather comes and no better food can be had.

Out near the Soldiers' home, on the Robinson estate, is an ancient locust tree that was particularly affected by Daniel Webster when he was a national figure in Washington. The friends whom he visited on the place had a little platform built into the lower crotch of the tree for his especial ease and comfort, and in that retreat the great New England statesman used to spend hours at a time, on summer days, reading and meditating on affairs of public policy.

But perhaps the most conspicuous and oldest among all these historic memorial trees is one planted by George Washington just 100 years ago last spring. It occupies a commanding position opposite the senate portico, in the east park of the capitol, scarcely a stone's throw from the marble steps. It is a superb specimen of the American elm, of gigantic proportions. Its gnarled trunk is covered with clinging ivy, and the whole growth, wonderfully symmetrical and well balanced, measures fully 100 feet in height.

Almost as prominent as the original Washington elm at the senate side of the capitol is another elm of less size, near the house entrance to the south, known as the "Cameron tree," in honor of Simon Cameron, secretary of war under Lincoln, for many years United States senator from Pennsylvania and father of the present senator, J. Donald Cameron. While a member of the senate committee on public buildings and grounds in 1878 Senator Simon Cameron intervened powerfully in its behalf and prevented its destruction in the regrading process by effectively repeating in the ears of the grading commission George P. Morris' familiar line, "Woodman, spare that tree!" Although it obstructed the principal pathway leading to the house of representatives, near the southern terrace, it was and has been permitted to live on account of the sentiment he entertained for it. The ground about it has been trimmed down and stone flagging built around it, so that it derives scant nourishment from the soil that is left, but still it survives and forms a striking and beautiful object.—Washington Star.

Notice is hereby given that the ordinance of the Borough of North Plainfield requires that flagstone walks be laid and repairing of old board walks.

An impression seems to exist that old board walks may be repaired without violation of the ordinance.

This is not the fact. In every case where any repair of a board walk is necessary stone must be used.

Public notice of this fact is now again given so that no one need feel aggrieved if they are required to replace a newly laid or repaired board walk with stone.

CHILDREN OF THE CHINESE.

Boys Are Estimated at a High Value by the Celestials.

On the great figure crowded canvas of the nineteenth century there is to day no other figure so pathetic as the figure of a Chinese child, says a writer in the Pall Mall Budget. It is welcomed by its father because it secures him a probably perpetual worshiper when he shall be entombed with his ancestors, and, therefore, a probably secure seat above the cozy, but not oppressive fireplace of the Chinese heaven, and is welcomed by its mother because it secures her her first real welcome and her first secure place within the home of her husband.

The Chinese emphatically believe, as Napoleon did, that the greatest woman is she who is the mother of most sons. Almost all the gods in the Chinese heaven are men gods, but there is at least one very important goddess there. She is called "Mother," and is the goddess—the patron saint—the guardian angel of every Chinese child under 16 years of age. Chinese parents who can afford it pay tribute to "Mother" upon each birthday of each of their children, that is, of course, until the children are 16. Then "Mother" is supposed to have lost all interest in them, since they have reached maturity. Then thanksgiving offerings are called "burning paper to 'Mother,'" though the burning of paper is not always a part of the function.

In most ways Chinese children are very much like other children. They are a little brighter than most and more obedient than many others. They are as fond of frolic and of laughter, games, toys and good times generally as any youngsters in the world.

China makes, more than any country I know, one big acknowledgment of the potential greatness of the little ones. Chinese children wear clothes in cut, shape, quality and fit almost analogous to the clothes their parents wear. The children of the Chinese poor, as do such children the civilized world over, wear rags, but they make rags go as far as rags can; and if those rags are so unorthodox as to dwindle into a string, the Chinese children who wear them wallow in the Chinese sunshine (sunshine as yellow and dimpled as themselves), or shrink from the Chinese frost, without realizing that they outrage the god of Chinese propriety.

The children of the well do to Chinese, in the winter and in the north of China, wear quaint frocks of silk, of satin, of brocade, made thick and warm with a padding of cotton wool and deftly embroidered and garments of fur. In the summer they wear thinner silks and lovely Chinese crepes.

Almost every Chinese child of high station carries a fan. Fans are the rattles of Chinese babyhood. A Chinese nurse diverts her charge with views of her swiftly moved, gayly painted fan. With that same fan she cools for him the torrid air of the Chinese summer, and when he grows strong enough to walk and totters about, with Asiatic masculine arrogance, upon his well developed yellow legs, his apple faced mother, if forced to criticise his momentary mode of life, is very apt to score his yellow shoulders with her pink perfumed fan; though to be honest, a Chinese child is almost never struck.

Many Chinese children who have scarcely a garment and rarely have an ample dinner have fans and are expert in their use, for in China the manner in which fans are carried, opened, used and moved is almost as significant as it is in Corea. The nakedest Chinese boy will almost be sure to own a kite. Chinese children are as skillful as Japanese children in kite flying, and are almost as fond of it as are the children of Siam.

It is more than religion with the Chinese to obey as their ancestors have obeyed and in all things to follow in the footsteps of those ancestors. This held China together for centuries; but now the reluctance of the Chinese to make use of methods and implements of war that were unknown to and unused by their ancestors threatens to make China, if not a nation of the past, at least a nation torn and dismembered.

Courtesy is one of the first lessons the Chinese children are taught. Almost every Chinese child, rich or poor, is taught how to address his parents, his superiors, his fellows and his inferiors. Except among the very poorest classes a considerable portion of each day is devoted by the child to the study of etiquette. Boy and girls are educated together until they are about ten. Then, unless the poverty of the family is such that they are obliged to assist in the struggle for bread, the boys go to school or have a tutor, and the girls are taught at home by a governess.

If the worship of ancestors and obedience to parents and superiors is the religion of the Chinese, education is their universal ambition. They positively worship learning, and have the greatest respect for people who have acquired it. Naturally enough, then, Confucius is the particular god, the patron saint of every Chinese school. When a boy first goes to school he takes with him joss sticks and painted candles and a small packet of mock money, all of which he burns before a strip of cloth or paper on which is inscribed one of the many titles of Confucius; the boy bowing while his offering burns. The ceremony is called "entering school" and "worshiping the sage."

A Chinese school in full swing is a rather noisy affair, and rather startling to one who has only been accustomed to the quiet of a well regulated English school room. Each pupil studies continually, aloud, very much aloud, and probably from a different book.

Among the wealthy classes a boy's life is one long succession of examination, as his social position and his political advancement will depend entirely upon the degree of scholarship to which he can prove he has attained.

Chinese children spend a great deal of time with their parents, and it was my observation that the girls were well treated, as much petted and as well cared for as the boys.

The daughters of the rich are taught to take great care of their personal appearance, great pride in their garments and jewels, and to dress their eyebrows—a very important part of any Chinese feminine toilet among the mandarin and wealthiest classes. In a rich family the feet of all the girls are generally bound, and the seven year old daughter of a red buttoned mandarin, though she may sob and cry bitterly during the cruel operation, would resent it more bitterly if she were left to walk through life on feet of normal size.

Ermine fur may be cleansed with delicate rubbing with a flannel cloth against the grain, and an after application of flour to the most soiled places.

GASPING FOR BREATH.

A Catarrh Sufferers Story of His Torments.

The Wonderful Cure Made by Munyon's Little Pellets.

Mr. John B. Albert, of 106 Colgate street, Cleveland, Ohio, says: "For the past six years I have suffered terribly from catarrh in its most disagreeable forms. I had all the disgusting symptoms of that loathsome disease. There was a continual dropping of mucus into my throat, a buzzing and roaring in my ears and violent pains above the eyes and nostrils. My breathing was labored and heavy, and, at times, I would be literally gasping for breath. My system was nearly broken down from the disease when I began to use Munyon's Catarrh Remedies. I had not much faith in them, but in a short time a very big improvement was noticeable. Now I am thoroughly cured and enjoying better health than I have for over six years.

Have you catarrh? Are you willing to investigate a treatment that cures catarrh by removing the cause? If so ask your druggist for a 25 cent bottle of Munyon's Catarrh Cure and a 25 cent bottle of Catarh Tablets. The Catarrh Cure will eradicate the disease from the system, and the Tablets will cleanse and heal the afflicted parts and restore them to a natural and healthful condition.

Munyon's Homoeopathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

Those who are in doubt as to the nature of their disease should address Professor Munyon, 1505 Arch st., Philadelphia, giving full symptoms of their disease. Professor Munyon will carefully diagnose the case and give you the benefit of his advice absolutely free of all charge. The Remedies will be sent to any address on receipt of retail price.

FIVE BLACK MARKS.

"The most miserable time I ever had in my life," said Dr. Macpherson one day as we sat chatting in his cozy drawing room, "was spent in a gunboat off the coast of Guinea. I began my professional life as a surgeon in the navy, you know."

I did not know. But as the Doctor seemed intent on telling the story I did not interrupt him by saying so.

"We had been cruising about in the Mediterranean," he went on, "when we were unexpectedly ordered to the Bay of Lagos to overawe some miserable little tribe near the coast which had not been behaving itself as a properly regulated little tribe under the protection of the British Empire ought to do. Kakoga's tribe, it was called, and Kakoga came in for a good share of honest abuse from the officers and men of the Dragon-fly when our orders came. The worst of it was, as far as the officers and men were concerned, that we were not at unity among ourselves. The engineer, called Lashton, had been disappointed in love and was naturally morose in consequence. What made him more so was the fact that his successful rival was the sub-lieutenant, an awfully nice fellow, and the only man on board that I cared for. Lieut. Gilby had met Miss Callan at Malta and had become engaged to her without the least idea that the engineer had intentions that way, not that it would have made any difference to him if he had, I suppose. Lashton's unconcealed enmity against him made life on board pretty unpleasant and divided us into two cliques. The lieutenant's clique, consisting of himself and me, certainly had the liveliest time of it, for the successful suitor of Miss Callan was the merriest fellow on earth, and while we were in the Mediterranean we suffered very little from the engineer's hostility. But directly we steamed off for Lagos a most remarkable change came over my friend, and he turned as taciturn as Lashton himself.

"It puzzled me to discover the reason, for though we were all sorry to leave the Mediterranean, still it was not like Gilby to sulk over it. He could not see less of his fiancee than he had been doing for two or three months, and we had the prospect before us of a small fight, for which he had been wishing. Lashton suggested to me in his sinister way that it was the prospect of fighting which caused the change in my friend, and though I answered the suggestion in the tone it deserved still it seemed the only explanation.

"Gilby said, when I asked him, that it was the weather, and the irritation with which he answered prevented me continuing my inquiries and made me more than ever convinced that it was 'funk,' and a very severe form of the disease, too. In fact, he took very little pains to conceal it.

"'I hope to goodness that I shall not have to go on shore,' he said, when we had nearly reached our destination. 'I wish the commander would lead the party and leave me here to look after the ship.'

"'It is not likely,' I answered gruffly, and I was glad that Lashton was not about to overhear him. I answered his next suggestion more gruffly still.

"'I suppose you would not like to certify that I ought to be on the sick list, would you, Macpherson?' he asked me, hesitatingly.

"I refused flatly.

"If he had told me the true reason of his fear I might have acted differently, for he looked ill enough, poor fellow! His face had grown quite white and wan since we started.

"It looked whiter still next day when he had to go in command of the landing party, which I accompanied, of course.

"When we were fairly embarked on the enterprise, his one idea seemed to be to get it over with all possible speed, and the haste with which he advanced to Kakoga's country would have been impossible if the men under him had not themselves been so anxious to get into action and introduce a little change into the monotony of life on a gunboat.

"However, the change was less than the majority of the bluejackets hoped for, the miserable little tribe did not show fight and our business was soon accomplished. In five days from the time we left the Dragon fly we were back again, none the worse for our trip, except that we were all worn out by Gilby's forced marches.

"The Lieutenant seemed more exhausted than any of us, and as soon as he had received the congratulations of the Commander, he retired at once to his berth. What surprised me was that his spirits did not show any improvement after the chance of fighting was at an end.

"It seemed to me as if he was still expected some calamity to happen to him, and I began to wonder whether thier might not be something seriously wrong with his health to account for all that had surprised me in his manner. This explanation which had not occurred to me while there was any real danger, struck me forcibly, now that we were safe on the gunboat, and, as soon as I had enjoyed the luxury of a bath after five days of discomfort, I strolled down to the Lieutenant's cabin to have a look at him in the new light of a patient.

"The door of my friend's cabin was ajar as I approached it, and when I glanced into the room before knocking, I was surprised to catch sight of Engineer Laston standing by the side of the Lieutenant's bunk.

"The fact of Lashton's enmity for my friend was so undisputed that at the sight of his figure in his enemy's cabin I felt quite justified in watching what was going on before making my presence known. Gilby was lying across his bunk half undressed and apparently sound asleep. The engineer was standing over him with a bottle of some black fluid in his hand. While I watched he made five small marks with it on the sleeping man's arm. The operation seemed such a mysterious and inexplicable one that I watched till he put the cork back into the bottle, without moving a step to interfere with the man, but I pounced upon him as he turned to leave the cabin.

"'What on earth have you been doing?' I asked, unceremoniously, and the fellow seemed rather taken aback.

"'It is only a practical joke,' he said, with a feeble attempt to smile unconcernedly.

"'Joke or no joke, I demand to see what is in that bottle,' I said authoritatively, my mind full of mysterious poisons, and the engineer handed it over tamely.

The bottle contained nothing but ink.

"Ink!" I exclaimed, when the great brain specialist reached this point in his narrative, and Macpherson smiled in the peculiar quiet way he has when he has perfectly mystified a hearer.

"'Yes, ordinary ink,' he went on. 'The discovery naturally made me feel foolish, but not so much as it would have done if I had not been convinced still that his action was in some way a malicious one. What his idea could be, however, it was impossible for me to divine, and I felt so curious about it that I should have roused my friend at once to inquire how five black marks on his arm could possibly affect his happiness, if he had not looked so thoroughly worn out and in need of sleep.

As soon as Lashton was gone I left the cabin at once for fear of disturbing the sleeper, without stopping even to try and remove the inkstains, a piece of stupidity at which I have not ceased to wonder. You see, it was impossible for me to guess how desperately serious the plot was that the engineer had formed against the man whom he considered his rival. I retired to my own cabin opposite Gilby's, leaving my door open to make sure that Lashton did not return to do more mischief, but I made a poor sentry. I was tired out like the young Lieutenant through not having had my proper amount of rest for four nights, and I fell asleep still wondering about the five black marks.

"When I woke, I do not know how long after, it was to find Gilby standing in my room, half undressed as I had seen him in his bunk, but with his shirt sleeve buttoned up over the ink stains on his arm. I was too full of sleep, however, to notice the fact at the time, or even to remember for the moment anything about what I had seen. Sleepy, as I was, I could not help noticing the look of complete misery and despair on my friend's face. He was standing at the side of my bunk, holding an envelope, and when I started up, rubbing my eyes, he put it into my hands.

"'I am glad you are awake, Macpherson,' he said, in a strangely constrained tone. 'I wanted to ask you to do me a favor. Will you give this letter to Miss Callan personally when you see her? I do not want to take the risk of sending it by the mail.'

"'But you will see her yourself as soon as I shall,' I said, in surprise at the request, and Gilby did not reply. Instead he turned and walked out of the cabin, leaving me staring at the letter in my hand and wondering what it meant. I was so stupid with sleep still that it took me two minutes to think of any explanation at all. When I did I was out of my bunk and running across to the opposite cabin in a second. Just in time, too, for Gilby was in the act of locking his door when I burst it open and rushed in without ceremony. The fact that the young lieutenant's revolver and a couple of letters, one of them addressed to me, were lying on the table, served to assure me that my fears were not ungrounded. The first thing I did was to secure the revolver. Then I turned to my friend.

"'What the devil are you going to shoot yourself for?' I demanded, bluntly.

"Gilby made no attempt to deny his intention.

"'I am sorry you have disturbed me, Macpherson,' he said, with perfect coolness, 'because it cannot make any difference.'"

"And the reason?" I asked, with interest, for the doctor had paused to light another cigarette. Macpherson blew a whiff of smoke from his mouth and continued his story.

"I suppose you have never heard of a disease called 'Guinea Madness'?' he asked, and when I shook my head he went on:

"Neither had I, until Gilby told me about it, although I am a doctor. It is one of those strange diseases that limit themselves luckily to a particular district and is only found among a few tribes along the coast of Guinea. It is generally thought that Europeans cannot take it, but the idea is an erroneous one, or, at any rate, there are exceptions, for Lieut. Gilby's father died of it when my friend was a boy of 10. His father was captain of a trading vessel, and the lieutenant was accompanying him on a voyage when they called at the Guinea Coast. He therefore saw his father in all the indescribable agony of the disease, which seems more like hydrophobia than anything else, although it is infectious.

"The sight made a great impression on him, and, since his constitution was quite similar to his father's, he had always suffered from an almost supernatural terror of the Guinea Coast. He was quite persuaded that if he ever went ashore there he would catch the disease and die like his father. Lashton, it seems, was aware of this monomania of his; for it almost amounted to monomania."

"And he had really caught the disease?' I asked.

Macpherson smiled. "He thought he had. The first symptom is the appearance of small black marks on the arm or leg.—Pall Mall Budget.

Fooling the Busy Bee.

Mock bees and spiders! A writer shows that some flowers form a striking exception to the rule of cross-fertilization. The bee and fly orchids, for example, which would be much more commonly seen on our English chalk downs but for the ravages of greedy collectors, fertilize themselves and do not want to be bothered by buzzing bees and flies. So a cunning device has been resorted to. No bee will enter a flower in which another bee is already at work; therefore to protect the entrance the lip is enlarged into a process exactly resembling the hind quarters of a bee (in the fly orchid it resembles a large fly). To the spider orchids, another British species, it seems to have occurred how a still more trying shock might be administered to the nerves of troublesome insects, so it displays in its orifice the likeness of a large spider.—London Daily News.

A Horse's Cure for Rheumatism.

A striking instance of animal instinct, or "horse sense," is revealed by the actions of an old horse owned by Henry Root, a prosperous farmer of Wissahickon. Mr. Root's horse has been troubled for months with rheumatism of the entire body, and all the treatment of learned veterinarians failed to relieve the suffering animal. One day upon being turned into the meadow the horse pawed up the loose earth with its hoof and stooped down to lick up the dirt. Almost immediately the beneficial effects were noticeable and ever since the rheumatic horse has taken his daily dose of mud to the extent of nearly a half peck per day. He is almost entirely cured.—Philadelphia Enquirer.

Napoleon and Talleyrand.

"There is one unpleasant feature about dying," said Talleyrand, "one cannot read one's obituaries. I should like very much to read my obituaries."

"So should I," returned Bonaparte, dryly. "Hurry up and die, will you?"—Harper's Bazar.

A SUMMER NIGHT

BY MAXWELL GRAY.

CHAPTER II.

Stephen Adams stood still in the road, the bridle on his bare brown arm, and started stupidly after the doctor's dog-cart. A great sob broke from his broad brown chest, the blue striped shirt on which was open; it was a sob of relief. Then he looked at the cob, and, going over to the old-fashioned inn, relic of past coaching days, the Rose and Crown, called the ostler and helped him rub the cob down, loosening the girths and rinsing the mouth.

Somebody gave him a hat which he put on half consciously; and then he called for ale, drank a pint and poured a pint down the cob's throat.

"He done it in half an hour. Seven mile," he said, looking hard at the cob.

"A rare good goer, guvner," the ostler returned, patting and smoothing the animal's firm-set neck, "and a rare good un to stay. But you've took it all out of 'en; there ain't 'alf a kick in all his four legs."

Adams looked thoughtfully at the cob, considering how much go was left in him, and then, taking a parcel the doctor's man had brought him, fixed it to the saddle, feed the ostler and led the horse briskly away, walking him down the street, over the bridge and up the hill before he mounted and trotted along the level, slowly at first, and then more quickly through the cooling dusk, and dewy scents of field and hedgerow.

Hundreds of years seemed to have passed since he started in the evening sunshine on that mad, break-neck gallop, spurred by agonies of fear.

He fell to thinking over all that had passed since he went forth in the morning dew that day, bent upon getting that last grass crop, over-ripe as it was for lack of hands to save it, mown. There were still some acres to cart; the hands could go on to the carting when the dew was fully dried; in the meantime a quarter of the heavy grass at least might be down—the whole must be down before dewfall, and those acres of well-made hay carted besides. To mow one field and cart the other—that had seemed the whole aim and problem of existence in the morning. And Annie to worry him with her petty wants just then! He had flung off with a snarl, when she raised herself from the pillow on one arm and called after him as he was leaving the room, only half awake, his heavy eyes full of sleep. Money! Women were always wanting money—at the wrong time. What if Jane's wages were a week overdue? She could wait; but that heavy, over-ripe grass could not. Give Annie the key to his strong box to get it? A likely matter. And the weed that had got into the cows' pasture to be seen to besides. Why hadn't Annie told him of the taste in the butter before? Who but a woman would wait till that morning over breakfast to mention it? Who wouldn't have sworn?

Those acres of rich waving grass, stiff against the scythes, and that invidious weed in the pasture seemed of small moment now. The whole dairy and the year's hay had better have gone—before that evening's tragedy took place.

They had been married ten months and it had not troubled Stephen to see Annie's rounded cheek sharpen and pale and the corners of her young red mouth droop; it was only nature, he thought. And if she was found crying at times, why it was the way of young wives on the road to motherhood; so he was told. These woman's troubles had to be borne; what else were women made for? To be borne quietly, without troubling men. Wives must not be spoiled. Men had troubles enough out of doors; they wanted peace at home.

So he thought in the morning—but now his thoughts were changed.

In spite of his moroseness and evil temper, he had been a happy man in the beginning of that day. What would he not give now to drag himself from sound sleep in the morning coolness, and drowsily dress and hurry forth, to be called back by Annie? To be standing in the mower's rank at mid-day with streaming face, sweeping the long bright scythe through the stiff thick grass—to be lying, face downward, beneath the hedgerow oak in a pleasant doze, hushed by the faint rustle in the cool green canopy above—half dreaming, half thinking of happy things—of heavy hay crops, nearly saved, of glorious weather and consequent coming on of blossomed wheat, plumping out of heavy ears of barley and filling of oat-husks, as well as of the lucky chance that the child was not to be born till harvest was done, the dairy work lighter and autumn leisure at hand. It would not do to have Annie upstairs in harvest or haying time, with twenty cows in milk. She would get through a good summer's work first, and by next summer the boy would be grown to a plaything good to toss. Of course it would be a boy.

"Stephen," he heard, continually, above the cob's trot on the dusty high-road, "do listen, Stephen. Indeed, it's particular." Of all things he hated a complaining woman; and the querulous tone of Annie's voice irritated him. He knew that he was not good-tempered, was ungracious, taciturn, irritable. Annie should have known it too, and forborne to worry him. A whole day often passed without a word from him; he meant no harm; he hated senseless chatter; she knew it was only his way. Yet he promised his conscience that if Annie were but spared, he would be kinder, more sociable, gentler for ever after. If!

He turned sick, and pressed his heels into the tired horse's side. The possibility was infinitesimal. The cob quickened his weary trot; Stephen thought he might be too late.

The tailor's son was still at the window, watching the street lamps sparkle out on the dusk, and a few silver stars point the pale strip of sky that ran like a river between the black roofs. He saw the untasted supper in the opposite room, where no one remembered to draw the blinds, and caught the gleam of Mrs. Newman's white gown as she passed the open door, pacing disconsolate in the garden, waiting for her husband.

And always, he saw the spare, sinewy figure of Stephen Adams; his sun-burnt, hard-featured face, with red-brown beard and thick hair matted over his strong, stubborn forehead. Always he heard the words: "Shot through the body." Who was shot, and by whom? "Wife," "loaded gun," were the only words that he could make out in the farmer's hurried, urgent message.

Stephen was hearing that shot over and over again, together with Annie's words, above the cob's foot-falls, the droning of chafers, voice of corn-crakes and chirp of grasshoppers, and then a mist of blood would come before his hot, dazed eyes.

The mowing was at last quite finished, the hay had been carted long before the dews began to fall. The sun was low when he went into the wide brewus or outer kitchen to replace his gun in the rack after firing at rooks in the piece of wheat beyond the orchard. He had fired both barrels, reloaded, and fired again more than once; he had a young rabbit just shot in his hand, and threw it on the table, when Annie came in, white and anxious.

"Stephen, I must speak in private. It's serious; it's about—it's Willis Arley—" so far she had panted.

He had always despised and disliked this Willis Arley, a fellow who never succeeded in anything, who read and wrote when he should have been plowing and sowing, who left his father's farm and set up for a scribbler in London till he was nearly starved. He had been one of Annie's numerous sweethearts; Stephen had a vague notion that she favored him at one time before her father stepped between them and forbade Arley the house. It was an old story, so old that it had not occurred to Stephen even to be jealous; Arley had not been near the place for years; there was a rumor that he was gone for a soldier, or to Australia. He was no longer spoken of now, his brother had the farm, his mother lived in a vine-covered stone house near the village church; Stephen seemed to remember that she was very ill; to be sure, Dr. Newman's dog-cart had been seen outside the vine-covered house that afternoon. Yet when Annie spoke the half-forgotten name, he turned with one of his impatient jerks, the gun still in his hand—and how did it happen?—the maid servant was standing by, the only witness—what did she know?—the gun must have been cocked, he must have touched the trigger—there was a report, a cry, Annie was down, there was blood on the stone-paved floor. Then followed cries of alarm and horror, people running in, the saddling and bridling and mad galloping of the cob along the dusty seven-mile road to the town.

THERE WAS A REPORT.

The night sparkled with pale stars, the breath of honeysuckle hung about meadow and garden, when he rode into his own yard and looked anxiously at his house, dimly outlined in the gray summer dusk that would not deepen before the early dawn reddened the sky.

A dim light showed in the rose-bowered window upstairs, another dim light in the kitchen below, neither window was curtained; all was not yet over. His quick step, heavy with nailed boots, was on the uncarpeted oaken stair, where an eight-day clock ticked with steady patience on the landing and vaguely comforted him, quieting the fever of his blood with familiar, home-like voice. Outside the bedroom door he paused, sick at heart; then softly turned the handle and entered.

Annie's face, white and sharp, was on the white pillow, her dark hair, loosened and tangled, lay over pillow and sheet, the doctor was bending above her, doing something to her wounded side, a woman wiped blood from the pale lips, lips softly smiling in spite of the quick, gasping breath that parted them. Annie's beautiful dark eyes were wide and full of light—such a light as he had never before seen in them, a light directed to the gaze of a tall man in a smock frock standing by the bed in the shadow of the curtains.

What man? His startled glance searched in the shadow and discerned

HE SOFTLY TURNED THE HANDLE.

the half-forgotten, thoughtful features of the white-handed dreamer, the wastrel, the ne'er-do-weel Willis Arley. He found himself narrowly observing the clean white smock, worn somehow with a difference, beneath the evidently unaccustomed garment he detected the narrow red stripe of regimental trousers, above it the trim mustache and otherwise clean-shaven face and close-cropped hair that bespoke the soldier.

A faint shiver went through Arley's frame at Stephen's approach; Annie's eyes lost their light and turned to her husband's face with a piteous pleading.

"I tried hard, Stephen," she panted, in a slow, strained voice that already seemed far off. "If you had a cared for me, if you had a spoke a kind word! And the child and all coming—I could a been—a good wife—" The voice failed into inarticulate mutterings, the dark eyes closed, Stephen and Arley each heard the throbbing of their own hearts and Annie's sibilant breathing; a waft of flower-spiced air shook the feeble candle flame, a moth dashed madly through it; the doctor put something to the pale lips; the patient seemed to sleep.

Some seconds passed; Arley stood rigid and erect; cold dews sprang on Stephen's strong square brow; his mouth was parched.

Then Annie started and sat up. "Forgive!" she cried, gazing into her husband's face drawn, and stretching out her hands to him. The effort brought blood from the wounded lungs to the mouth and she fell back, her eyes turning to Arley and closing with a smile forever.

It seemed not long after that Adams found himself in the kitchen, where a fire had been kindled and a candle burned dimly, but not so dimly that he did not see dark, wet stains on the stone floor. The doctor was holding his arm firmly, Arley was standing before him with a sullen, defiant gaze in his large, dreamy eyes.

"It's four years since I saw Annie Duke, Mr. Adams," he was saying, "till this afternoon. Mother died at five o'clock. I'd overstayed my leave for a day and they were after me. I slipped along the hedge in the ditch to your orchard, and so through the garden and wood-house, where your wife saw me and took me to the strong beer cellar, and hid me, and gave me the smock frock. There I should have stayed until I could have got off quiet in plain clothes. But I heard the shot and the cries and ran out and helped carry her up. That's all I have to say."

"And that's enough," said a deep voice from a dark corner whence issued two soldiers, while a third appeared at the door.

"Quite enough," replied Arley, saluting. "Good night, gentlemen."

"Good night," replied Adams, mechanically, as Arley and the three soldiers, each with a "Good night, all," vanished into the pale summer night, where their measured tread gradually died away into silence.

"Her last look was for him, and I killed her," Adams muttered to himself.

"I was never more sorry for anybody in my life, Mabel," the doctor told his wife afterwards. "The man was like a stone. The woman told him his wife had said she was glad to go, thankful for the shot."

The tailor's son slept but brokenly; sometimes he was glad to hear solitary footsteps echoing along the silent streets and passing into the cool and pleasant night; his spirit seemed to pass into the freshness with the unknown steps. He waked to-night to hear the belfry clock chime the four quarters and strike twice on the deep bell that sounded fuller and more solemn on the silent night. The air stole fresh and sweet through the open window. It was not unpleasant to lie awake in the restful stillness. A quarter chimed and the half hour. The bells were like the voice of a watching spirit, telling that all is well. Then from far off rose the faint roll of wheels and quick beat of hoofs, louder and louder, till the sound ceased at the opposite door, and the doctor drowsily dropped to the pavement. He was cheered by the red light of the shaded candles on the table where the supper was still waiting, cheered still more by the sight of his wife opening the door, flushed with sleep, charming in a cambric dressing-gown with pink ribbons and pink slippers, her shining hair gathered into a long thick plait that fell over one shoulder, her eyes bright with welcome and kindness.

He thought of poor Annie's words: "If I'd thought you'd a cared for me—if you'd a said a kind word." So, to keep himself from over softness, he roundly rated Mrs. Newman for being up.

But she only laughed and stopped his mouth in the proper way.

Art Note.

"How is your daughter coming on in her art studies, Mr. Bondclipper?"

"Splendidly. She has made great progress in sculpture. I expect she will be the only sculptress in New York."

"That's where you are mistaken. There are lots of women who 'bust their husbands' in New York.—Tammany Times.

Fritz Indictment Quashed.

In the Somerset County Court at Somerville this morning the indictment against Adam Fritz, of North Plainfield, was quashed on the motion of the prosecuting attorney. Mr. Fritz was represented by George DeMeza, and on the alleged charge of selling property, against which the Sheriff had levied on a judgment, an indictment was procured. The court adjourned till next Monday, with only three cases left on the calendar.

PLAINFIELD BAD GIRLS.

They Cause a Sunday Row in Peaceful Linden.

REVOLVERS DRAWN, SHOTS FIRED.

Constable Wersinger Made a Plucky Fight Against Young Toughs, But Was Overmastered, and His Female Prisoners Escaped.

Annie McDonald and Mollie Stevens, Plainfield young girls who have already become notorious in police circles, having figured in court cases repeatedly, were the cause of an exciting experience for Constable Wersinger of Elizabeth Sunday night.

Wersinger went to Linden with a warrant for the arrest of the girls, who had become frequenters of a house there, and who were charged with disorderly conduct.

He found the girls in the house, and had them in his custody and handcuffed together when he was attacked by Edward Ryan, Jr., and three others. A desperate struggle took place in the house, and the officer was roughly handled. When some of his assailants drew revolvers Wersinger retired.

During the struggle the girls escaped. They were taken in by other friends, and the handcuffs were severed. They subsequently left the village.

Wersinger went back to the house Sunday night with assistance, and had another unsuccessful struggle with his assailants. He fired at two of the men while they were running from the house, and it is believed that one of them, a brother of Edward Ryan, was wounded.

Monday evening Wersinger made the third visit to Linden, and was successful in surprising and arresting Edward Ryan, Jr., but not without another struggle in which other members of the family participated.

Ryan was taken to Elizabeth, and lodged in the custody of Warden Biore at the county jail on the charge of resisting an officer.

Ryan was arrested last Summer for disorderly conduct in Linden, and when admitted to bail he ran off. He has since been in the United States Army and it is alleged is a deserter, returning to Linden only a few days ago. He is twenty-four years of age.

Chief Grant of this city was notified, but has been unable to locate Molly, the tenderloin belle. It is thought that she and her pal, Annie McDonald, are now sojourning in the metropolis.

Local Baseball Abandoned.

The Y. M. C. A. athletics have practically abandoned the proposed organization of a baseball team for the season. The expense of buying uniforms, erecting a grand-stand on the grounds, etc., was more than they cared to shoulder this year. The grounds of the Crescent Wheelmen were undesirable, they considered, until the trolley road is extended to that section, owing to the inconvenience and expense patrons would be put to in order to get there.

Busy Bicyclists.

At the meeting of the Crescent Wheelmen next week the decision as to what prizes will be offered for the racing events of the Decoration Day meet will probably be decided upon. Other matters concerning the meet will also be considered. The entry blanks will be sent shortly, after which the officers will probably be kept busy recording them, though the greatest portion of them will probably not arrive until the last few days before the meet.

Pipe for the New Sewers.

M. Honan & Son, of Chester, Pa., who was awarded the construction of 17 miles of new sewers for the city, were in town yesterday and signed a contract with J. Pierson of Westfield for the entire amount of pipe to be used. The pipe will come from the very best factories in the Ohio Valley. The contract was strictly drawn as regards the quality and prompt delivery of the pipe, thus ensuring good work for the city.

Hurry It Up.

The urgent need of a hospital ambulance was never better illustrated than yesterday afternoon when Rev. Dr. E. M. Rodman went chasing about town for a conveyance to take John Gordon to the Muhlenberg Hospital, after he had suffered a stroke of apoplexy. The ambulance now in course of erection in New York cannot be brought into use too soon.

HE YELLED WHOA.

BUT THE HORSE KICKED THE WAGON TO PIECES.

A Rahway Man Trades Equines at Westfield, and Then Comes to Plainfield, Where the Horse Makes Fun for Manning Avenue Residents.

A kicking horse made trouble for its owner and fun for the residents of Manning avenue at 11 last night. The owner said he was from Rahway and had traded horses at Westfield early in the evening. The equine which he received went along all right until Manning avenue was reached. Here the animal began to kick in a ferocious manner, resulting in the breakage of one of the shafts. The horse was unhitched from the buggy and the broken portion repaired with a piece of tin and wire. The animal had no sooner been attached to the wagon than he commenced kicking worse than ever, which finally resulted in his getting tangled up in the wheels and falling in a heap to the ground.

During this time the owner and companion who was with him, had been vociferously yelling "whoa", and using various other epithets seeking to subdue the fractious beast, the noise of which had collected a crowd of men from nearby houses. After a great deal of trouble the horse was finally helped to his feet, and the wreck of a vehicle pulled to one side.

"If I had an axe", said the irate owner between breaths, "I'd kill the beast."

Mose Carey stood by and heard the remark. Mose is always accommodating, and rushed away. In a few minutes he came back, and edging up to the horse-owner, said:

"Here 's an axe, sah."

The man grabbed the weapon and raised it as if to strike the horse. Just then Mose's pity was aroused and he grabbed the man's arm. Mose thought the joke was going too far. The blow did not strike and the horse kept right on kicking.

The man who had been with the horse owner said that his nerves were unstrung and he must have something to steady them. So he started for a drug store. He knew when he was well off, for he never came back.

The excited man finally decided to ride the horse to Rahway. He attempted to mount but the horse pranced so that it would have taken a circus rider to have done the act. And the man was no circus rider. So he thought to quiet the horse. To do this he struck him between the eyes with the butt of the whip. The horse seemed to be stunned and stood in a meekly way while the owner got on his back. Then the whip was plied by the rider and the pair left for Rahway at a two-minute gait.

The battered wagon was taken into C. P. Daly's barn and the crowd went back to bed.

STRICKEN WITH APOPLEXY.

John Gordon Suffers a Stroke While at Work.

John Gordon, the janitor of Miss Scribner and Miss Newton's private school, corner of LaGrande avenue and Washington street, suffered a stroke of apoplexy yesterday afternoon in the cellar of Rev. Dr. E. M. Rodman's house on LaGrande avenue. He had been working during the morning and early afternoon for Dr. Rodman, cutting kindling wood in the cellar. About 3 one of the servants noticed that the noise of cutting had ceased for some little time, and fearing that something was wrong she started down the stairs to investigate. As she reached the bottom the prostrate body of Gordon met her vision. Hurrying up stairs Dr. Rodman was notified, who went across the street and borrowed the horse and wagon of Carney Brothers, and took the insensible man to his home.

Dr. Murray was called and found him to be suffering from a severe stroke of apoplexy, and ordered his removal to Muhlenberg Hospital. Rev. Mr. Rodman then started out to find a conveyance and after stopping at half a dozen different places finally secured one, and with a mattress an improvised stretcher was made. The still unconscious man was then taken to the hospital.

Gordon remained in an unconscious condition until shortly after 2 this morning, when he died. He leaves a wife.

—Charles Smith, Neaf Apgar and T. H. Keller left this morning for Poughkeepsie, where they will take part in a three-days shooting tournament.

FOR WORKING GIRLS.

Plainfield Is Likely to Have a Club.

KING'S DAUGHTERS IN THE LEAD.

Miss Woolfolk of the New York College Settlement Enlightens the Plainfield Young Women on the Methods and Results of the Work.

A meeting of more than ordinary interest was held in the Crescent Avenue Church yesterday afternoon under the auspices of the Ever-Ready Circle of King's Daughters, when Miss Woolfolk of the New York College Settlement gave a talk on working-girls clubs. The meeting was attended by about 40, and was presided over by Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, who very pleasantly introduced the young woman speaker. In doing so he spoke positively of the need of an organization like a working-girls club in Plainfield, and stated that the Ministers Association had lately been considering the needs and what could be done to remedy the state of affairs existing here. He considered that the organization of such a club as this would, to a great extent, solve this delicate question.

Miss Woolfolk made plain in her talk that she was thoroughly conversant with the workings and results of the clubs in New York and elsewhere and also seemed to be completely imbued with a love for the work. She spoke in an agreeable way of the happy effect the work has, through the girls, for their own homes. The instruction aimed at is largely along the lines of home-making and good housekeeping.

Mrs. Kimball was then introduced by Dr. Lewis, and told of the desire of the Ever-Ready Circle to begin, in a small way, such a work in Plainfield. She spoke of the many cases which had come under her own observation, which showed how great is the need of a place where girls whose homes are no homes at all can find homelike rooms, good reading, pleasant entertainment, and, above all, a warm and friendly welcome. Such a place the Ever-Ready Circle desires to open, as soon as possible, and, after a short time, to form classes in sewing, cooking, drawing, etc. The Circle will be very glad to receive donations of furniture, good reading matter, and specially of money.

At the close of Mrs. Kimball's talk, tea was served, and a social hour was enjoyed by all.

FIREMEN'S GALA DAY.

Exempts of the State to Meet in Convention, and a General Parade to Follow.

Plainfield firemen are planing for a merry celebration with their Elizabeth brethren on the occasion of the annual parade next month. Usually the parade occurs in October, but none was held last year, the event being postponed until next month, at which time the State Convention of the Exempt Firemen's Association will be held in Elizabeth. The day set for the convention is Wednesday, May 15, and it will be a gala one for the firemen and their friends.

At least three hundred and fifty visitors are expected, and the fire department intend to do their best to render the day memorable to each one by entertaining them in royal manner. This will necessitate the expenditure of a considerable sum of money, and to meet the expenses the firemen are receiving subscriptions from the public. Mayor Rankin has headed the list with a handsome sum.

The day of the convention promises to be an eventful one. The members of the State Exempt Association will convene at Quien's Hall on Elizabeth avenue at 10 in the morning, and after transacting their business will elect officers for the ensuing year. At the close of the convention the visiting firemen will be entertained at a banquet and escorted through the city by the local exempt association and the fire department.

The Notes Held Good.

The contract case of Rosenfield Brothers against Jacob Blimm was tried before Justice Newcorn yesterday afternoon, with a six-men jury as follows: J. O. Campbell, Calvin Neighbor, Charles J. Noel, Julian Scott, J. Linn Edsall and John Mortimer. The plaintiffs issued warehouse receipts to the defendant, for which he made notes but which he refused to pay, claiming that the receipts were valueless. The case was important in the fact that the validity of seven other notes was involved in the decision. After a number of witnesses had been sworn the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs. Harry C. Runyon appeared for Rosenfield Brothers, and George DeMeza for Mr. Blimm.

It will be an agreeable surprise to persons subject to attacks of bilious colic to learn that prompt relief may be had by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. In many instances the attack may be prevented by taking this remedy as soon as the first symptoms of the disease appear. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. COME TO PLAINFIELD!

That's the Garden-Spot of This Union County Paradise.

Eloquent McBride of the Elizabeth Journal sings this Spring poem of New Jersey's fairest region:

The time is at hand to secure new homes. Such a time is always at hand, but in the Spring of the year there are more opportunities offered, and people then feel more like making changes than at any other time of the year.

The homes which are offered in Union county are among the cheapest, most convenient, most healthfully located, and most beautiful, of all those to be found within the same distance from New York.

They are the cheapest, because Union county rural and semi-urban property has always been low in price. The property that has been opened up for improvement and for residences within the past few years, will compare in prices with anything that can be offered, even at much greater distances from the metropolis. Hundreds of purchasers have already discovered this fact, and the many new and beautiful homes that have already been established are pleasant evidence of the reasonable prices of Union county land.

They are the most convenient, because Union County is threaded, as no other county is, with railroads and with magnificent stone roads. The Central Railroad of New Jersey passes through some of the most beautiful sections of the county, and one of the longest stone roads parallels the railroad, thus making it easy to get to any station, and easy to drive from the station to the pretty country homes along the telford roads.

No other county is so traversed with railroads and telford pavements, and all these homes are convenient because they are so near the roads, and so easy of access.

There are no advantages for healthfulness that any locality within fifty miles of New York can claim over the county of Union. Its mountain ranges and hillsides are natural sanitariums. Crystal water flows from its rocks, and the clearest, cleanest air gives vigor to all who breathe it. As to the beauty of these sites, they must be seen to be really appreciated, and the time is near at hand when they are to be seen at their best; when the fragrance of Spring blossoms and the exquisite tints of green incite to the calm delights of Summer life in the country.

It is only since the telford roads were built that even the people of Union County's cities knew what beautiful sites for country homes were within a half-hour ride of their very doors. But since then these places have been made known to hundreds who have found them perfect places of rest, comfort and health. Moreover, the railroad rates are reasonable, and it will not be long ere the trolley car will offer its advantages to those who are now dependent on horses and the steam cars.

One of these days—and in the near future—these beautiful localities will all be bought up by syndicates, and their their prices doubled or quadrupled. To any seeking rural or semi-urban homes Union County affords a vast number, choice, beautiful by nature, health-giving and capable of the highest and most tasteful adornment. They are now cheap, but the day will come when they cannot be bought for thrice the money that will now secure them.

Union County Spring Conference.

The Spring conference of the Union County Christian Endeavor Union will be held May 10 in the First Baptist Church of Elizabeth. There will be afternoon and evening sessions. The afternoon meeting will be a Junior rally. The speaker will be Rev. A. W. Spooner, the State Superintendent of Junior Work. His theme will be "The Children in the Church at Work". The Junior Superintendents of Elizabeth met in the chapel of the East Baptist Church Monday night and arranged the preliminaries for the children's exercises. In the evening the conference will be for the Senior societies. The Union county and city unions will elect their officers, a parliament on good citizenship and temperance will be held, and an address by some noted speaker on the theme will be delivered.

Calloway Went Away.

The Blow Failed to Land.

The examination of Harry Munckton, who was charged with fighting, was called before Judge Coddington at 10 this morning. Munckton, it was alleged, struck Michael Sedar on Somerset street Saturday night. He pleaded guilty to the charge of hitting at him, but missing him. Sedar was n't sure whether or not he was hit, and several others saw the blow struck but thought that it did not land.

The charge not being sustained, sentence was suspended, the Judge admonishing Munckton not to throw his fists around in such a promiscuous manner hereafter.

$22,765 STOLEN.

First National Bank Sharply Victimized.

THE MONEY TAKEN MONDAY NOON.

Only Two Employes Were in the Bank, and It Is Supposed that While They Were Occupied the Thief Slipped Into the Vault.

The daring theft of $22,765 from the vault of the First National Bank of Plainfield is today made public by the directors of that institution. It is characteristic of the integrity of the bank management that it takes the public into its confidence and openly acknowledges a loss which might easily have been kept a secret among the bank officials. The loss will in no way affect the stability of the bank, and the building improvements will proceed as planned.

The statement of the bank officials as furnished to The Press is as follows:

The Board of Directors of the First National Bank of Plainfield desire to make known to their stockholders and patrons that on Monday, April 22, 1895, between the hours of 12 o'clock and one o'clock, noon, the bank was entered by thieves, and the sum of $22,765 in cash was stolen. The theft was not discovered until 6 p. m., when the cash was being counted.

The next morning, at the regular meeting of the Board, on their being informed of the loss, they passed the following resolution:

Whereas, It has come to the knowledge of this Board that on the 22d day of April, 1895, between the hours of 12 o'clock and one o'clock noon, the vault of the bank was entered by a sneak thief, and the sum of $22,765 abstracted therefrom; therefore be it

Resolved, That the cashier be authorized to charge off the said sum of $22,765, for the time being, from the account of profit and loss.

The loss will not in any way interfere with the regular business of the Bank or affect the payment of its future dividends.

Signed, CHAS. FORMAN, President,
J. WESLEY JOHNSON, Director,
F. S. RUNYON, Cashier,
WM. M. STILLMAN, Director.

Cashier Frank S. Runyon told a Daily Press reporter that at noon Monday, the hour when the robbery is thought to have occurred, only two members of the bank staff were on duty. D. N. Runyon was busy at the cashier's window in front. Adelbert Vail was at one of the desks along the side of the passage which leads to the directors room at the rear. A stranger came in and held up a sheet of paper in front of Mr. Vail at the little grated wicket in the scratched-glass partition. On the paper was a list of memoranda of promissory notes in which the man said he was interested. Mr. Vail said he knew nothing about the notes, but the stranger kept him in conversation some minutes and then went out.

It is held by the bank officials that while Messrs. Runyon and Vail were busy the thief must have passed into the directors room and thence into the vault, or else have entered the vault by way of the rear hallway door, which, like the other doors, was unlocked.

Two packages of money were taken. One was of bills ranging from $1 to $1,000; and the other was of mutilated bills, of which the bank sends away about $4,000 each week for redemption.

As a rule, three men are on duty during the noon hour. Fred Haines generally waits till Albert Steiner returns from dinner, before he goes out. On Monday, however, Haines went before Steiner got back.

Since the robbery, it is remembered that for weeks past questions have been asked by strangers who were evidently familiarizing themselves with the local situation. On Monday, a short time before the supposed hour of the robbery, Fred Haines was called out to a wagon in front of the bank by a stranger who wore glasses and a black patch over his eye, and who said he wanted to see him about some business in Scotch Plains and would come again.

Bank Examiner Stone was present with the Board of Directors at their meeting concerning the matter, and on his advice Messrs. J. W. Johnson and Wm. M. Stillman reported the theft to New York detectives yesterday. The detectives said the game was an old one, and that the work was evidently performed by professionals of the highest rank. They gave no hope of ever recovering the money.

Cashier Runyon took the matter very much to heart, as during his 28 years connection with the bank it is the first time such an affair has occurred. The public will commend the bank's straightforward action in the unfortunate affair.

The capital stock of the bank is $200,000, and the surplus $50,000. The undivided profits March 11 were $57,993.60.

It is to Plainfield's credit that she has an institution which can suffer such a severe loss and not be in any way affected by it. The First National Bank is too stanch and solid, and is too firmly established in popular confidence, to be at all embarrassed by the loss it has incurred.

THE RUSSIAN HONEYMOON.

Plainfield Amateurs Will Distinguish Themselves in This Performance.

The following circular, which explains itself, has today been sent out by the managers of the forthcoming Relief Fund benefit:

PLAINFIELD, April 24, 1895.

The Lady Managers of the Plainfield Relief Association beg to pronounce the production of the three-act comedy, "A Russian Honeymoon," to be given by Plainfield amateurs, in Music Hall, Thursday evening, May 9, in aid of the Relief Fund.

The cast will include many of the ladies and gentlemen who have contributed to the great success of the former plays in Plainfield, besides several who will make their debut on this occasion.

The parts of peasants, soldiers, etc., will be filled by well-trained singers, insuring admirable choruses, which, with the Lyceum Theatre Orchestra, will form a special feature of this performance.

No effort will be spared on the part of the management in making the production correct in all details of stage setting, costuming and accessories.

The seats will all be reserved and the prices will be as follows: Orchestra chairs, $1.50; orchestra circle, first two rows, $1.50; orchestra circle, other rows, $1; balcony, first two rows, $1.50; balcony, other rows, $1; boxes holding 6, $12.

Mail orders accompanied by check will be filled on and after Monday, April 29, in the order of their arrival, until Monday afternoon, May 6, at 2:30, at which time the remaining tickets will be placed on public sale at the box office at Music Hall. To prevent the possibilities of speculation, not more than 10 tickets will be sold to any individual.

Address all orders and inquiries, and make all checks payable to the business manager of the play.

CONSTANTINE P. RALLI,
Lock Box 644, Plainfield, N. J.

The Management has endeavored to have the purchase of tickets attended with as little trouble as possible and believes that the above method will prove convenient and satisfactory to every one. Orders will be filled and tickets mailed strictly in the order in which the applications are received and the best seats remaining will be given in all cases. The extremely small number of poor seats in Music Hall warrants the management in promising satisfactory tickets to all those who send in their applications at an early date.

It is hoped that everyone whether in receipt of a circular or not will avail himself of the opportunity to subscribe, as those who wait for the public sale may be disappointed.

THE TRAMP CONVENTION.

Borough Boys Enjoy Themselves Impersonating Knights of the Road.

The tramp convention of a number of borough boys last night afforded lots of fun for the impromptu wandering Willies. The invitations, written on brown paper, stated that the novel gathering would be held "in the caboose of Dusty Dick, sidetracked for the occasion". Twelve delegates responded to the call and a variegated lot of ragmuffins they were.

At the opening the delegates displayed considerable frolic, much to the dismay of the horse in the stall below. Essays were delivered in the latest slang on such subjects as "Tramps", "Clothes", "Soap and Water", "Tin Cans", and "De Growler". The meeting place was decorated with such choice mottoes as "All is not pie that's crust", "He who economizes will get riches; save your old chews for your pipe", etc.

The convention was closed with a banquet, consisting of baked beans, sandwiches, milk, coffee and pie.

"Uncle Thomas" at Rest.

Chief Engineer Doane, his son Thaddeus, Mrs. S. P. Craig, A. L. Force, and daughter Miss Lillian Force, attended from Plainfield yesterday the funeral of "Uncle Thomas" Bagot at his late home, 119 Schermerhorn street, Brooklyn.

The body looked natural and peaceful. The floral tributes were beautiful, and included palms, calla lilies, a large wreath of English violets and English ivy, and a magnificent representation of the gates ajar, with "At Rest" on the footpath.

The body was laid to rest beside decedent's late wife, in Greenwood.

A Popular Singer.

The very large audience that was present at the First Baptist Church last Sunday evening to hear Lennox Barnes sing were so delighted that they are very anxious that his uncle, R. T. Barnes, bring him to Plainfield again soon. Lennox Barnes is the soloist at the Church of All Angels, New York, and his work is of a very high standard. He expects to come to Plainfield the latter part of June or first of July and it is expected that music-loving people will have an opportunity of hearing this wonderful singer.

TOO MUCH REBEL AID

Secretary Gresham Expecting a Protest from Spain.

Minister Muruaga Got Tired of Complaining and Desisted Out of Discouragement—Conflict of Authority Aided Filibusters' Plans for Shipping Arms.

Washington, April 24.—Secretary Gresham will not be surprised should the Spanish premier, Mr. Canovas, call his attention to alleged manifestations of Cuban sympathizers in this country, as stated in a Madrid dispatch. There has hardly been a week since the insurrection began in the island that Mr. Muruaga, the late Spanish minister to the United States, did not, direct Secretary Gresham's attention to what he and the Spanish government considered violations by the United States of the neutrality act, in permitting the shipment of arms and men from this country to aid the Cuban revolutionists.

Muruaga Became Discouraged.

Mr. Muruaga made these representations so repeatedly and so emphatically—he was kept fully advised by the Spanish consuls in the United States of the movements of the Cuban sympathizers—that he at last desisted out of pure discouragement, finding in every case that the Spanish government's understanding of United States law and United States obligations was not shared by United States officials.

Vigilance Went For Naught.

Mr. Muruaga's complaint, privately, was that when Secretary Gresham brought these matters to the attention of the federal officers at the location where the arms were stored, or where the men were to be shipped, a conflict of authority would arise with the state officials. Meanwhile the arms would be spirited away or the plans of the filibusters changed so that the vigilance of the Spanish government went for naught.

Not a Contest with Cuba.

The right which the United States have always claimed to sell munitions of war where they pleased, was very discouraging to Mr. Muruaga, who regarded it as useless to continue his protests. He did so, however, but he left Washington a week ago declaring that the struggle in Cuba was not a contest between Spain and her rebellious subjects, but between Spain and the United States.

Will Protest Strongly.

It is not doubted that Mr. Dupuy de Lome, the new Spanish minister to the United States, who will arrive from Havana this week, has been requested to protest strongly against any aid or comfort being given, at least openly in this country, to the Cuban rebels.

Lord Sholto has been here for several months and has gained the reputation of being a sport. Yesterday he procured a license to marry a concert hall waitress, but before he could arrange the marriage, he was arrested on the charge of insanity. Lord Douglas is in the county jail, boiling with rage at the friends who prevented his nuptials. He met the waitress some months ago, shortly after he came here to manage a ranch belonging to his mother, the Marchioness of Queensberry, and at once became infatuated with her. He is perfectly sane, of course, and will soon secure his release, for which purpose he has engaged counsel. Monday night Lord Douglas was swindled out of $600 by a crowd of tinhorn gamblers.

Yesterday Borden's friends made good the defalcation, but it is stated that notwithstanding this fact he will be prosecuted. Borden is a bachelor, about 40 years of age, and has been treasurer of the Metacomet and Annawan mills for many years.

FOR A GREAT COLONY

Forty Thousand People To Settle in Georgia.

Perfecting Plans To Transport Household Goods and Stock of Members of Indiana Soldiers' Colony—Deal Closed for 100,000 Acres of Land.

Atlanta, Ga., April 24.—Ex-Governor Northen in an interview stated that he is now beginning correspondence to arrange details for the transportation of the household goods and stock belonging to the members of the Indiana soldier colony that he has recently located in this state. Governor Northen has been in personal conference with some railroad officials and in correspondence with others, looking to the best arrangements for the transportation of these people.

Largest Ever Organized.

The deal has been finally closed for the purchase of one hundred thousand acres of land for settlement and the settlers are now only waiting for the title papers to begin the survey of the lands. These papers will soon be perfected, the governor says, and then the work will begin. The colony is the largest ever organized in this country. It consists of more than ten thousand families and will bring into this state upwards of forty thousand persons.

Result of Years of Thought.

One may appreciate its size when one understands that this number of persons about equal to a city of the population of Macon or Augusta, and to three of our average counties. This organization is the creation of P. H. Fitzgerald, editor of the American Tribune of Indianapolis. Its plan is the result of years of thought and has been quietly worked out to a successful and marvelous issue.

Plan of the Colony.

Briefly stated, this plan is to form a mutual colony in which every share participates in the affairs of the community and has a proportionate interest in all profits. No one can hold more than ten shares of stock, the shares being $10 each. The holder of one share is entitled to make a location of land for his house, and all land taken must be for the purpose of living thereon.

For a City.

At the centre of the trace of land selected for the settlement of the colony 1,200 acres will be laid off into streets for a city, the remainder of the land to be divided into gardens. Every other lot and farm will be reserved for the general profit expected in the sale of land after improvements will have enhanced its value. These lands will be divided out by allotment.

No Outlay for the Land.

The colonists get their holdings at original cost of the land. They are charged with the price of their holdings, and it is expected that the profits will clear off the indebtedness within six years. There will be, therefore, no outlay by the colonist for the land he holds.

Other Colonies of Less Size.

Governor Northern has in hand other colonies of less size. One having an option on 15,000 acres of land in lower middle Georgia. Arrangements for settlement by this colony will soon be perfected. Governor Northern says: "The inquiries, as well as the actual settlements made in this state, indicate a large increase of population."

LITTLE FALLS, MINN., May 11, 1894.

"I am suffering, and need your aid. I have terrible pains in both sides of my womb, extending down the front of my limbs and lower part of my back, attended by backache and pains in the back of the neck and ears.

The doctors have given me opiates to quiet the pain. I have a very high fever nearly all the time. I am nervous, and cannot stand. My doctor says I must keep in bed. Now I place myself under your care. I am only twenty-one years old, and too young to suffer so much." — MRS. CHAS. PARKER.

The above letter was received by Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., May 15, 1894, which received a prompt reply.

The following letter reached Mrs. Pinkham about five months later. Note the result.

LITTLE FALLS, MINN., Sept. 21, 1894.

Pinkham's* treatment and Vegetable Compound have entirely cured me of all the pains and suffering I was enduring when I wrote you last May. I followed your advice to the letter, and the result is simply wonderful. May Heaven bless you and the good work you are doing for your sex!" — MRS. CHAS. PARKER.

All the druggists in town say there is a tremendous demand for Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound; and it is doing lots of good among the women.

If you are sick and in trouble write to Mrs. Pinkham. Relief awaits you.

A GHASTLY DISEASE.

Different Doctors Give It Different Names.

The Result Always the Same.—Speedy Death.—Until Recently, Considered Hopeless.—Now, New Methods. Salvation.

Nothing is more alarming than diseases of an ulcerous nature. A continual gnawing away of life-generating tissue, until a vital spot is reached, an artery is severed, or from sheer weakness death ensues.

Especially in Gastritis—ulcers of the stomach—is terrible suffering experienced. The symptoms, though not at first alarming (seemingly a slight attack of indigestion), gradually become worse, so that no nourishment can be retained on the stomach, and unless the trouble-causing ulcer produces death by perforation, the patient

Dies of Starvation.

In Consumption, where the ulcers attack the lungs, the termination is very similar, as it is, in fact, in any of the wasting diseases to which are given various names, according to the organs affected.

By the methods of physicians of to-day thousands of lives are being saved in cases that a few years ago were considered hopeless. The first step now taken to effect a cure is to make new blood and tissue, give the patient strength, and keep him "on the gain" by administering Bovinine.

Bovinine is not a medicine, but a greatly concentrated extract of the most vital elements of lean raw beef. The life-maintaining qualities of this wonderful preparation are simply marvellous. Dr. A. M. Cook, of New Castle, Pa., states that he maintained life in his wife, while suffering from gastric ulcers, for three weeks without giving her anything through the mouth, injecting Bovinine instead.

With such results as this, it is not to be wondered at that Bovinine is indorsed by physicians everywhere, and has become recognized as the greatest factor in saving life, hastening recovery from sickness, and warding off disease, ever given to man.

MISS HALL'S BETRAYER

A Reverend Jonathan Bell Located in England.

Possibly the Man Whom the Detroit Police Are After—Was in Michigan About the Time of the Girl's Death. Has a Good Reputation at Home and Preached Last Night.

London, April 24.—The Scotland Yard detectives claim to have received no information regarding the case of Miss Emily Hall, who is said to have been betrayed by an Englishman named Bell and sent to Detroit, Mich., where she died in a hospital. The Rev. Jonathan Bell, a primitive Methodist clergyman, lives at Primrose villa, Blackheath, Rowley, in Staffordshire. This address resembles strikingly the one given by Miss Hall's betrayer in his letters, which were dated "Primrose villa, Station road, Blackheath, via Dudley." Bell has been in the ministry twenty years. He is regarded in his circuits as a good pastor, with an especially strong hold upon the young, but a rather indifferent preacher.

Was in Michigan at the Time.

Bell was in Michigan at the time when, according to the Detroit police, Emily Hall's betrayer arranged for her reception at the hospital. His voice failed last summer owing to an affection of the throat, and he applied to the trustees for a three months' vacation. The trustees passed resolutions of sympathy and granted his request. Late in September Bell started for America. He told the trustees and his friends that he was going to St. Clair, Mich., to pass a few weeks with his brother-in-law. He remained in America until the middle of February, when he returned, apparently much improved in health.

Preached Last Night in Langley.

Bell is married and has six children, the eldest of them 14 years old. He is of a lively disposition and has taken a conspicuous part in local affairs. He preached in Langley last evening. No rumor has reached his flock that the Detroit police are inquiring after an Englishman of his name and profession to clear the mystery of Emily Hall's betrayal and death.

BIG STRIKE AT NEWCASTLE.

One Thousand Furnace Men Out for an Advance of Wages.

Newcastle, Pa., April 24.—One thousand workmen employed at the Red Jacket, Rosena, Raney & Berger and Etna furnaces struck yesterday for an advance in wages, and as a result, every furnace in New Castle is idle to-day. The men asked that the old wages of 1892 be paid. The men refused to bank down the furnaces and the managers say if they do not do so by to-morrow new men will be employed. The strike, if it continues, will effect every industry in the city.

MANY PERSONS DROWNED.

St. Petersburg, April 24.—The Dniester river has overflowed the districts of Kieff and Tchernigoff. Four hundred houses have been destroyed, many persons have been drowned, and an enormous amount of property has been destroyed.

Comment on Huntington's Arrest.

London, April 24.—The Financial News will say to-day: "The arrest of Collis P. Huntington in New York yesterday for violating the inter-state law by issuing a railroad pass is a most gratuitous and silly proceeding, though it looks melodramatically effective to attack so important a personage. The incident is an example of the ludicrous development of anti-corporation sentiment in the United States."

Bank Cashier Goes Wrong.

Charlotte, N. C., April 24.—Cashier J. R. Holland, of the Merchants and Farmers National bank of Charlotte, is a defaulter to the amount of $60,000 or more. Bank Examiner Miller discovered the defalcation through a shrewd move. No man in Charlotte has been held in higher regard or been more fully trusted than Mr. Holland. He has not yet been placed under arrest.

SUFFERED FROM CONVULSIONS.

Mrs. Parnell Began To Sink Rapidly Early Last Evening.

Bordentown, N. J., April 24.—Mrs. Parnell's condition became so serious last evening that Dr. Shippe sent a telegram to Prof. Thomas G. Martin, surgeon of the Pennsylvania hospital, Philadelphia, asking him to come on at once. Professor Martin soon arrrived and had a consultation with Dr. Shippe. They came to the conclusion that there was a clot of blood on the brain which caused local irritation. The patient, the physicians then said, was too old to undergo an operation. She was suffering from convulsions almost every ten minutes. They predicted that coma would follow and that death must be expected at any moment. Dr. Shippe at once wired Frederick Tudor, of Boston, Mrs. Parnell's cousin and her nearest relative in this country, of the patient's condition. A late bulletin announced that the physicians did not expect their patient to live until daylight this morning.

ECKELS DECLINES A GOOD JOB.

Offered the Financial Editorship of a Chicago Paper at a Big Salary.

Washington, April 24.—H. H. Kohlsaat, the new owner of the Chicago Times-Herald, offered Mr. Eckels, the comptroller of the currency, a large salary, said to be nearly $10,000 a year, to go to Chicago and become the financial editor of that paper. In view of the importance of financial questions in business circles and politics, Mr. Eckels saw in this editorship an opportunity to wield a great influence in the west, and was at first much inclined to accept Mr. Kohlsaat's generous offer. On consultation, however, with other members of the administration, he deemed it his duty to remain in his present office until the expiration of Mr. Cleveland's term and wired his declination.

ROBBED MANY HOUSES.

An Italian Burglar Arrested at Long Branch—$5,000 Worth of Plunder.

Among the places recently robbed were the cottages of Ashley Stout, of Oakhurst; H. H. Emmons, Frank Taylor, E. Tucker West, Townley & Co., the Westervelt cottage, and McCarthy's hotel, of this place. The burglar is imprisoned in the town hall. A deep hole was found in Cavaliere's garden, where had buried some of his plunder, while the cellar of the house was packed with stolen goods. Many people from other towns where robberies were committed are arriving here and identifying their goods. The plunder found is worth about $5,000.

BUCHANAN IS HAPPY

The Short Respite Buoys Up His Hopes.

He Will Make Renewed Efforts for His Life—Does Not Know That To-Day Was the Date Fixed for His Electrocution—Respited To Give Him Time To Prepare for Death.

Sing Sing, N. Y., April 24.—Dr. Robert W. Buchanan is a happy man to-day owing to the action of the governor in respiting him for one week, until May 1. He has sent several telegrams to his lawyers and friends in New York. He will make a renewed effort for his life. He wrote a long letter to the governor last night. Its purport could not be learned. Mrs. Buchanan arrived from Albany on the 6:30 train last night, accompanied by Mrs. Coleman and Lawyer Roche. They drove to the prison and had a long and interesting interview with the condemned man, after which the party left by the 8:23 o'clock train for New York. Mrs. Buchanan seemed in very good spirits after her visit to her husband. The official papers from the governor were received at the prison by special messenger.

Warden Sage Somewhat Relieved.

All the preparations for the execution had been made and it needed only the placing of the man in the chair and the turning of the switch to complete the unwelcome duty imposed upon Warden Sage, when the telephone bell in the warden's office rang sharply. The warden happened to be there at the time and when he took hold of the receiver he learned that Ashley W. Cole, Governor Morton's privaty secretary, had a message for him. The message was brief. The private secretary informed the warden that Governor Morton had granted Dr. Buchanan a respite of one week. Now, if appearances go for anything, Warden Sage was not so easy over the prospect of putting Buchanan to death to-day and it is not surprising then, that when he got the message from Albany his face cleared somewhat. He at once informed Buchanan.

Believed He Was To Die Thursday.

The condemned man had all along thought—thinks at this moment, in fact—that he was to have met the death penalty to-morrow instead of to-day. Warden Sage, when asked how it was that Buchanan was under the impression that he was to die a day later than the time set for the execution, explained that Buchanan had somehow got the impression, he did not know how. But he had not taken any pains to remove the impression. Buchanan is probably in error now of when the execution will take place.

Lawyer Gibbons' Plans.

New York, April 24.—Lawyer Gibbons, who is conducting the fight for Buchanan, said, when asked what he proposed to do next, that he would make application to the supreme court of the state of New York for a writ of habeas corpus, until the evidence in the case could be reviewed. If this motion is denied, a second application will be made to the United States supreme court for the same purpose. The lawyer does not anticipate that the court will grant the motion, but will make the application as a stay, in order that Dr. Sheele, a chemist who testified in behalf of the defense during the trial, may have time to present the matter to the New York Medical society.

Why the Respite Was Granted.

Albany, April 24.—Governor Morton's action in granting a respite of one week to Dr. Buchanan was only to give him time to prepare for death, as Mrs. Buchanan told the governor that her husband had been buoyed up by false hopes and had not prepared for his doom.

Royal Arcanum at Syracuse.

Syracuse, N. Y., April 24.—The seventeenth annual session of the grand council of the Royal Arcanum is being held at Freeman's hall. To-day the visitors are being shown around the city, and will attend a musical recital at Crouse college. The convention closes to-night.

Y.; Christian Cititenship union, Newark, N. J.; Good Government club, Paterson, N. J., and Municipal club of Rochester.

A Promise Long Kept.

A story worth telling about the late Congressman Vaux, of Philadelphia, and one which shows his character, is that while a bon vivant and without the slightest prejudice against the stage, he had never been to a theater or to the opera in his life, and he acknowledged that it caused him many a pang to lose their attractions. When a very small boy, he begged his father to take him to see a play that all his boy friends had seen, but his father, while a Quaker of liberal views, did not for some reason approve of that particular play as an entertainment for the boy and forbade his going, at the same time making him promise that he would never go to the theatre or opera house until the paternal permission was granted.

Little Richard promised, and his father a very short time afterward was stricken with a fatal illness, and through all Mr. Vaux's life he kept his promise.

An Easy Way to Avoid Bother.

The man who advertises has to buy more goods and hire more help than the man who doesn't advertise. It is a nuisance to be put to the expense of buying and hiring. Don't advertise and you won't have to do business.—Harrisburg Patriot.

Not an Unmixed Blessing.

The shutting out of skilled and intelligent labor is a blunder. The anti-contract labor law is valuable when it keeps out the padrone and low standard labor systems, but when it forbids the founding of a new American industry it works uneconomic results.—Lewiston Journal.

Tramp—You surprise me, mum. I'd hardly have suspected a lady in this out of the way place would be so familiar with Wall street as to know a man on the wrong side of the market when she sees him.—New York Weekly.

The late Chief Gall was the power behind the throne of the Indian prophet Sitting Bull. His nature was savage and suspicious, but he was capable of genuine friendship. In person he was short and thick set, with a keen eye and determined visage.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. A CAT ON AN ABANDONED BARK.

Men of the Potomac Who Rescued It Say It Killed and Ate Flying Fish.

A cat that needed all of its nine lives to enable it to pull through days of abandonment was landed at New York recently. It was brought in by the tank steamer Potomac, after spending twenty-one days in solitude on the abandoned Norwegian bark Birgette.

The Potomac was three days out from the Thames when the lookout reported a strange craft on the weather bow. The Potomac ran alongside of her and found the remains of the Norwegian ensign flying from her gaff. Her foretopmast, bowsprit and rudder were gone. Her deck was awash and from the small portions of the mast that were standing her sails had been blown to ribbons.

The Potomac's whistle blew a piercing blast. It was blowing great guns and there was no response from the Birgette.

The Potomac ran to the leeward of the bark, and first officer Dogbein, with four men, put off to her. They boarded her with difficulty and not finding any indications of life on board were about to put back to their vessel when officer Dogbein, casting his eye aloft, discovered an emaciated looking cat peering over the edge of the crow's nest. He looked about for means of reaching the cat, but as there was no rigging standing and no one cared to climb the mast he was about to leave the cat to her fate when a few gently whispered meows smote upon his ear and awakened memories of home. He decided to have the cat or never again board the Potomac. He called for volunteers to save its life.

One of the sailors, who had spent some years on a ranch, suggested that he be allowed to lasso the cat. But Dogbein objected to that method, saying that if the cat were not choked it would surely be killed when it struck the deck. Another of the men said that he would throw a line over the gaff and allow them to draw him up to the cat. This was done, but the cat refused to be taken down in that way and cinded her would be rescuer, who returned to the deck with a wondrous tale.

He said that the cat was surrounded with bones from fish that she had eaten, and then the question arose as to how she had obtained fish up there. As they talked they watched the cat and saw it wave its tail frantically. A bright object shot through the air, the cat struck at it with its paw and it dropped to the deck. Officer Dogbein picked it up and found that it was a flying fish.

The officer and men were simply amazed at what they had seen and determined at all hazards to get the cat. The line was thrown over the gaff again and it is declared that the cat jumped upon it and wrapped the end about the gaff, that it then jumped back to its perch, took the remains of a flying fish in its mouth, sprang upon the gaff, felt of the line to see that it was secure and slowly descended to the deck.

It looked the men over and, still holding the fish, went to the man who had thrown the line, rubbed against his legs and purred its thanks. It was a poor looking specimen of a cat, but it was taken on board the Potomac and brought to New York. The fish that the cat had in its mouth was shown in corroboration of the story.

Whether the story is true or not, the cat and the fish are both in evidence.

The bark was abandoned on February 21, the crew being taken off by the steamship Snowflake and landed at Philadelphia on March 3. The cat was taken off March 12, so that it must have lived on flying fish for twenty-one days. In an effort to discover what it did for water during all those days of trial the reporter was sent to the man who was drawn up to the gaff.

He solemnly declared that he saw a tin pannikin lashed to the mast and stated his belief to be that the cat had placed it there to catch rainwater. There are times when even a marine reporter will show surprise at what he hears, and this was one of them. The seaman apologized for not having the pannikin to show to confirm his statement.

Capt. Leitch of the Potomac declares that the cat has been entered on the ship's articles as one of the crew and nothing can get it from his possession.

Boston's Tribute to Stephenson.

The death of Robert Louis Stevenson was a sad blow to Boston. Stevenson had become the literary fad and Boston had just begun to lay Browning aside and take him up. Listen to the sad plaint of one of the Hub's sweet singers—Louise Chandler Moulton—on the death of the novelist:

Why does my heart ache so?—
I've never seen you—
Yet, now you're gone, I know
What to me mean you.
Now you have sped afar,
Ere we resign you,
Down from some distant star
Look, while we twine you
Love wreaths that shall not die,
Meet for your wearing—
Shout praise to scale the sky,
Where you are faring.

The Southern Negro.

The Southern negro is better off at home than he can possibly be anywhere else in the world. The conditions of his life are easy, the climate is genial and grateful, his opportunity for acquiring independence greater than he can hope to acquire elsewhere. Whatever colored politicians and agitators and professional Afro-Americans may say to the contrary, the fact remains that the Southern negro lives on excellent terms with his neighbors.—Washington Post.

Ups and Downs.

Popzam—Yes, I was told so; but, by the way what is he doing now?—Roxbury Gazette.

Oldest Inhabitants.

First Joke—You're so old you get printed on the theater programmes.

Second Joke—Well, I'm not old enough to be sprung on the stage like you.—Philadelphia Record.

At the Theater.

"Did you observe that tenor who sings so admirably? He is as deaf as a post."

"If he is deaf, pray how does he know when he has done singing?"

"The conductor gives him a sign."—El Diluvio.

Ralph Waldo Emerson, in middle life and old age, had a face of peculiar benignity. In preparing his essays his manuscripts, written in a hand like copper plate, was quite free from interlineation; but he was very rough on proof sheets.

Borough Sidewalk Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the ordinance of the Borough of North Plainfield requires that flagging sidewalks be laid, and prohibits the laying of new board walks or repairing of old board walks.

An impression seems to exist that old board walks may be repaired without violation of the ordinance.

This is not the fact. In every case where any repair of a board walk is necessary stone must be used.

Public notice of this fact is now again given so that no one need feel aggrieved if they are required to replace a newly laid or repaired board walk with stone.

BULLFIGHT IN SPAIN.

MRS. BURTON HARRISON DESCRIBES AN EASTER-DAY SCENE.

It Was Hideous, Unforgiveable, Unforgetable. The Women Hide Their Eyes During the Bloodiest Portions of the Carnage.

The scene was an extraordinary realization of the old classic picture dreamed of by every scholar of Roman history—the wide ellipse, the empty arena, the row upon row of expectant faces, the blue sky above.

And at last the thrilling moment had arrived when, the chief municipal officer having taking his seat where the king sits when there is one, the doors opposite him opened. The procession came into the ring. It was led by a battalion of soldiers preceded by a band of music. Following, came the picadores, mounted spearmen, who wore broad felt hats and leather jackets and trousers, their legs—with a precaution handed down from classic times—being bandaged over iron greaves; their spears, sixteen feet in length, wrapped in tow till but an inch of the point was left visible!

The chulos next. These were the light skirmishers of the ring, youngsters in training for higher feats. Glittering with gold and colors, their mission was to fly everywhere at once to draw off the bull from an endangered toreador. Trailing their gay cloaks, or flaunting them before the bull's horns, or making springs of marvelous agility into the air, they were the most picturesque adjunct of the show.

After the chulos walked the darlings of the populace—the three espadas, or killers of the bull—whose appearance was the signal for shouts and cries of applause, encouragement, individual remark. The hitherto quiet audience took fire at sight of them! And lastly, El Tiro, the mule team, three abreast, covered with bells, embroidery and tassels, trailing behind them the iron hook to be used in dragging off the slain bulls and horses.

Dazzling in finery, they passed proudly around the ring and under the president's box stopped to salute. A trumpet sounded. The alguacil, a little policeman smothered beneath his hat and feathers and black velvet cloak, who brought up the procession and was a butt with the crowd, caught the key of the bull's pen, thrown down to him by the president. This was an official permission for the sport to begin. The procession went out again, leaving in the ring the picadores and a few chulos. There was a halt when every heart beat quick. The doors leading to the bull's quarters flew open. Another pause, more exciting than the first. A little jet black fellow with sharp horns, astonished rather than resentful, trotted from his dark cell into the ring, wondering why the sunshine was so bright!

Perhaps this desert of hot golden sand, with the palpitating multitude around it, made him long for his own green pasture, his own cool rivulet in Utrera where he was bred. But at once every instinct was merged in a fury of self-defence; he was set upon by the spear of a picador, spurring a wretched horse blindfolded to his fate.

Upon the first act of the national drama of Spain, as now seen at the headquarters of bull fighting, it were best to let fall a curtain thick and dark. It is hideous, unforgiveable, unforgetable. No Anglo-Saxon who loves the horse can look on without a fierce impulse of championship for helpless brutes, followed by one of shame for himself being there. The women present, including as a rule the better grade of Spaniards, hid their eyes behind fans, and sat in sick silence till the cries of the audience and the new sound of the trumpet announced the carnage at an end. The horrors they might have seen during the ten opening minutes of the fight were being dragged away by the jangling mule team, leaving blood tracks behind them. Men sprinkled fresh saud and the second act was called.

And, at last, play was finished; the bull, gashed, panting, desperate, had done his best to make a Sevillian holiday. His death trumpet was sounded. Paulina looked, as they urged her to do, at the introduction to the final act. The espada, the man of doom, walked into the ring, stopped under the president's box, and, holding his sword upright, dashed his three cornered plush cap upon the ground and swore the bull fighter's oath to do his duty or die.

Then, with magnificent aplomb, smiling amid the frantic applause of the audience, he advanced to meet his victim, his band of chulos keeping back that he might win glory single handed. Again and again he escaped death by a hair's breadth. Alone blade aloft, he tempted the now raging bull to charge, striving to get him in the right attitude to receive the death stroke.

There was an interval of strained silence in the multitude, broken now and then by a gasp of relief or a cry of disappointment. They were not going to waste themselves in expression, those Spaniards, while such good work as that was going on in the arena.

Face to face man and brute stood eyeing each other. It seemed impossible that the espada could get away. He was at the mercy of his foe. In vain the chulos rushed forward and tried to divert the bull. The bull's eyes were glazing, he was dying by inches, but he knew what he was about and meant to avenge himself. His horns were lowered; the crowd uttered a deep, long groan; they were about to lose their pride—their darling—when suddenly the espada's right arm made a quick movement; his true sword plunged to its hilt between the bull's shoulder and shoulder blade; the bull staggered, fell on his knees, rolled on his side—dead!

Misplaced Sympathy.

Young Girl (going through jail)—Poor, poor man. May I offer you these flowers.

Convict (from behind the bars)—You've made a mistake, miss. The feller that killed his wife and children is in the next cell. I'm yere for stealing a loaf of bread."—Truth.

The Reason of It.

THE STOLEN JEWELS.

Ten years ago the town of Woolford was thrown into commotion one fine morning by news of a skillfully planned burglary. It was the early part of November, and the newly elected mayor of Woolford had celebrated his accession to civic power by giving a grand ball at his private residence just outside the town. He was an exceedingly wealthy man, and his wife was the fortunate possessor of a very fine set of diamonds. It was popularly understood that these were worth at least £10,000 and popular opinion in this respect was not far wrong. On the morning after the ball, however, the mayoress discovered that her diamonds were missing. Instead of locking them up when she retired to rest she had carelessly left them lying on her dressing table. When she awoke the diamonds had disappeared.

As soon as I heard of the burglary I made a guess—mentally of course—at the burglar's name. It was Jimmy Timble. I felt confident of it. I knew of no local criminal accomplished enough to carry out so daring a theft except Jimmy. And Jimmy had just come home from Portland, where he had spent nearly six years in penal servitude. That was not his first period of incarceration, nor his second. Jimmy had been a thief from boyhood, and those who knew him felt persuaded that nothing would make him give up his career of crime. It was this belief, coupled with my knowledge of Jimmy's return to Woolford, that made me suspect him of taking the diamonds.

When Jimmy was not in prison he worked as a bricklayer's "paddy" and made his home at one of the big common lodging houses in a low part of the town. Two or three days after the diamond robbery I went one evening toward this house, intending to have an interview with Jimmy and hear what he had to say for himself. By good fortune I met him just outside the door and stopped him. He regarded me calmly and with perfect equanimity. He was at all times a curious little man—dwarfish in stature, very slightly deformed, and always full of a certain quaint assurance, mixed with a sly demeanor, which was amusing to everybody. My interview with Jimmy threw no light whatever on the mystery, as he pleaded ignorance of the whole affair. If Jimmy had got the diamonds he had done his work so thoroughly that a clue of any description was not yet discoverable. And it was just that want of a clue that persuaded me of Jimmy's guilt. I knew of no other man who could have done the work so thoroughly.

As no trace of the diamonds could be found, we thought it well to keep a watch on two or three suspicious characters in the town, with a view to discovering the whereabouts of the valuables. It seemed to us that the thief or thieves must have planted the jewels in some safe spot and waited until the agitation had blown over before removing them. Thus it came about that Jimmy Timble's movements were watched very jealously. His goings out and comings in were noted, and the eye of the law was constantly upon him. Whether Jimmy was aware of this or not, I do not know; but if he was he suddenly did a foolish thing—he allowed himself to be caught, one dusky February evening, in the very act of burglariously entering a dwelling house; and within an hour he was safely ensconced in the cells of the police court. There I found him next morning when I went my round. He looked at me with a half rueful, half comical expression of countenance.

"Back again, Jimmy," said I. "I thought you had turned over a new leaf."

"So did I, Mr. Burton," he answered. "But you fellows don't give us poor chaps a chance; you don't, indeed. Just because I wanted to look through the window of a house last night they run me in here. Too bad; now ain't it, Mr. Burton?"

"It'll be another five years' penal, will this, Jimmy," said I. "What a foolish man you are! Why don't you reform and live honestly?"

He smiled knowingly at me. "Why do birds fly?" said he. "'Cos they're used to it. It's natur'—that's what it is, Mr. Burton."

So Jimmy languished in the town jail for a few weeks, having been committed for trial. Then the Assizes came on at Woolford, and he was brought up to stand his very doubtful chance. His trial was little more than a formality, for Jimmy had been caught in the very act of inserting his pocket crowbar in the window ledge of the house. He was found guilty and sentenced to five years' penal servitude and a certain term of police supervision.

I went to have a word or two with Jimmy in the cells, as he waited there for removal to his next abiding place. His sentence did not seem to have disturbed his equanimity, and he smiled very placidly as I greeted him.

"Well, you've done it again, Jimmy," said I. "We shan't see any more of you for a while."

"You're right there, Mr. Burton," he answered. "And I sha'n't see any more of you, eh? I don't care—I can do five years on my head. But I'm sorry I sha'n't be able to see Jerry. He comes out next week."

"I believe he does."

"We were always very fond of each other, me and Jerry," said Jimmy Timble. "Very fond we was. We've worked things together many a time."

"You have, and given us a good deal of trouble with your efforts."

"I dare say," answered Jimmy, imperturbable as ever—"I dare say. But I say, Mr. Burton, you might do me a favor. I've always looked on you as a friend; and when a chap's got put away for five years he nat'rally looks to his friends, don't he?"

"I suppose he does, Jimmy. Well, what is it you want?"

"Why there's two or three things at the lodging house that I would like given to Jerry when he comes out. There's a knife, and a watch chain, and two or three other little articles—all come by honest, Mr. Burton. Oh, and there's a book, the 'Pilgrim's Progress'—a very interesting book is that. Will you tell the lodging house folks to 'liver them up to Jerry, Mr. Burton?"

"Very well, Jimmy. Perhaps I'd better take charge of them myself and give them to Jerry next time I see him. I shall be sure to come across him as soon as he comes out."

"I'd take it real kind if you would," said Jimmy; "and you might tell him to keep that 'Pilgrim's Progress,' 'cos I'll finish reading it when I've done this five years."

With that we parted, and Jimmy was presently whirled away in the "Black Maria" to the town jail. We were rid of his presence for four years at any rate. He was soon removed to Portland, and there, no doubt, made himself perfectly comfortable.

I forgot all about Jimmy's parting request until a week or two later. Then, finding myself one day in the neighborhood of the lodging house which had served as Jimmy's home, I went inside and asked the deputy to hand over the convict's possessions. He did so with an air of scorn, remarking that Jimmy's belongings were not worth twopence to anybody. I thought he was right when I subsequently turned over the contents of the bundle. There was nothing there of any consequence, and I wondered very much that Jimmy Timble should have been so particular about having his little properties handed over to his brother Jerry. The "Pilgrim's Progress" was the most incongruous object turned out of the blue handkerchief which held Jimmy Timble's belongings. I shook my head perplexedly as I stared at it. What was Jimmy Timble, thief, burglar, thrice convicted criminal, doing with the "Pilgrim's Progress?" And how was it that that particular work was the only book he possessed? And how did he come to possess it at all? I turned the leaves over carelessly and could see nothing unfamiliar about the book. I finally concluded that Jimmy Timble had picked it up somewhere and kept it out of curiosity, and then with that I tied it up again with the rest of his possessions.

The days passed by, but I saw nothing of Jerry Timble. He had left the county jail, but he did not present himself at his usual haunts in Woolford. I preserved the bundle for him and waited, knowing quite well that if he was in the town we should see him in the police office sooner or later. It was impossible for either Jimmy or Jerry Timble to keep his hands from picking and stealing. But time passed on and Jerry did not appear. I began to think that he had removed himself to some other town.

About nine months after Jimmy Timble had gone back to penal servitude, I chanced to go one day into a secondhand bookshop, the proprietor of which was an old acquaintance of mine. Somehow, our conversation drifted to the criminal classes and ere long the shopkeeper mentioned the name of Jimmy Timble.

"He was a queer customer, was Jimmy," said he. "He came in here one day last time he was out of prison and looked round him as if he wanted something. 'Now, sir,' says I, 'what can I find for you?' 'Give me an old book to read, mister,' answered Jimmie. 'We don't give books here,' says I, 'we sell 'em.' He said nothing to that; but after awhile he pulled out twopence. 'What can I have for that?' he asked. 'Here you are,' says I, 'a "Pilgrim's Progress," pictures and all, for twopence.' So he walked off with his book."

That explained Jimmy's possession of the "Pilgrim's Progress," then lying at my house. I went home and had my supper and then sat down to have a thorough examination of the book. I was sure that there was something about that book which it would repay anybody to discover and I was determined to solve the mystery. But though I went carefully through it page by page, once, twice and three times, I saw nothing. There was no writing, no hieroglyphic signals, nothing to attract attention. But at the fourth time of examination I made a discovery. Underneath the first "the" on the first page there was the plain mark of a pin prick, just as if the pin had been carelessly jabbed into the paper and quickly withdrawn. The mark was very faint, but it was there. I assured myself that the pin prick had not penetrated to the second page, and then I came to the conclusion that Jimmy Timble's "Pilgrim's Progress" concealed some private message from himself to his brother Jerry.

I began what proved a long and weary task. The next pin prick I found was under the letter "j" on page 8; the next under "e" on page 11; the next under "w" on page 12. Then came pricks under the letters "e," "l," "s," all on different pages, and thus I had spelled out two words, "the jewels." I took courage at that and went on. There was no doubt much to follow.

All that evening I worked away at my task. It was anything but easy. Sometimes the pin pricks were faint and hardly decipherable; sometimes there were several on one page; sometimes the spelling puzzled me; sometimes I seemed to lose the track altogether. But I persevered; and just as midnight struck I had solved the mystery and had written out Jimmy Timble's ingenious message to his brother Jerry:

"The jewels as I got from the mare's wife is berried underneath the lilic tree in old George Atkinson's garden n Lilywood road. Keep an eye on them and don't disterb them unless they are goin' to bild on the garden. If they bild dig them up and keep them safe till I come out agen your brother James."

So there was an explanation of the mystery, or rather of two mysteries. I had been right, after all—the burglary at the mayor's residence was the work of Jimmy Timble.

I lost no time next morning in interviewing Mr. George Atkinson and in persuading him to let me dig under his lilac tree. There, sure enough, I found the missing diamonds, carefully wrapped up and put away. Jimmy had hidden them until suspicion had quite blown over and he had felt free to resume possession of them. The attempted burglary had spoiled his plans.

I saw Jimmy when he returned from Portland four years later. He smiled knowingly as he met me.

"I reckon you think yourself a clever man, Mr. Inspector, don't yer?" said he. "But you'd have been made a nice cat's-paw of if only that fool of a Jerry had turned up in time. Wouldn't yer, now?"

I dare say Jimmy was right. But as events turned out fortune was wholly on my side in this case.—Chambers' Journal.

Hard On Forrest.

Forrest, the actor, once visited a lunatic asylum before producing "Lear," to study the insane. He watched one of the male patients for some time, during which the man kept saying:

"I wonder how long? I wonder how long?"

Finally Forrest interrupted him. "What is it you wonder so long?"

The man turned on him with a laugh. "I wonder how long a fool like you will stand here looking for something he can't see!"—The Amusing Journal.

END OF A CAMPAIGN

BY MATT CRIM.

(Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson and Bacheller.)

CHAPTER I.

When Mrs. Col. Waring sold her old home in Virginia and went to New York to live, she frankly confessed that it was for the sole purpose of giving her daughters the advantages of social life, and the opportunity to marry well.

Frankness seemed one of Mrs. Col. Waring's crowning charms. Her poverty, the beauty of her daughters, her motherly anxiety and ambition for their future, were all gracefully acknowledged; but discretion went hand in hand with this candor. The lady was shrewd enough to know perfectly well when and with whom to talk so freely. Her audiences were carefully selected. Men were apt to pity and admire her, but a few ill-natured women had declared her to be a deliberate and selfish schemer. However, Mrs. Col. Waring suffered little from these scurrilous attacks.

She was a small, slightly-built woman, with a thin face, queer gray eyes and dark hair tinged silvery on the temples. She dressed plainly and always very markedly as a widow, but wore some handsome rings on her slender hands. No one ever observed Mrs. Col. Waring without also observing the old-fashioned cluster diamond on her forefinger. It seemed to assist largely in the perfection of her plans. When occupied with some knotty problem she would turn and twist it around on her finger incessantly. As for the colonel, he had fought gallantly for the confederacy, and finally lost his life in its service. People who knew the family well had liked him rather better than his wife. He had been a handsome, robust man, as healthy in mind as in body, a truly candid soul without any pretense or make believe. The daughters inherited his beauty, and they might have resembled him more in spirit had he lived to train and influence them. But they knew the pinch of poverty and felt it all the more because their mother chafed under it so sorely. Her high estimate of money and position had its influence with them, and the two eldest sisters married according to her wishes. They had the opportunity, for the Warings were remotely connected with a moderately well-to-do and very aristocratic family—according to the New York standard of aristocracy—while Tom Waring, who had made and lost two or three fortunes on the stock exchange, rendered valuable service in bringing some of his moneyed friends to the house. So her sisters married, and then it was Barbara's turn.

For her, Mrs. Waring had made her most ambitious plans. She was undoubtedly more attractive than either of her sisters, although they were much handsomer. She was charming, but not eager to please, therefore men were anxious to please her, and then she possessed a decided "style," to which, she, as well as her mother, attached decided value. She listened to her mother's wordly counsel with a ready acceptance of its wisdom and a cool impartial appreciation of her gifts and what was due her family pride. It would be an exceptional man indeed who could win her. Her marriage should be a triumph before which all the Waring marriages would pale into utter insignificance. She desired money, the prestige of a fine old name, and a brilliant mind. She would neither marry a rich fool nor a poor genius. She read the history of famous and fascinating women, pored over accounts of the French salons and wished that she could have one of her own. Her lip curled with disdain at the thought of contenting herself with the frivolous pastimes of a mere society woman. It was her vaguely outlined plan to draw about her the highest and best in all the arts and professions, to become a patron of genius and be noted for her brilliant gatherings as well as the perfection of her gowns. Love had not even been considered. Indeed it rather pleased her to think that she couldn't love very deeply, that her head, her well poised, artistically dressed head, would always govern her.

"A little unwomanly," Tom Waring would say to himself when his thoughts wandered in her direction. "Not very deep, either, I fancy, but taking—immensely taking."

Waring was a stout, florid bachelor who had been through an endless number of love affairs and who still retained his chivalrous admiration for women. He had taken the pretty Waring girls under a semi-paternal wing and felt it his duty to administer many solemn warnings on worldly ambition. But as he invariably delivered those warnings after dining freely he only provoked laughter and affectionate raillery. Barbara exasperated him very much.

"A fellow might kill himself for you, and I don't believe you'd know enough to care a bawbee!" he exclaimed, one evening.

She leaned her head lazily against the back of her chair.

"Ah! well, perhaps not so bad as that," she said, nonchalantly. "But a man who would do such a decidedly imbecile thing is hardly worth pitying, don't you think so?"

"I wonder," said Waring, looking quizzically at her, "I wonder if you are not posing. It is your evident desire to appear very flinty, and you play your part well—very well. But I'm sorry. I wish girls would be more simple and natural."

His earnestness amused her.

"I think it would be very tedious to have to keep up a pose before you, Cousin Tom, one of my own family—tedious and unprofitable. Girls are natural, only they are not all angels, but human beings, like the rest of the world. If I can't fall madly in love or don't want to, what's the difference? I think the people in love are about the most wretched creatures I know, always swinging between heaven and hell."

"You've been well trained, Miss Waring. A fish would be warm-blooded compared to you."

Barbara refused to be piqued.

"Mamma is admirable, but I have a reason of my own which occasionally is able to assert itself."

"Your reason be hanged!" cried Waring, rising from his seat in a passion. "It doesn't seem to prevent you from accepting all the adoration that is offered you."

"You positively grow rude, Cousin Tom. Don't you think it would be wise for you to go home and sleep off your ill temper?"

"I beg your pardon, Barbara. I have to let myself out occasionally, you know. But what has reason to do with love—genuine true-hearted love, you know?"

Barbara's eyes glinted.

"I don't see why it shouldn't have a great deal to do with it, and I think if it did there'd be fewer unhappy people in the world—fewer divorces even. There is no reason whatever for people throwing common sense to the wind simply because they fall in love. For my part—"

"By jove! Barbara you are stunning, really. I'd like to possess a little of your coolness when stocks are going down and the market smashes. Your serenity is worth a fortune."

Barbara passed through three seasons and received a number of offers of marriage. They were all rejected, however. She had not yet found what she wanted.

"And you never will, my dear Barbara, depend upon it. You'll either marry some poor devil, or die an old maid," said the irrepressible Tom, who watched her social career with unabated interest.

Barbara involuntarily stole a glance at herself in a mirror.

"Oh, you are not losing your attractiveness, I must admit. You wear marvelously well." His voice sunk to a suggestion of tenderness. "You could be a matchless woman if you had a heart."

"A very necessary portion of one's anatomy, I should say. I hope I have one."

"A tireless machine to propel your blood, that is all—not capable of much feeling."

"It loves you," she said, with a sudden bewitchingly soft smile. That was one of the fascinating things about

"OH, COME, NOW, NONE OF YOUR ARTFUL COQUETRY."

Barbara—the little glimpses of womanliness occasionally peeping tantalizingly through her colorless languor.

"Oh, come, now, none of your artful coquetries on me!" he exclaimed, flushing and stroking his gray mustache.

"Then you must stop harking back to that old theme. We settled it long ago."

"No, we have not settled it. We never can as long as you refuse to—"

"To see through your eyes?"

"To see what you are missing. But I guess you are all right—some sides of you, at any rate. I believe you'd make a first-rate mother. Now, wouldn't you?"

She had relapsed into her usual indifference.

"I really never gave the matter a thought," she said, then suddenly broke through again and laughed a gay, delightful laugh. "How you do overflow with sentiment. You must have been in love a score of times."

"I have."

"And your heart? I suppose it is in a very fragmentary condition?"

"On the contrary, it has been enriched by every experience," he replied with dignity. "My first love affair occurred when I was only twelve years old. What an experience! What profound emotion thrilled my soul!"

He sighed deeply, throwing his head back and gazing retrospectively at the ceiling.

"And when did the last affair end?" Barbara inquired casually.

Waring came out of his sentimental reverie with a slightly disconcerted air.

"Oh—ah, it hasn't ended."

"Indeed!"

"Yes, she is the dearest little woman in the world."

"How interesting! Why don't you marry her?"

"She—ah, is already married. It is a purely platonic sentiment between us, I assure you, Barbara. She is neglected and I pity her. I shall never marry."

Just then Mrs. Waring's niece broke into the conversation. She had all the while been seated near the window.

"Tom, Tom, why do you talk such nonsense? Of course you will marry. There is a Divinity that shapes our ends."

"A peroxide of hydrogened one will probably shape his," Barbara remarked from the cabinet mantel where she was now standing rearranging her hair.

Waring dined downtown with some friends that evening, and then returned to his rooms to make some changes in his toilet before going on to the Lyceum where he had promised to meet Barbara and her mother. He had imbibed so freely of champagne that he was overflowing with joyousness.

"I am not drunk, but Jove, my head does feel peculiar," he muttered to himself. "That champagne must have been extra dry, sure enough."

At the last moment he discovered some letters on the table. He turned them over carelessly, while humming a popular air. A foreign postmark attracted his eye, and he opened that letter, pushing the others aside to be read at a more convenient time. It was from an old acquaintance traveling abroad.

"And now, Waring, I come to the real point of this discourse. My son is on his way to America. He has foolishly entangled himself in a love affair with a young widow over here, and I am anxious to break off the whole matter. He will call upon you in New York, and I beg you, for the sake of our friendship in the past, to look after him, you know all the best people. Introduce him to some charming girls and try, if possible, to make him forget his widow. Please do not let him know that I have prepared you for his visit. I am quite recovered from the most serious of my ailments. Ever your friend. JAMES NOEL."

For a moment Waring struggled with his befogged memory trying to place James Noel.

"Oh, yes; oh, yes," he said finally, "I know who it is now. James Noel went abroad with his family years ago, and his daughter married a prince or something of that kind. Why, of course, awfully sick man, Jim[illegible]oel. Didn't suppose he'd be alive a month after he left America. Why, I knew the Noels before the war—fine old family, and Jim made money till you couldn't rest. Perfect loads of it."

A FOREIGN POSTMARK ATTRACTED HIS EYE.

He mused over the letter and the responsibility thrust upon him for a moment. Then a brilliant idea struck him.

"I'll introduce him to Barbara—that's the thing, the very thing. If he's not not hopeless she'll cure him. Yes, I'll introduce him to Barbara."

He winked at himself in the mirror, and gathered up his hat and gloves. At the same instant a servant appeared at the door with a card.

Waring took it and gave vent to a prolonged whistle, but in a moment he remembered himself through the haze of his astonishment.

"Show the gentleman up, show him up," he said quickly. "Now I must be careful what I say; funny that he should call the very day I get the letter. Wonder if he looks like his father. I am very glad to see you, Mr. Noel," he exclaimed heartily as a blonde, good-natured looking young man entered the room. "Knew your father very well; I ought to say extremely well. I'm happy to welcome you to America; very happy indeed to welcome you to America."

"You are kind, Mr. Waring," said Noel. "I promised my father I would look you up if I ever came to New York."

"Delightful of him to remember his old friend"—hypocritically, and with his hand upon the letter in his pocket.

"He always spoke of you in the warmest tones, sir," said the young man, seriously. He did not appear an entirely spoiled or willful youth. He was older than Waring had expected, judging from his father's letter, and even through the simple candor of his manner one might have seen a suggestion of satisfactory reserve force and self-reliance. Waring insisted upon taking him to the theater, and learned during the drive that Noel had studied art abroad, and that he expected to set up a studio in New York. He did not speak of his family, and Waring tactfully refrained from making inquiries. He introduced the young man to his relatives and managed during the evening to whisper into Mrs. Col. Waring's ear some information about his aristocratic family, and his father's wealth, enlarging especially upon the princess. Mrs. Col. Waring absorbed all these details as a hungry fish does water after being out on dry land.

"He's very ambitious, too. Works, you know, for the love of it. Will suit Barbara to a T," Waring added, as she smiled blandly upon the young man.

But when he had slept off the effects of the dinner he had almost forgotten Noel's existence. Some mining investment called him away to the west and he left at a day's notice, merely writing a line of farewell to Mrs. Waring and her daughter.

HELPING HANDS.

Charming Concert and Sweetmeats Sale in Grace P. E. Sunday-School.

A thoroughly active organization is the Helping Hand Society of the Grace P. E. Church and they demonstrated this fact beyond any doubt yesterday afternoon and evening when a sale of candy, fancy and plain articles, and refreshments, was conducted in the Sunday-school building.

A concert was an additional pleasure in the evening.

During the afternoon the attendance was excellent and the sales were good.

In the evening a very choice programme of music was rendered by the choir of the church under the very able management of Mrs. Freeman. O'er the Waters, an opening chorus by the choir, was well received by the large and appreciative audience.

Kendal Mason and Willard Martin pleased all with a delightful duet, "Angels' Greeting".

Fletcher Hallock, who is always a favorite, was introduced and brought down the house with his banjo selections. Arthur Freeman accompanied him on the piano.

A vocal solo by Kendal Mason "Time to Rise" was exceedingly amusing and thoroughly enjoyed.

Frederick Pope gave a very excellent rendition of the "Volunteer Organist". His voice was pleasing and his singing appreciated.

Willard Martin sang a solo, "Sweet Spring is near", and his masterly efforts were heartily applauded.

A number that was a feature of the evening was the piano solo by Miss Marion Dumont. It was delightfully rendered in every detail and besides the very hearty applause she received a choice bouquet of flowers. She gave a charming selection as an encore.

Mr. Clark's tenor solo, "Past and Future", was exceedingly meritorious and very much appreciated.

A duet, "Evening Song", by Malcolm Barnes and Willard Martin, was admirably rendered and loudly applauded.

"Good Night" was the selection which Malcom Barnes sang, and his voice showed care and skill in training as did also the entire work of the choir.

Fletcher Hallock was again introduced and gave the audience two very fine selections, the last being an amusing vocal solo with banjo accompaniment.

The choir sang as a closing number "Where are you going".

Louis G. Timpson announced the numbers on the programme in his usual excellent manner.

The audience then adjourned to another room that had been artistically decorated in yellow and white, and there found a number of tables prettily arranged to receive guests.

Those presiding were:

Candy table—Miss Dryden, Miss Eagan, Miss Duffy, Miss Amy Dryden, Miss Mabel Smith.

Fancy table—Miss Dupee, Miss Bessie Morgan, Miss Lena Morgan, Miss Sprague.

Tea table—Mrs. Kleinecke, Mrs. Clay, Miss Pelletier, assisted by Miss Mary Anderson Beinhart, Miss Peterson, Miss VanBoekerck, Miss Carrie Bogert.

Utility table—Miss Dumont, Miss Lowrie.

Junior Auxiliary—Miss Bodman, Miss Boswell. They were also in charge of the fish pond.

Ice-cream—Miss Morgan.

Lemonade—Miss Crane, Miss Nettie Langdon.

The affair was arranged to purchase new robes for the choir boys and several other things needed, and the efforts of the society will no doubt be the means of a large realization in money to secure the desired articles, as the affair was eminently successful socially, financially, and in every detail.

DUNELLEN.

Mrs. James Craig is entertaining guests from Poughkeepsie.

Miss Edith Boice, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. C. D. Boice, Jr., has returned from her Clinton visit.

Miss May Gise spent yesterday enjoyably with friends in Plainfield.

Fred Read served a collation to his friends, in Taylor's Hotel, Tuesday night.

Chicken thieves have renewed their depredations in the borough.

The death of William G. VanDeventer of Dunellen occurred Tuesday after a long illness. He leaves a widow and two daughters. The funeral services will be held Friday morning at 10 from his late home in Dunellen.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

LIGHTNING LEGISLATION.

Plainfield's Common Council Had an Important Session Four Minutes Long.

It took the Common Council just four minutes to pass the tax ordinance last night and receive and refer two petitions. But in order to get a quorum it was necessary to send Janitor Mundy out for Councilman Frazee, who came in his store clothes. Besides the passing of the ordinance, which has been published by The Daily Press, these two petitions were received and referred: Frank Linke asking for a permit to build a bay window and an addition to the kitchen at 222 West Second street; C. B. Clifton asking for permit to erect a storm door in the building corner of Park avenue and West Fourth street.

THE NATION'S CAPITAL.

Personally-Conducted Tours to Washington, D. C., via Pennsylvania Railroad.

No true American should fail to see Washington, the Nation's Capital, and the series of three-day tours via the Pennsylvania Railroad, under their perfect, personally-conducted tourist system, offering an opportunity for a trip under the most favorable of circumstances.

But two more tours of this season's series remain—the next leaving New York and Philadelphia May 2; the last leaving those points May 23.

The rates, including accommodations at Washington's best hotels, are $13 50 from New York and $11 50 from Philadelphia; proportionate rates from other points.

Detailed itinerary will be sent on application to Tourist Agent, 1196 Broadway, New York, or Room 411, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

On the first of May we shall begin publication of a remarkable detective story from the pen of PARK BENJAMIN, the well known scientist and civil engineer. It is a tale of the present day, and we guarantee that anyone who begins it will read it to the end. For ingenuity of plot and deftness of literary treatment, this story is remarkable.

Don't fail to read how the great city of New York fell into the peril of sudden destruction, from which it was finally rescued after a series of decidedly interesting adventures.

"The Rivals" Coming.

The last of the Underhill series is announced for next Thursday evening in the Casino. Mr. Underhill has made a careful study of Sheridan's master-comedy "The Rivals". His first rendering of it was at Chautauqua, where he has been a general favorite for several seasons. The success of "The Rivals" was instantaneous. Friends and strangers were alike surprised and astonished at the dramatic power exhibited. All the scenes, incidents and characters described or mentioned were displayed as vividly by the single artist's power of delineation as though he had the assistance of many. Several prominent clergymen were present, all of whom evinced marked pleasure at the recital. Bishop Vincent said to Mr. Underhill afterwards that this was the first comedy ever read on the Chautauqua platform, and he went in prejudiced, but came away greatly rejoiced.

Decide as to Sewer Connections.

The residents along the streets on which the new sewers are being built, who are desirous of making connections, should decide immediately as to the point in front of their property where they want the connections made. This is necessary in order to facilitate the work of the supervising civil engineer, who precedes the workmen and stakes out the points where the Y pipes need to be placed. If the decision is not made by the property owner before the trenches are dug a vast amount of needless work is involved.

To Investigate Sewage Disposal.

Councilman Westphal makes the suggestion that an excursion be arranged to go to Farmingdale, Mass., to visit the sewer beds of that city. A number of councilmen have signified their willingness to go on such a trip, and no doubt a large number of citizens would take advantage of such an occasion to acquaint themselves with the latest development of the knotty problem which is perplexing this place.

Pretty Scenes at Grace M. E.

The entertainment in Grace M. E. Church this evening will consist of two tableaux. The first is to be Tennyson's "Dream of Fair Women", of two scenes, and the second is to be "Under the Mistletoe Bough", of seven scenes.

In the first the following will take part: Clara Steiner, May Schuck, May McDonald, Allie Loomis, Mamie Steiner, Carrie Tingley, Emma Stevens, Alice Carroll, Emma Smalley and Grace Carroll.

In the second the following will take part: Grace Carroll, Clara Steiner, May McDonald, Carrie Tingley, Frank Schuck, Ray Carroll, Louie Hummer and Dick Winckler.

Miss Anna Most is the chairman of the committee having charge of the tableaux John H. Carney will have charge of the calcium lights.

After the entertainment a tea and reception will follow.

Went to Sleep in the Hay.

James Murphy came to town yesterday. He said he came to work on the sewers. When he got here he did not go to work. And having no money to hire a bed for the night he was directed by some man to go into "Buck" Day's barn, corner of West Third street and Plainfield avenue. He followed the advice and crawled into the hay and went to sleep. But not before some one in the house had seen him enter the structure. Policeman Cooney was sent for and went to the barn and arrested the man. This morning, after stating the circumstances to Judge Coddington, sentence was suspended.

A Free Lunch, and a Baby Given Away.

The special meeting at the Salvation Army, 116 West Second street, tonight, will be of a most interesting character. Adjut. and Mrs. Wood of Morristown, also Captains March and Mimms, and a host of Salvationists from Elizabeth, will be present. The Easter Sale.

Press readers are reminded that the Easter reception and sale in All Souls Church is opened today and continues Friday afternoon and evening. The interest which the women of the church have taken in the welfare of Plainfield, as shown in the study class which is open to the public, and the unselfish spirit manifested in inviting all our citizens to attend free of charge the interesting course of talks on the humorists now in progress, will no doubt be reciprocated by the people of Plainfield. The sale will afford an opportunity of showing their appreciation, which should not be neglected.

THE BANK ROBBERY.

As Usual, The Daily Press Alone Published the Facts.

Cashier Frank S. Bunyon and Counselor Wm. M. Stillman today told a Daily Press reporter that nothing new had developed concerning the theft of $22,765 from the vault of the First National Bank. No word of hope had been received from the New York detective in charge of the case, and not a trace had been found of the missing money nor any clue to the thief.

The bank was overrun with New York reporters yesterday afternoon, working up the story for the papers they represented. The morning issues of today contain accounts of the robbery based largely on the accurate and connected narrative published in The Daily Press yesterday, and in some cases copying that bodily.

The bank officials commend The Press for its straightforward, truthful publication. The Press was the only Plainfield paper that published the facts and nothing but the facts. Another paper stated that three men were on duty during the supposed hour of the robbery, and quoted Cashier Bunyon as having said that the vault must have been entered by false keys. As The Press said yesterday, only two men were at their posts at the time, and this paper explained in detail how this came about. And as The Press asserted yesterday, and Cashier Bunyon of the bank today reassured the reporter that he was right in so quoting him, the doors were unlocked and no keys were necessary to obtain entrance.

The New York Tribune of today gives a clear and accurate report of the matter, similar to that in The Press, as was to be expected of such a substantial and careful newspaper, and adds this deserved tribute to the bank's faithful cashier:

"Mr. Bunyon, the cashier, took the matter much to heart, as during his 28 years' connection with the bank no money had been lost by theft. In fact, under his administration the affairs of the bank have been conducted in an unusually satisfactory manner, with the result that the bank is unquestionably one of the strongest and richest in that part of New Jersey."

A sensational local sheet concluded its garbled and disconnected remarks on the robbery with the statement:

"It is thought that the attention of the robber was directed to the bank through the known inefficiency of the local police force."

That paper is reminded, as the public knows, that the libel on the Plainfield police force which has been so industriously circulated all over the country during the past year was disseminated solely by that paper and its representatives through their out-of-town newspaper correspondence. It is that paper, and that paper alone, which has invited attention to Plainfield as a place unprotected by police and a paradise for rogues; and if that paper believes the bank thieves to have been induced to visit Plainfield through the libel which it has spread broadcast on the Plainfield police, then that paper must hold itself morally responsible for the theft of $22,675 from the First National Bank of Plainfield.

He Will Be a Brakeman Some Day.

A lost boy or girl has been reported to the police nearly every day the last week. This is no doubt occasioned by the fact that during the warm days parents permit their children to play out of doors, with the result of the child wandering aimlessly away. Just before noon yesterday John Odam, who was sitting in Justice Nash's office, saw a little three year-old boy go toddling up the embankment towards the railroad tracks. Fearing that he would be injured by the cars he went out and brought the little fellow into the office. Here his whole mind seemed to be centred on the cars. He would answer no questions asked him. Chief Grant came along and taking the boy on his knee tried to find out what his name was or where he lived, but his efforts were unsuccessful. He finally decided to take him home to dinner, and had just started when the lad's brother came along hunting for the child. From him it was learned that the little boy's father was James Patterson, living on Grove street. The child had strayed away in the morning and as soon as his absence was noticed a search was commenced.

Could n't Stand Plainfield Excitement.

Car No. 5 of the West Front street line of the street railway on its down trip at 2:30 yesterday afternoon frightened a horse driven by an Italian junk dealer from Newark. The horse ran away near Giraud avenue and broke one of the shafts.

Our better halves say they could not keep house without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is used in more than half the homes in Leeds, Sims Bros., Leeds, Iowa. This shows the esteem in which that remedy is held where it has been sold for years and is well known. Mothers have learned that there is nothing so good for colds, croup and whooping cough, that it cures these ailments quickly and permanently, and that it is pleasant and safe for children to take. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. PANGBORN USES HIS FIST.

Just Retribution to an Offensive Mountaineer Rowdy.

Since William Pangborn retired from the position of chief marshal of the borough a number of those who have fallen in the clutches of the law during his term of office, and with whom he was obliged to deal, have taken occasion to hoot at him on the street, and otherwise show their dislike since he retired to private life.

One of these individuals was "One Eyed" Hankinson, a colored denizen from over the mountain. He is reputed to be of a quarrelsome and vicious disposition and not infrequently during Mr. Pangborn's term of office he was obliged to place him under arrest.

Whenever he passed Mr. Pangborn on the street since his retirement he would holloa at him in an insolent manner, and the other evening the negro walked up to him, and, grabbing hold of his coat, said in an arrogant and impudent way:

"You can't arrest me now"—and then followed it up with a volley of oaths, and also attempted to shake the ex-marshal.

Mr. Pangborn thought that sort of a demonstration had gone far enough, so he sent forth a blow and the one-eyed man fell to the ground as though hit with a cannon ball.

One of the recently appointed marshals was near at hand, and grabbed hold of the Negro, but as Mr. Pangborn did not care to enter a complaint, he was allowed to sneak off.

It's dollars to doughnuts that he will yell in a derisive way at the ex-marshal no more.

A Russian Honeymoon.

The interest in the forthcoming production of "A Russian Honeymoon" for the benefit of the relief fund is growing daily. Yesterday before the announcement of the ticket sale was made public, there were many inquiries for seats at Music Hall, the drug stores, and at the newspaper offices.

On Monday and for a week thereafter the diagram of Music Hall can be seen at Reynolds's pharmacy afternoons after 5. Orders left at Reynolds's will receive the same consideration as those received by mail.

Held for the Grand Jury.

Before Justice Nash yesterday afternoon John Endress, who resides at the corner of Liberty and West Fourth streets, was held in $200 bail for appearance before the grand jury on the charge of embezzlement from John Crane, a Cranford grocer. After the arrest had been made an attempt was made to settle the affair, and The Press withheld publication pending settlement, but Prosecutor Marsh refused to interfere in the matter, and Justice Nash was therefore compelled to hold Endress for the grand jury. He furnished bail.

DIVORCE OF PROF. FAELTON.

Melemet, the Co-respondent, Secures a License To Marry Mrs. Faelton.

Baltimore, April 25.—Without any contest on the part of the wife, Prof. Reinhold Faelton was yesterday granted an absolute divorce from Mrs. Annie Faelton and given the custody of the two oldest children, Rudolph and Helen. The two youngest are given to the mother. The eldest of these is Carl Melemet Faelton, and the youngest has not yet been christened. Almost immediately upon the signing of the decree Prof. David Melemet walked into the court of common pleas and procured a license to marry Mrs. Annie Werseng Faelton, who had just been made a single woman. It is understood that the couple will be quietly married to-day. When the divorce proceedings against Mrs. Faelton were filed by her husband on March 23 a profound sensation was created in the musical circles of Baltimore. Both are distinguished musicians and composers and both are well known in Baltimore.

He was a trustee of Rollins college, Winter Park, Fla., a director in the Tamarack and Boston and Montana copper mines, the Maratime Coal company of Nicaragua. WARING DENOUNCED.

Sherman Union Veterans at Rochester Condemn the Commissioner.

Rochester, N. Y., April 25.—At a regular meeting of W. T. Sherman command, No. 2, Union Veterans union, last evening, resolutions strongly denunciatory of Street Cleaning Commissioner Waring, of New York, were passed. The resolution sets forth that "it is the sense of the command that any man who, in sober earnest, traduces or vilifies the character of any organization of loyal soldiers, is unfit to hold any office of honor, trust or profit within the limits of the United States."

Want Him Removed.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., April 25.—Hamilton and Sleight posts of the Grand Army of this city passed resolutions yesterday condemning Col. Waring of the New York street cleaning department for his recent attack on the order, and earnestly requesting Mayor Strong to remove him from the position.

HONEST MONEY LEAGUE.

Chicago Democrats Open Headquarters and Solicit Recruits.

Chicago, April 25.—President Robbins and Secretary Richards of the Honest Money league section of the local democracy have opened permanent headquarters for the league in the Palmer house. From this headquarters canvassers have been sent out in full force to search thoroughly the entire downtown section of the city and secure the signatures of democrats to the league's declaration of principles. "My success is surprising," said one of the canvassers. "About four out of every five democrats I meet gladly sign the declaration. Most of them who don't sign base their refusal not upon hostility to the gold system, but their lack of knowledge of the money question. They say that they have not studied the subject any yet and don't care to jump in the dark."

Strikers Successful.

Trenton, N. J., April 25.—The strike at the S. K. Wilson woolen mill, which has lasted two months on account of a ten per cent. reduction in wages, has been declared off, the firm acceding to the demand for a restoration of wages and the mill will resume operations next Monday when the 700 idle weavers will go to work again.

Death of "Nat" Jones.

Chicago, April 25.—Nathaniel S. Jones, the veteran speculator known in every wheat mart of the country as "Nat" Jones, one of the "Big Four" of bygone days, died at St. Joseph's hospital, in this city last night after lingering several weeks in a state of paralysis. He was broken financially, in health and in spirits.

Counterfeiters Active at Buffalo.

BLOCKADE TO-MORROW

Nicaragua's Last Day To Settle with England.

Port of Corinto To Be Blockaded, Troops Landed and Customs Seized To Satisfy the Indemnity Demanded for the Expulsion of Hatch —Position of the United States.

London, April 25.—The foreign office authorizes the statement that the news sent out from Corinto, Nicaragua, yesterday, as to the arrival of three British warships there, the Royal Arthur, Satellite and Wild Swan, for the purpose of pressing the claim of Great Britain for indemnity from Nicaragua for the expulsion of Mr. Hatch, the British consular agent, etc., was correct. It is added that instructions to the British admiral on the Pacific station were sent some time ago to insist upon Nicaragua's compliance with the terms of the ultimatum of Great Britain or, failing such compliance, to blockade the port of Corinto and seize the custom offices within two days after, and thus enforce satisfaction from Nicaragua for the insolent manner in which British subjects have been treated there.

Blockade Begins To-morrow.

Washington, April 25.—Exact official information has been received here as to Great Britain's belligerent steps in Nicaragua. British troops are to be landed at Corinto. The custom houses are to be occupied by the British forces and British officers are to exercise the functions of collectors of customs. Nicaraguan local commerce is to be crippled by a blockade. The limit of time allowed Nicaragua to yield expires to-day (Thursday), and the blockade, landing of troops and seizure of custom houses is to begin immediately thereafter.

Not Likely To Yield.

There is good reason to believe that Nicaragua is not likely to yield, but will allow British troops to occupy Corinto in order that conspicuous attention may be drawn to what is regarded by Nicaragua as an invasion of the Monroe doctrine. Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British ambassador, was at the state department this morning and had an interview with Secretary Gresham, presumably on the subject of the British programme to be pursued at Corinto, Nicaragua.

No Change in Our Policy.

There is no indication of any change in the policy determined upon, viz.: of non-interference except in the event that American interests are molested, or an attempt made upon the integrity of Nicaraguan territory. The coast defense vessel Monterey is still at Acapulco, Mex., about 800 miles north of Corinto. She is expected to sail southward very soon, but no specific orders have been sent to her at Acapulco, or in fact at any point since she sailed from San Diego. It may be that she will touch at Corinto on her way south, but if so it is said at the navy department that it will be simply in pursuance of the general instructions to touch at such points as may be necessary en route to replenish her small coal supply.

A gang of laborers have been sent to keep the fire from spreading. The fire is gaining steadily, however, owing to the high winds. This place is filled with smoke, and the roaring of the flames can be easily heard. A similar fire occurred just a year ago yesterday, consuming valuable timber, several houses and a barn which lay in its path. Hundreds of hotel guests are viewing the present fire.

PERRY STILL IN JERSEY.

His Extradition Cannot Be Accomplished Before Next Saturday.

Jersey City, April 25.—The extradition of Oliver Curtis Perry, the express train robber, will not be accomplished before next Saturday. It is probable even then that Perry's counsel, ex-Judge Hoffmann and Alexander Simpson, will step in with another writ of habeas corpus, and attempt to continue such proceedings indefinitely. Justice Lippincott, of the supreme court, said this morning that in all probability he would not hear argument on the writ now before him, in connection with which Commissioner Nugent took evidence Monday, until next Saturday morning. It is understood that Gov. Werts, at Trenton yesterday, signed extradition papers, fully understanding that an order would not be served on Sheriff Toffey to surrender Perry to the New York state officials until Justice Lippincott had rendered a decision on the present writ. Lawyer Simpson said this morning that if Justice Lippincott's decision was against Perry another writ would be immediately asked for, alleging that the man in the Hudson county jail is not Oliver Curtis Perry.

NO LAW TO STOP THEM.

Two Vessels with Arms for Ecuador Rebels Leave San Francisco.

Washington, April 25.—The consul of the republic of Ecuador at San Francisco, adopting the error which has widely prevailed that shipments of arms from the United States to countries where revolutionary movements may be in progress are illegal, notified Secretary Gresham that two vessels were about to leave San Francisco with consignments of arms supposed to be destined for rebels in Ecuador. He asked that the United States interpose to prevent these shipments. Secretary Gresham referred the matter to Attorney General Olney, who gave an opinion that there was nothing illegal in the acts claimed of. The United States authorities accordingly declined to interfere and the vessels, it is reported, have since sailed for their destination.

WILDE'S TRIAL TO-MORROW.

The Court Refuses To Grant a Postponement.

London, April 25.—Counsel for Oscar Wilde made application in the Old Bailey court yesterday for a postponement of his client's trial. Taylor's counsel was desirous of proceeding and the prosecuting lawyer argued in opposition to postponement saying that Wilde had had ample opportunity to prepare for trial. The court refused to grant a postponement and fixed to-morrow as the day of trial. The sale of Oscar Wilde's effects by auction upon the order of the sheriff is regarded as indicating that his pecuniary means are exhausted.

Louisville, April 25.—Congressman McCreary, in an interview, said he was unalterably opposed to the free coinage of silver. The fight will be made on those lines.

Spanish Minister Arrives.

New York, April 25.—The Spanish steamer Panama arrived at Quarantine last evening and came up to her dock this morning, after a trip of three days and fifteen hours from Havana. Among the passengers on board was Dupuy de Lome, Spanish minister to the United States. The minister said: "The excitement in Cuba is quieting down, and I am confident that the troubles will soon be settled. The captain-general, Martinez, will be in Havana before many days. He is now visiting the affected districts with a view of suppressing any disorders that may arise. He said:

Insurrection Confined to Negroes.

"The alleged insurrection is confined principally to negroes, the whites are not taking an active part with them. I feel assured, from my knowledge of the captain-general, that he will be prompt and energetic. His perfect knowledge of Cuban affairs makes him the best man for the situation." The minister will remain in New York for several days and will stop at the hotel Savoy.

Not General Maceo's Body.

Santiago de Cuba, April 25.—The body supposed to de that of Gen. Antonio Maceo, the insurgent leader, has been finally identified as a brother Jose. A battle was fought on Sunday at Ramon Jaguas. Little is kown of the details beyond that the insurgents were repulsed and Capt. Julian Maranda was killed. Lieut. Benjamen Callego who was sentenced by court martial to be shot yesterday was saved by a cipher gram from the queen regent commuting his sentence to life imprisonment.

Out with a Petition—Will Ask a New Trial.

Sing Sing, April 25.—Warden Sage has announced that Dr. Robert Buchanan may not be executed when his respite expires May 1. Mr. Sage will consult the attorney general as to whether or not Buchanan must be resentenced. George W. Gibbons, attorney for Buchanan, is circulating a petition among the New York city doctors which recites the details of Mrs. Buchanan's death and states that the signers do not believe she died of mineral poisoning. Dr. George R. Grover and a number of others have signed. Gibbons has not yet applied to the supreme court or the United States circuit court for a new trial, but he will do so to-day.

St. Petersburg, April 25. — George Vanderbilt has gone to Baku for the purpose of inspecting oil wells there. It is believed on the banks of the Neva that the Vanderbilts are about to take an interest in Russian oil. While Mr. Vanderbilt was in Moscow he received as many as 400 or 500 begging letters a day. Noblemen of high and low degree pestered him to take a financial interest in their affairs.

Shoplifters Convicted.

Will Wait Two Weeks on Strikers.

Newcastle, Pa., April 25.—Several conferences of furnace operators were held here and it was the unanimous decision to wait two weeks for the men to return to work at the old wages and then if they refuse, the operators say, that if the furnaces are started after that date it will be at wages paid in other places which are about 20 per cent. lower than here.

Louisville, Ky., April 25.—Mrs. Mary Bullitt, formerly the widow of General Ranson, has again begun suit for divorce from her venerable husband, Colonel Cuthbert Bullitt, on the ground of abandonment. LINCOLN'S SECOND INAUGURAL.

An Imposing Scene During the Century's Greatest Crisis.

Noah Brooks, in a series of personal reminiscences of Lincoln in the Century, describes the second inauguration of the martyr president:

The day of Lincoln's second inauguration, March 4, 1865, was as dark and drizzly as the November day of his second election. When the hour of noon arrived, great crowds of men and women streamed around the Capitol building in most wretched plight. The mud in the city of Washington on that day certainly excelled all the other varieties I have ever seen before or since, and the greatest test of feminine heroism—the spoiling of their clothes—was amply to the credit of the women who were so bedraggled and drenched on that memorable day. The only entrance to the Senate wing, where the preliminary ceremonies were held, was by the main or eastern portico, the other entrances being used only by privileged persons. . .

Col. Forney, the secretary of the Senate, read the proclamation of the President convoking an extra session and called the names of the members elect. Thereupon the newly chosen senators were sworn in, and the procession for the inauguration platform, which had been built on the east front of the Capitol, was formed. There was a sea of heads in the great plaza in front of the capitol as far as the eye could reach, and breaking in waves along its outer edges among the budding foliage of the grounds beyond. When the President and the procession of notables appeared, a tremendous shout, prolonged and loud, arose from the surging ocean of humanity around the Capitol building. Then the sergeant-at-arms of the Senate, the historic Brown, arose and bowed, with his shining black hat in hand, in dumb show before the crowd, which thereupon became still, and Abraham Lincoln, rising tall and gaunt among the groups about him, stepped forward and read his inaugural address, which was printed in two broad columns upon a single page of large paper. As he advanced from his seat, a roar of applause shook the air, and, again and again repeated, finally died far away on the outer fringe of the throng, like a sweeping wave upon the shore. Just at that moment the sun, which had been obscured all day, burst forth in its unclouded meridian splendor, and flooded the spectacle with glory and with light. Every heart beat quicker at the unexpected omen, and doubtless not a few mentally prayed that so might the darkness which had obscured the past four years be now dissipated by the sun of prosperity,

> Till danger's troubled night depart
> And the star of peace return.

The inaugural address was received with almost profound silence. Every word was clear and audible as the somewhat shrill and ringing tones of Lincoln's voice sounded over the vast concourse. There was applause, however, at the words, "both parties deprecated war, but one of them would make war rather than let the nation survive, and the other would accept war rather than let it perish"; and the cheer that followed these words lasted long enough to make a considerable pause before he added sententiously, "and the war came." There were occasionally spurts of appianse, too, at other points along this wonderful address.

Looking down into the faces of the people, illuminated by the bright rays of the sun, one could see moist eyes and even tearful cheeks as the good President pronounced these noble words: "With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphans; to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations." Among the memories of a lifetime, doubtless there are none more fondly cherished by those who were so fortunate as to stand near Lincoln at that historic moment than the recollection of the beautiful solemnity, the tender sympathy of these inspired utterances and the rapt silence of the thronging multitude.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

Sound American Sentiment Which Has Prevailed Since 1823.

In stirring times, when patriotic sentiments are revived, patriotic hopes rekindled and patriotic impulses predominant, it is well to recall the sage and prophetic words of those early American statesmen whose counsels have been followed with honor, credit and advantage to the republic.

President Monroe was elected in 1816, and in 1820 he was re-elected. Chili declared its independence of Spain in 1810, Paraguay in 1811, Colombia, then including Venezuela, in 1819, Mexico in 1821, Peru in the same year, and Brazil revolted from Portuguese domination in 1822. The other States of South and Central America, notably, Argentina, had followed in the footsteps of the United States by freeing themselves from European control, and the covert proposition to re-establish it evoked from the President these never to be forgotten words, part of his annual message to the Eighteenth Congress on Dec. 2. 1823:

"We owe it to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and the allied powers, to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European Power we have not interfered, and shall not interfere; but with the Governments which have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and just principles, acknowledged, we could not view an interposition for oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States."

That is the Monroe Doctrine. Such was the position not only of the President, but also of the people of the United States then. Such is the position, positive and irrevocable, of the people of the United States now. The liberty of a sovereign people, wrested from the tyranny of an alien government or local despotism and duly recognized by the United States, cannot be interfered with afterward without injury to this republic.

2,000 LOCKED OUT

Result of a Threatened Carpet Mill Strike.

The Dobsons Anticipate Their Employes' Intentions and Close Their Big Philadelphia Mills—Hard on Many Who Were Opposed To Striking—Shut Down Indefinitely.

Philadelphia, April 25.—Over 2,000 mill hands are thrown out of employment at the large textile works of John and James Dobson, by a threatened strike throughout the entire plant for an increase in wages. When the employes attempted to enter the gates to their usual work yesterday they were confronted by the following placard: "These mills closed until further notice."

Beginning of the Trouble.

Two weeks ago last Monday thirty cutters and 2.0 tapestry and velvet carpet weavers struck for an advance of 15 per cent. in wages. The cutters returned to work in a few days, it being generally understood that they secured an advance. Their action caused about 150 dyers, employed in the plush and carpet departments to follow suit by quitting work in a body on Monday last, and it was rumored that a general strike in all the mills was to have taken place.

Serious Blow to Many.

The action of the firm in locking out all the hands has created consternation among those employes who were willing to continue at their looms until an amicable adjustment of the wage question could be agreed upon, and is a serious blow to many families and storekeepers. A number of beamers and twisters in the cloth department were laid off owing to a short supply of material caused by the fire, which destroyed the wool storage and dye houses a few days ago. James Dobson, when questioned as to the cause of the shutdown, stated that the men did not want to work, and the mill would remain closed indefinitely for all the firm cared.

Wages Paid.

The dyers, according to their statement, received $8 per week when on full time, and they ask for an increase of $1 per week in order to restore the rate paid prior to the reduction one year ago. The weavers average about $7 per week if the material happens to be of good quality, and if they have plenty of light, although many are not making $6. They ask for a 15 per cent. increase.

"LUCKY" BALDWIN'S REPLY.

Says Miss Ashley Should Have Known His Shady Character.

San Francisco, April 25.—"Lucky" Baldwin, the millionaire owner of race horses, has filed a most extraordinary demurrer to the complaint in the betrayal suit brought against him by Miss Lillian Ashley, of Boston. In his demurrer the rich horse owner states that his reputation is such that any woman of the world should have known that he was deceiving her, and she should not have been in his company. Baldwin has been the central figure in many suits of betrayal and breach of promise.

Preparing for a Big Peach Crop.

Flemington, N. J., April 25.—Owing to the favorable prospects for an abundant crop of peaches next season, the peach basket factories in this section have resumed operation and many men and boys have been employed. The factories of H. E. Deats and John Stryker of Pittstown resumed operations yesterday and they will be run to their full capacity.

Justice Jackson Improving.

Nashville, Tenn., April 25.—The health of Associate Justice Jackson, of the United States supreme court, has steadily improved since he came to his home, Westmeade, six miles from this city, several weeks ago. He intends to leave for Washington about May 4, to sit with his colleagues during the hearing of the income tax petition.

Dropped Dead While Fishing.

Pottstown, Pa., April 25.—William S. Ellis, a wealthy and prominent iron manufacturer, dropped dead yesterday while fishing in a creek near here. Mr. Ellis was 53 years of age and his death is attributed to heart failure. He took an active interest in politics and in 1888 was a presidential elector for Harrison.

Stamford's Typhoid Epidemic.

Stamford, Conn., April 25.—No new cases of typhoid fever have developed in this city during the past twelve hours. Dr. Hexemer, town health officer, said this morning that the epidemic was on the wane, and that he was confident that the disease would be wiped out in a few weeks.

Lexow Police Bill Killed.

Albany, April 25.—The Lexow police reorganization bill was killed in the senate yesterday afternoon by a tie vote, 16 to 16.

Strike for Wage Increase.

Woonsocket, R. I., April 25.—The weavers in J. D. Nichols & Sons woolen mill at Tarklin, Burrillville, are on strike for an increase in wages of one cent a yard. Employes of other departments ask an increase.

Swindled with Bogus Checks.

Norristown, Pa., April 25.—A clerical-looking man, representing himself as a Methodist clergyman, of Boston, Mass., has been swindling people in this vicinity by means of bogus checks. There are several warrants out for him, but he has disappeared.

For a Deputy Speaker.

London, April 25.—The house of commons soon will be called upon to consider a bill amending the British North American act so as provide for a deputy speaker in the Cadadian senate.

ALL READY TO LAND.

600 British Blue Jackets to Seize Corinto.

London, April 25—Rear Admiral Henry F. Stephenson, commanding the warships in the harbor of Corinto, Nicaragua, telegraphed to the Admiralty that other war vessels were on their way to join his fleet at Corinto, and that he was prepared to land 400 blue jackets at daybreak today if the British demand for $75 000 indemnity was not complied with by midnight last night.

The warships were lying close to the shore in order to protect the landing party, which, the Admiral said, he would cover with 29 guns.

A Horse's Frolic.

Abram Nelson, the plumber, left his horse and wagon standing in front of the Board of Trade Building this afternoon while he went on an errand. The lines dropped from the wagon, and caught in one of the front wheels, at the same time pulling on the horse's head.

The animal became frightened and started to circle the middle of the road. He got up on the sidewalk, and came near breaking several panes of glass in the large window.

Smith Wyckoff, janitor of the Board of Trade, and George Saums of G. Q. Packer's furniture store, finally succeeded in quieting the horse. By that time Mr. Nelson returned and took charge of his rig. The only damage was the breaking of the shafts.

Return Match Arranged.

A return match shoot of 50 birds apiece at $100 a side has been arranged between George Squiers of North Plainfield and Wm. Ross of Elizabeth. The event will take place next week Saturday afternoon on the grounds of the Climax Gun Club.

—The splendid programme of the Euterpe Society at their initial entertainment in the Casino tonight should ensure a large house.

—The rumor brought to Plainfield by a commuter that a late edition of The Evening World announces a clue to the Plainfield bank robbers, is said by The World, over telephone to The Press, to be untrue.

—Adelbert Vail, who was present in the bank during the supposed hour of the robbery, is today very weak from nervousness, having come to realize that had he turned around and seen the robber at work he might have been shot.

Mrs. George Kesselring is ill at her home.

Arbor Day Hymn.

[By the author of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and to be sung to the same tune.]

Joy for the sturdy trees,
Fanned by each fragrant breeze,
Lovely they stand!
The songbirds o'er them trill;
They shade each tinkling rill;
They crown each swelling hill;
Lowly or grand.

Plant them by stream and way,
Plant them where the children play
And toilers rest,
In every verdant vale,
On every sunny swale—
Whether to grow or fail,
God knoweth best.

Select the strong, the fair;
Plant them with earnest care;
No toil is vain.
Plant in a fitter place,
Where, like a lovely face,
Let in some sweeter grace,
Change may prove gain.

God will his blessing send.
All things on him depend.
His loving care
Clings to each leaf and flower,
Like ivy to its tower.
His presence and his power
Are everywhere.

—S. F. Smith.

The Heart of the Tree.

What does he plant who plants a tree?
He plants the friend of sun and sky;
He plants the flag of breezes free,
The shaft of beauty, towering high;
He plants a home to heaven anigh
For song and mother croon of bird
In hushed and happy twilight heard—
The treble of heaven's harmony—
These things he plants who plants a tree.

What does he plant who plants a tree?
He plants cool shade and tender rain,
And seed and bud of days to be,
And years that fade and flush again;
He plants the glory of the plain;
He plants the forest's heritage—
The harvest of a coming age;
The joys that unborn eyes shall see—
These things he plants who plants a tree.

What does he plant who plants a tree?
He plants in sap and leaf and wood,
In love of home and loyalty
And far cast thought of civic good—
His blessing on the neighborhood
Who in the hollow of his hand
Holds all the growth of all our land—
A nation's growth from sea to sea
Stirs in his heart who plants a tree.

THOUGHTS FOR ARBOR DAY.

A Plan For the One Great Ornament of Our Landscape.

To merely transplant a tree, move it from one spot to another, where perhaps it is less likely to remain for any length of time than where it previously stood, is, it seems to me, the very acme of folly. The chances are many that the soil will be less suitable, and so growth will be retarded, and the world is therefore not one whit the better off. There is far too much tree planting of this kind on Arbor day. In many an instance a plot of ground has been replanted year after year. I fancy we will have to reach more nearly to the stage of tree appreciation before Arbor day will be a pre-eminent success.

Can we not indeed accommodate ourselves a little more to the trees growing where nature planted them? I know a village well where the houses are placed to accommodate the trees that stood there when the spot was a wilderness. The main street is a little crooked, but what a noble street it is! I recall, as I write these lines, many a Friends' meeting house and one country school where splendid oaks are standing near by, and to those who gather daily or weekly here, whether children or grown people, the trees are no less dear than the buildings beside them. The wanderer who revisits the scenes of his childhood looks first at the trees and then at the houses. Tree worship, we are told, was once very prevalent, and it is not to be regretted that in a modified form it still remains with us.

As a practical matter, let me here throw out the suggestion that he will be doing most excellent work who saves a tree each year. This is a celebration that needs no special day set forth by legislative enactment. How often I have heard farmers remark, "It was a mistake to cut those trees down!" Of course it was. In nine cases out of ten the value of the trees felled proves less than was expected and quickly follows the realization of the fact that when standing their full value was not appreciated. Think of cutting down trees that stand singly or in little groups in the middle of fields because it is a trouble to plant around them, or for the reason that they shade the crops too much! What of the crop of comfort such trees yield to both man and beast when these fields are pastures?

"But there is no money in shade trees." I cannot repress my disgust when I hear this, and I have heard it often. Is there genuine manhood in those who feel this way toward the one great ornament of our landscape?—Charles Conrad Abbott.

OBJECT OF ARBOR DAY.

To Imbue the Young With a Love For Trees.

Has it occurred to you that, with the inauguration of Arbor day in almost all the states, we inaugurate an era of reform? Have the boys and girls understood that, in planting the shade and lawn trees with festive celebration they do not only start a new vegetable growth, deriving pleasure from the work and its progress from year to year, but they also plant the seed of a new era in the economy of our nations; that they foreshadow a reform in our methods of utilizing the bountiful resources of our country?

What is the object of Arbor day? To plant shade trees and have a good time? Oh, no! Although the setting of a tree is useful and pleasurable, although the festivities attending it are pleasurable and useful in impressing the mind with the memory of the occasion, the deeper object of Arbor day is to so imbue the coming generations with a love of tree growth and tree planting that out of a nation of woodchoppers there may arise a nation of tree planters and foresters.

When first our forefathers came to this country, it was a dense forest, and to make fields and agriculture it was necessary to get rid of the forest at any cost. This has produced in our nation a hatred against trees, and we have cut away and slashed and burned, until now it becomes necessary to cry a halt, and reverse our actions. With the opening up and settlement of the treeless prairies and plains the settlers in that new country have learned to appreciate the usefulness of trees, and it is to one of those states—Nebraska—that Arbor day owes its origin.

What more encouragement to go on with this work need there be for a patriotic American boy than the thought that by his action he is helping to shape the development of his people and his country in the right direction?—E. H. Fernow.

Borough Sidewalk Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the ordinance of the Borough of North Plainfield requires that flag sidewalks be laid, and prohibits the laying of new board walks or repairing of old board walks.

An impression seems to exist that old board walks may be repaired without violation of the ordinance.

This is not the fact. In every case where any repair of a board walk is necessary stone must be used.

Public notice of this fact is now again given so that no one need feel aggrieved if they are required to replace a newly laid or repaired board walk with stone.

Dated April 22, 1895.

INCREDIBLE STORIES TOLD IN A CREDITABLE MANNER.

His Whiskers Tackles a Muskrat, But Loses His Life Through the Intervention of Two Minks. Success as a Skunk Catcher.

A team belonging to Farmer Amos M Partridge, of Maple Vale, Pa., stopped suddenly in the road one evening last winter, snorted and tried to turn around. The snow was so deep that they upset the sleigh, but they couldn't wheel about. The moon was shining and after Mr Partridge had quieted the horses he saw that the cause of their fright was a skunk in the track a few yards ahead. It was pointed toward the team and it stood and blinked at the horses as though it had the right of way and didn't propose to budge. Owing to the depth of the snow it was impossible for the farmer to turn out or to back up, so he decided to let the independent animal take its own time in getting out of the way. He waited ten or twelve minutes but the skunk still stuck up for his rights. He at length became tired of humoring the stubborn animal, and, as the wind was in his favor he got out his revolver, went in front of his horses and made ready to shoot it.

Just then a large horned owl alighted on a fence stake not far from the skunk and Mr. Partridge changed his mind. On spying the owl the skunk crouched close to the side of the track and tried to hide. The owl saw what he was up to and at once flew to a stake across the road where it had a better view.

The skunk evidently understood why the owl had shifted its perch, for it immediately crept to the off track and again attempted to secrete itself from the sharp eyes of the big bird. In a moment the owl had sailed away, circled around over a field for a spell and then flew back to the first stake. The skunk peeped over the top of the snowbank after the owl had disappeared, but failed to watch the whereabouts of the silent night bird. It was fairly puzzled as to where the owl had gone to, and that was just the effect that the cunning bird had set out to produce when it took the turns around the meadow. No sooner had the owl alighted the last time than the skunk cowered again, as if in mortal terror. Once more the owl flitted across the road, seeming to take great pleasure in tormenting the skunk flying back again before the skunk had time to stir.

The skunk continued to squat in the snow, and pretty soon the owl arose a hundred feet or so and went to hovering directly over the trembling animal. That was apparently the sort of tactics the skunk did not care for, for it was unable to watch the broad winged bird's movements up there, and it immediately started to steal toward the team. On seeing that it was bent on finding refuge under the rig, the owl instantly pounced upon it and seized it by the hump. The skunk wriggled and squealed and made frantic efforts to fight the crafty bird, but it was of no use. The owl had the advantage and it flapped its wings and worked its claws vigorously until it had got a double hold in the skunk's hide, when it arose slowly and went flitting away to the forest with its well earned prey.

Cyrus Goodell, of Panther Creek, saw an owl nab a muskrat one evening a short while ago. It failed to get a good clawhole, and the animal fought so fiercely that the bird was unable to get away with it. The cries of the little animal brought the whole colony of muskrats from their huts in short order, and they pitched into the owl and tried to rescue their relative. The murderous bird clung to the captive and flung the rescuers off with its wings. They renewed the attack and soon made it so hot for the owl that it released its prey and attempted to rise.

The maddened animals held it down and it flapped and clawed and bit right and left. Presently two more owls came flying to the spot. Each bird captured a muskrat and flew into the timber with it. The fighting owl kept up the warfare and was getting the better of the animals when two minks popped from underneath a root and set their teeth and claws into the owl under the wings. The muskrats scooted into their huts at sight of the minks, and the owl flopped and tumbled on the ice in a vain effort to rid itself of the little bloodsuckers. Before long the owl weakened, and the minks cut its throat and sucked their fill, and left it dead near the muskrat that it had killed.

A mealing yellow tomcat on top of a rail fence awoke Howard Chase's entire household in the Dutch Mountains one moonshiny night last winter. The cat was a visitor, and Mr. Chase was about to fire at him from a window when two gigantic horned owls dropped upon the noisy fellow simultaneously. One got him by the neck and the other by the rump, nailing him so suddenly that it changed his plaintif midnight love song to a piteous wail of pain. In struggling for liberty the musical animal made across the rail on his belly with one of the owls tousing at his hide violently on either side of the fence.

The owls were a dead match in both size and strength, and they seesawed the tomcat across the rail until he yowled and spit and sputtered in a way that showed he was sorry he hadn't stayed home.

All the dogs and cats on the premises flocked out to witness the interesting spectacle, their voices mingled with the frightful cries of the tomcat. The energetic owls paid no attention to the noisy four footed spectators but continued to beat the air and keep the cat in limbo on the rail.

After a while the cat reached the rail with his hind claws and he hacked so hard for dear life then that the owl at his head yanked him and the other owl over the fence. They all tumbled into the snow where for a short time the desperate cat made the feathers fly. The vigorous forest birds didn't let up on the cat a particle, though, and they kept twisting and tugging and tearing his hide until he was completely played out. Then the owls, with their heads pointed in the same directions clutched the cat at opposite ends, bore him skyward and sailed away to the woods with him, one in front of the other.

One's Ideals May Change.

"I suppose you want the lady's name engraved inside, sir," said the jeweler after Tillinghast had selected the engagement ring.

"Oh, no," replied the careful young man. "Just put inside 'To my heart's own treasure,' or 'The star of my life.'"—Life.

GOVERNMENTAL EXTRAVAGANCE.

Thousands of Dollars Wasted Upon So-Called Agricultural Documents.

The report of Mr. George William Hill, chief of the division of records and editing of the United States department of agriculture for 1894, gives the public an opportunity to survey the achievements of the department in the printing and publishing line. During the year ending June 30 1894, the department issued 205 separate publications, with an aggregate amount of 10,512 pages, exclusive of reprints. Of these publications 3,169,310 copies were printed, a very extensive circulation. The cost to the government of this agricultural printing and publishing business was $71,977.89, the interest on $1,799,447.25 at four per cent. This money was not entirely wasted, however. It seems that $7,646.87 of it was spent for blanks and blank books, a kind of literature much more valuable and interesting than most of that which is disseminated by the department.

Among the works with which the government enriched the farmers for the year ending June 30, 1894, were a "Systematic and Alphabetic Index to New Species of North American Phanerogams and Pteridophytes," a "Manual of the Phanerogams and Pteridophytes of Western Texas (Apetalæ, Monocotyledoneæ, Pteridophytæ)," a "Preliminary Revision of the North American Species of Cactus, Anhalonium and Lophophora," a "Contribution to the Investigation of the Assimilation of Free Atmospheric Nitrogen by White and Black Mustard," "Proceedings of the Tenth Annual Convention of Official Agricultural Chemists," "Catalogue of the Exhibit of Economic Entomology at the World's Columbian Exhibition," "Report on the Ornithology of the Death Valley Expedition of 1891," "Annotated List of the Reptiles and Batrachians Collected by the Death Valley Expedition" and "Report on a Small Collection of Insects Made During the Death Valley Expedition; List of Diptera, Hemithera and Heteroptera." The recorders and editors in the division of records and editing must have had a peculiar happiness when these productions, so indispensable to the farmer, passed through it. Mr. Hill thinks that $3,000 is not too large a salary for the chief editor of the division; and there is no disputing him.

Indeed, it is marvelous that a man with a literary and editorial constitution capable of revising and surviving the publications of the department of agriculture, can be had for less than $30,000 a year. From all the other divisions and bureaus and offices of the department come the manuscripts to Mr. Hill. He is the government reader. On him the mammalogists and ornithologists and entomologists and vegetable pathologists charge with serried ranks of copy; and he, poor man, has to read it, stumbling painfully over heaps of scientific polysyllables and plodding over innumerable acres of dreariness. His is the task of licking the manuscript into shape, of inducing the author to modify it, of preparing it for the printers. He or his assistants prepare and send to the press advance notices of the publications of the department, a labor for which the press is not properly grateful. In short, the division of records and editing is full of business, and thoroughly aware of the great responsibilities which devolve upon it. However much humbug there is in the department of agriculture, however much of a fraud upon the taxpayers and the farmers it is, it is impossible to regard the Hon. George William Hill, chief of the division of records and editing, without a sympathetic pang. He has to read all the publications of the department of agriculture! If he carefully retains and meditates upon what he reads he must know less about agriculture than any other man in the United States.—N. Y. Sun.

A GREAT MEDICINE.

Cod-liver Oil is useful beyond any praise it has ever won, and yet few are willing or can take it in its natural state. Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil is not offensive; it is almost palatable.

Children like it. It is Cod-liver Oil made more effectual, and combined with the Hypophosphites its strengthening and flesh-forming powers are largely increased.

Don't be persuaded to accept a substitute!

A FAMOUS INVENTOR.

Frederick E. Sickles Made Millions for Others, but None for Himself.

A man to whom the world owes much but gave little was laid at rest in the Paterson (N. J.) cemetery recently. He was Frederick E. Sickles, inventor, who died a few weeks ago, a poor man, in Kansas City.

The inventor was a warm personal friend of both Abraham Lincoln and Jefferson Davis, besides having given to the world two brilliant and imperishable inventions which will make his name forever remembered in steam engineering.

He was, it is said, the only man of all the great names since James Watt to add a new and important elementary idea to the theory of steam valve action. Watt never believed in more than ten pounds pressure, and Sickels made the present high pressure possible with his cut off valve.

He invented the first steam steering gear for ships, but others made millions while he died poor. He saw the whole steam using world adopt his inventions, but he failed to profit.

One man, it is stated in his documents, made a fortune out of his ideas—a man with whom he had discussed his plans. It was Corliss, who reaped millions from his engines. There was litigation for years, finally ending in a victory for Sickels, but the patents by that time had expired.

It was while Sickels was fitting out the Pensacola with his steam steering gear that he first met Lincoln, and later they became close personal friends. Lincoln was an ardent lover of machinery, and he gave this as one of the reasons for Lincoln's strong friendship for the inventor.

The President used to take great delight in visiting the engine room of the Pensacola with Mr. Sickles, and it was on one of these occasions that he explained to Mr. Sickels why his doubts about the existence of a god were always dispelled. Pointing to the engine of the Pensacola, he said:

"An engine is to my mind the best physical evidence of the immortality of man. A brain that can create such a complicated piece of machinery must have been inspired by a deity."

Just before the war Jefferson Davis became inventor Sickles' friend and took an interest in his patents. When Sumter was fired upon Davis wrote to Sickels, as letters found among his effects show, offering him the position of chief engineer of the Confederate navy. He urged him time and again to accept the position. In the letters he declared the South was sure to be victorious and it would be a grand opportunity for his abilities to be recognized. Sickles stuck to Lincoln, his equally good friend, and declined Davis' offer.

Davis said in these letters that Richmond would quickly become the great capital of America, and there would gather all the great geniuses, whom the Confederate States would encourage and aid in their work. He knew of Sickles' hard luck in getting justice for his inventions.

An interesting manuscript found among his effects tells of his first experiments with the steam steering gear made in John Roach's shops. It was first put on a ferryboat on the North River, and he tells how his wife was the only passenger on the experimental trip.

He formed a partnership with William Judson, and early in the sixties, after doing the work on the United States warship Pensacola, he went to England with his gear.

The laws were faulty in those days and his patents were pirated. He was very forgivable, for it is shown that he visited Corliss, the man of all others he had reason to hate, shortly before his death. In their younger days they worked together in the same shop.

Sickels at the time was poor. Corliss was worth $10,000,000. Sickels said to Corliss's niece, Miss Steveus:

"Poor old man! With all his wealth he is not so happy as I am to-day."

THE NEWS IN NEW YORK.

Neighborhood Gossip Culled From the Columns of the Great Dailies.

Meat is dearer to-day in New York than it has been before for twenty-three years.

A bicycle rider on the Boulevard yesterday attracted much attention rushing along at racing pace, smoking a briar. How under the sun did he manage it?

Coroner Hoeber carefully cut a string that surrounded an express package delivered to him yesterday and out hoped a jumping jack.

This town is germ and microbe mad. "Come in and have your blood examined" is the invitation of a germ slaying shop, and doubtless it is often accepted.

No man who listens to a conversation which he is not supposed to hear is a gentleman. A man who loves a woman really does not care what a fortune teller says of her.

Every man who has ever been out driving has observed the stupidity of the barnyard fowl, which flees for yards before his horse and chariot when by a quiet step to the side it could reach a place of safety in a dignified manner.

Dr. Parker has given the free pew system in Brooklyn a fair trial, and says it has utterly failed. Human nature isn't good enough yet for that system. If you tell a man that your religious lunch is free you can't expect him to volunteer to pay for it.

WHY HE WANTED THE KISS.

The Boy Liked It, but He Didn't Mean to Embarrass His Papa.

An amusing incident occurred the other evening at the home of one of Brooklyn's well known citizens. It was at the dinner table and the family had been waiting for some time for the arrival of the head of the house. The father was unusually late and when he entered the dining room he made the round of the table, kissing the upturned faces of the little ones.

Everything went well until he reached his six year old son, a precocious lad. The father had kissed him and was about to take his seat at the head of the table when he was surprised by a request from the boy for another kiss.

The parent hastened to comply and was stunned by the boy exclaiming:

"Say, papa, what place did you stop in at on your way home? I like it."

The boy was commanded to be silent, but later in the evening the husband admitted to his wife that he had met a friend, and—well, you know how it goes. The boy will need watching as he grows up.

BIRTHPLACE OF THE BROWNIES.

Commonplace Surrounding Amid Which They Came Into Being.

Probably very few people who have met the brownies in one quarter of the world or another know that these interesting people first saw the light through the north window of a room in an office building in lower Broadway, New York. They came into the world with the roar of the street and the prosaic bell of the cable-car, the first sounds likely to fall upon their ears.

There is nothing nearer the supernatural about the surroundings in which they are born. The other floors of the buildings are occupied by wholesale dealers in such articles as coats, hats and shoes which even the mysterious brownies have adopted.

Palmer Cox's studio is not a room that looks as if it had served for so long as the birthplace of these unique little figures. It looks very much like the sitting room of a country farmhouse, after the successful visit of a peddler. The light that falls from the four windows floods the room. There is a stove to heat it, and behind a screen in one corner an industrious typewriter is at work.

Nothing suggest that the quaint figures hung about the room in the form of dolls, in pictures, woven into rugs and grinning on pieces of stamped calico originated here. But the small slant topped desks, covered with a piece of blotting paper entirely plain and facing a window through which the light pours was the cradle of most of the brownie brood. Some of the first—for the oldest brownies are not of native birth—came into the world by way of Canada. But the dude, the Irishman, the policeman, like the great majority of the rank and file of the brownies band, were born down in that office building on Broadway.

The oldest brownies in the lot are now fourteen years old. It was in 1881 that Mr. Cox drew him. Until that time he had written stories for children and made their characters animals that talked like human beings. But children found an element of unreality in this that made their sympathy with them incomplete. They and Mr. Cox too, wanted characters who could have all the humor of the brownies, enjoy themselves just as much and draw for their readers such sound and unobtrusive morals as are always the sum of brownie experience.

So when Cox thought of the old Scotch tradition of the brownie tribe which he had often heard of from his Scotch neighbors in Canada, they seemed to him to be just the sort of people he wanted in his books to take the place of the talking animal. The publishers were not inclined to listen to his proposals about writing a fairy story. They wanted the animals kept up, and fairies, they said, had already been written by so many famous authors. But one of the brownie stories was published in 1881, and since that time their creator has never written about anything else or drawn anything other than the little figures which have made his fame and are now doing all they can in the characteristic, fussy, energetic brownie manner to make his fortune.

Mr. Cox takes his brownies very seriously. He talks about them with the solicitude of a parent. He takes more interest in their adventures than a child would, and as he sits in his studio one would judge from his tone that he expected the brownies on the walls to drop into his lap and talk to him.

It is fourteen years since he wrote his first brownie story, and there have been a hundred stories since that time. But Mr. Cox says that his ideas travel faster than his hands, and that his fingers are tired when there is plenty of inspiration left.

The first successful brownie story Mr. Cox says it seemed an impossibility ever to repeat. The third he was certain could never be accomplished. But it was an easier matter than its predecessor, and the ideas have come more easily to Mr. Cox's pen for every succeeding story about them.

The familiar physical traits of the brownies were discovered accidently. There was an alphabet to be designed, and Mr. Cox drew some figures on which the letters could be placed. He decided to put them on the stomachs and chests of the little men who were supporting them. This required them to have large bodies, and in order not to distract from the prominence of the letter it was necessary that their legs should be small and their heads as inconspicuous as possible.

Of course anybody can see that a figure of such proportions must have been a brownie, whether intended to be one or not. But the idea of the little figure came to Mr. Cox in this way:

The stories descriptive of the brownies' adventures are always written before any of the pictures are drawn. Thus, when the brownies went traveling and reached Spain, Mr. Cox remembered bull fights and had straightaway a picture in his mind's eye of them being chased from the arena by the bull. So he wrote the story about it and drew the picture afterward.

None of the brownies has ever passed out of his owner's control. When their pictures were first printed in the magazines it was under the condition that they remain the property of the artist, to be returned to him when the brownies got into a book. In whatever magazine they were printed they were only used temporarily, and they remained the property of the creator.

A LESSON IN HUMILITY.

A Little Story by Col. Calliper Concerning Philetus Goblinton.

"Isn't it curious, Cynthia," the colonel said to Mrs. Calliper, "how sometimes the current of our lives is deflected by the most trivial incidents? Now there was Philetus Goblinton; you remember what a vain, consequential man he was? But all that was changed by just the slightest thing in the world. He went one Sunday to a church where he had never been before and where he was quite unknown. As usual, he made toward the middle aisle, where, at home, he was accustomed to sit; but the man that met him led him not down the middle aisle, but along the back of the pews and down a side aisle, and he gave him a seat pretty well back.

"This was a crusher to Philetus. Here was a man evidently a man of some account, who, with the unprejudiced eyes of a total stranger, had sized him up as a man of side aisle importance. Could it be that his friends and acquaintances really so regarded him? It set him thinking; and the result you see in the modest, thoughtful Philetus Goblington of to-day."

"Jason, dear," said Mrs. Calliper, "don't you suppose it would be a good thing for you to go to a strange church once in a while?"

CHAPTER II.

Jasper Noel did suit Barbara exactly, even more perfectly than she had ever fancied any man could. He was frank and simple of manner and open of speech, but had a strong will, and Barbara loved a strong will. Then he also had that generosity which is apt to accompany the artistic temperament. His admiration for women was of the idealistic sort, tenderly chivalrous and reverential. Barbara laughed to herself over his unworldly faith, while the sensation of tears stung her eyes. She saw that his worldly experience had not been excessively broad or else that he had passed along with eyes closed to the selfishness and folly of her set. He painted well, surprisingly well for a young man of such great expectations, and devoted himself assiduously to work. That also appealed to her. "He will be great as well as rich, and he is so lovable, so lovable," she acknowledged to herself.

She had always expected to be interested in the personality of the man she married, but not to the extent that Noel absorbed her. It was almost alarming. "I think I love him; yes, I'm sure I love him." She rested her chin on her hands and mused awhile. Why should her heart beat so fast and loud every time she recalled a tender glance or a whispered word of his? He never had made love to her as other men, why should she blush and palpitate? "Well, positively this is the first real mystery I ever came across in my life. I feel so different, so very different."

She began walking the floor of her little room with a restlessness that would have astonished Mrs. Waring could that lady have been a spectator. "Yet they say that's always the way," she continued musing to herself. "One reads about it until one is weary and yet one is drawn on just the same, and it is always new."

The deep disquiet of her soul bewildered her. There were some trinkets on her bureau and she arranged and rearranged these, scanning the effect each time as though the result were a matter of grave moment. But her thoughts were all the while busy with other things. Finally obeying an impulse she put on her best walking gown and set forth for Noel's studio. She had grown very fond of the studio, but this was the first time she had ever gone alone, and she wondered now what her mother would say. But she must see him, analyze him in the light of this new revelation, if she couldn't analyze herself. She knew that it was his working hour, so she opened the door and walked in.

He was painting away with all fervor, with a dirty heavy-mouthed droop-eyed child before him as a model.

"Why Miss Waring, Miss Waring," he cried, delighted. "I'm so glad you've come to-day. I've been wishing all morning that you could be here. I wanted you to see this new model. See what a wild lovely tangle in her hair, and what long eyelashes she has. I found her on the street and asked her to come up with me. She makes a fine study in color with that yellow drapery behind her."

Barbara was not artistic enough to easily reflect his enthusiasm, yet the picturesqueness of the child was not entirely lost upon her.

"She is very good," she agreed, absently, and walked around to look at the picture on the easel. She was flushed and breathless from rapid walking, and now that she stood in his presence wished that she had not come. "Please go on with your work," she begged after a moment. "I shall feel sorry if you don't, and talk to me about your model. Where did you find her?"

"On the street. Do sit here on this chair where I can see you, too, if I am to work while you are here."

But she was too restless, uneasy over the boldness of her visit, to sit down. She continued to walk around looking at sketches and odds and ends of drawing. Noel's eyes followed all her movements and his interest in his work flagged. When Barbara saw the little model stealing softly away, some shining coins in her dirty little hand, she felt that she too must go.

"I THINK I LOVE HIM."

"Not just this moment," he pleaded, putting out his hand.

"But I only came in for a moment. I have some shopping—an appointment—" she stammered, blushing and confused. Then she looked up at him as they stood facing each other, and he took one of her hands between both of his.

"Is it true, Barbara?"

"Is what true?"

"I love you, love you so, do you love me a little? I—I seem to read it in your eyes."

"Oh, you must let me go," she breathed, suffering an intenser fright over her own emotion than over the impropriety of the situation, standing there alone with him in his studio.

"Yes, this instant, sweetheart; but I'm coming this evening to see you."

"Yes, come," she faltered, as she vanished through the doorway and fled downstairs.

The engagement was publicly announced in a few days. Mrs. Col. Waring believed in letting the world appreciate her triumphs. She confided the story of Noel's wealth and high connection to two or three gossipy friends, and the poor princess figured largely in the story, too. Little notices crept into the papers and Barbara was envied as well as admired. Noel was too blissfully happy to heed anything outside of his sweetheart and his pictures. He had been accepted, and so had they at the spring exhibition, and discriminating critics had given them high praise.

It was about this time that Tom Waring returned from California. A lucky financial deal had added considerably to his fortune, and he was gay accordingly; yet his smile grew a trifle grim when told of Barbara's engagement. "I thought she'd make him forget the other woman, but I'm afraid men are faithless creatures anyway. I'm true as anybody to love, but not to its personification. I thought I had left my heart safely in New York, and now I believe it's in Mexico. Stunning creature I met down there!" But sentimental regrets could not cloud Mr. Waring's satisfaction in his financial success. He beamed upon the world like a full-risen sun and returned thanks for his good fortune in liberal donations to favorite charities and a diamond pin to Barbara.

It was two days after his return that he received another foreign letter, and he recognized James Noel's handwriting before he broke the seal.

"DID YOU THINK I'D GIVE YOU UP FOR SUCH A CONSIDERATION?"

"DEAR WARING: I regret exceedingly that I troubled you with that former letter about my son. He did not sail for America, but secretly married the widow. The bad taste of the matrimonial affair still lingers bitter around my mouth, but there's no use worrying now, and our daughter-in-law is staying with us. By the way—"

Waring did not stop to turn over the page and finish the letter. He felt his hair rising, and an ague creeping down his back. Young Noel still abroad and married! Then what of this other man who bore his name, who had won Barbara. An adventurer? The thought was awful.

Twenty minutes later he rushed into Mrs. Waring's apartment, breathless, turbulent, the open letter still in his hand. The drawing-room was free of visitors. Mrs. Col. Waring reclined by the open fire absorbed in a book, while half way down the room Barbara sat radiant, talking with Noel. Waring felt like springing upon the young villain for holding the girl's hand, but restrained himself, because such a course would be unwise as well as lacking in dignity. Still his anger increased with every stride he took forward into the room. Mrs. Waring sprang nimbly to her feet.

"Good heavens! Tom, what's the matter?"

"The devil's to pay," he cried fiercely. "That man is a—a—the Lord only knows what," his voice failing him, one finger pointed at Noel.

"What is the matter?" inquired the young man also rising.

"Matter, sir, matter, you ask me the matter? Read that and you'll find out. Oh, it shows you up well," thrusting the letter into his hand. Mrs. Waring looked on in disgust, disquieted and yet firm. Noel read the letter hastily, his face clearing. He remembered Waring as he had first seen him and thought he comprehended the situation.

"You are a little excited now," he said pleasantly, even amusedly. "I think you must have missed part of this letter. It explains the situation pretty well, and—and—" he broke into a hearty laugh. "I feel very much as though I had stepped out of a pink-bound story book. He has mistaken my identity, Barbara, he has mistaken it quite seriously."

There was a twinkle in his eye, but he noted with surprise that Barbara's face wore an expression of puzzled anxiety. Waring began reading the letter aloud. "By the way"—he read beginning where he had left off—"my nephew, Allen's son, writes me that he has settled in New York and knows you as well as some of your relatives. I hope he'll be more successful in his art than his father was in business. Poor Allen, you must remember what a dreamy, impractical fellow he was." Waring paused, feeling decidedly blank. Noel's face softened to tenderness. "Poor father! We felt satisfied with each other. We didn't care for the money; you would have loved him, Barbara." Then he looked again at her. "Oh, pardon me, I did not think. Of course I have only my art, and three thousand a year, not much to live upon. But I didn't realize, I didn't know the money might make a difference to you. How blind and selfish of me. Under the circumstances it is more than needless for me to explain to you how free you are—Miss Waring."

The coals dropped softly in the grate. Between rage and disappointment Mrs. Col. Waring had been almost paralyzed. But the attitude of her daughter consoled her, and Noel's words were like balm to her heart.

"You have at least earned the good will of both Barbara and me by appreciating the situation so perfectly," she finally said, addressing him. "I shall always consider you a friend of the family, one of our best friends, in fact," her tone beginning to take on a tinge of effusiveness. "Barbara is such a sensible girl I have never felt any anxiety about her. This is a severe test—but I am proud of you both."

No one responded to her little speech. Twilight seemed to turn suddenly black, and even Mrs. Waring shivered slightly and drew her black lace scarf more closely about her.

"That fire is dying down, I must ring for coal," she remarked. "I wonder that Maria doesn't come in to light the gas," as a wavering yellow gleam wandered in from the street lamp. "I hope we shall still see you when you—you feel like dropping in for a cup of tea, Mr. Noel."

But Barbara sprang to her feet as Noel started for the door. Her face crimsoned, her eyes glistened mistily.

"You don't think that such a trivial consideration as money could come between us, do you, Jasper? You are"—her voice was beginning to quiver and break. "Why, you are unworthy of my love, almost, if that is the way you take me. You know, you must know, that my lot lies with yours, whatever—"

It was plain that she could not say any more just then for tears, but she was resting against him and he stroked her hair with the soft tender touch we reserve for children and people most precious to us, holding her fast and close.

"I understand," he whispered from the depths of his content, "I understand."

The Monmouth Park association will hold a race meeting of twelve days some time in August of this year, if reports be true, which will be a novelty in New Jersey, as it is expected to have the races without the usual auxiliary of bookmaking.

The American people want war. It doesn't matter much in what direction the guns are pointed so that they are fired off and make a noise. Spain, England, Russia, anybody or any country will do, just so there is death, devastation and carnage. The American people are ready to fly at the throats of somebody.—Kansas City Times.

The United States ought to have Cuba, of course. It is of more importance than Alaska and would probably be less trouble to the general government than Louisiana. But let us go about acquiring, if we are to acquire it at all, with a knowledge of all the facts. Cuba has a population of 1,500,000, a great many of them Spaniards, and a debt of $225,000,000. If Spain would cede us Cuba minus incumbrances we ought to take it and esteem it an excellent bargain.—New York Advertiser.

"Pooh!" replied that good woman, "you wouldn't know work if you were to find it."

RECEPTION AND FAIR.

Women of All Souls Church Conducting a Pleasant Affair

The lecture room of All Souls Church presented a scene yesterday afternoon that was in perfect harmony with the Summer atmosphere of the outer world. The occasion was the reception and sale of the Plainfield Branch of Unitarian and Other Liberal Christian Women, which is continued this afternoon and evening for the purpose of raising funds for the church.

The lecture room looked very inviting with rugs on the floor, and booths and tables tastefully arranged on the three sides, whereon are displayed the saleable articles.

On entering one turns to the right, and there is confronted with a table filled with household articles of practical value, presided over by Mrs H B Wells, Mrs D P Hall, Miss E R Reynolds and Miss C A Barker.

Next comes the flower booth, which is resplendent with blossoms and green foliage, sending forth a sweet fragrance and adding an air of floral splendor to the surroundings. This booth was in charge of Mrs Hobart Clark, Miss Carrie Haviland and Miss Anna Haviland.

The adjoining table is where sweet confections are weighed out to the welcome clink of silver, by maidens prettily gowned and of smiling countenance, Miss Maud Safford, Miss Beatrice Safford and Miss Stephane Krom.

Fancy work, made by deft fingers, lay on the last table, and its qualities are extolled by Mrs W F Adams, Miss M B Browne, Mrs Charles Barnard, Mrs Edgar Mulford and Mrs F H Hebard.

In a side room, light refreshments are daintily served by Mrs C W Conklin, Mrs R L Leonard, Miss Dorothy Wells and Marion Safford.

On the first of May we shall begin publication of a remarkable detective story from the pen of PARK BENJAMIN, the well known scientist and civil engineer. It is a tale of the present day, and we guarantee that anyone who begins it will read it to the end. For ingenuity of plot and deftness of literary treatment, this story is remarkable.

Don't fail to read how the great city of New York fell into the peril of sudden destruction, from which it was finally rescued after a series of decidedly interesting adventures.

Dismissed But Not Discontinued.

The in tort case of Blair against Douglass was dismissed a few days ago by Justice Newcorn on the motion of Judge Coddington, attorney for Blair. The action was brought to recover damages for injury to a horse and cutter, which Douglass rented of the Metropolitan Livery last Winter, and which, through alleged careless driving, ensued from a runaway. The case was dismissed by reason of the complaint being faulty in wording, by naming Adam Blair as the only one interested in the livery business, whereas Frank Day also is interested. A new complaint was issued, the title of which is Adam Blair and Frank Day, partners, as A. C. Blair against Douglass. Under this correction the case will be prosecuted.

The Amateur Theatricals.

Applications for tickets for "A Russian Honeymoon" are steadily coming in, and are filed in the order of their arrival. All those whose applications are received before tomorrow night may expect their tickets on Monday. The management is happy to announce that by dint of care in arranging the seats, everyone who has applied so far has been given exactly what he asked for.

The diagram, which is to be at Reynolds's pharmacy next week, will show people exactly what seats they may expect to get. It may be mentioned that among the very best seats in the house are those in the first two rows in the balcony, and similar seats in the orchestra circle; the latter are nearly all spoken for.

Applications either sent to Lock Box 644 or left at Reynolds's will receive prompt attention.

Considering Truancy Too.

At the meeting of the District Committee of the Citizens Organized Aid Association last evening, the agent reported four new cases, making 449 cases to date. The question of the attendance of children at school was raised and the duty and obligation of parents discussed; also the power of the truant officers to compel attendance. Cases of public begging were reported, on which due action was taken.

RAILROAD SPEED RECORD BROKEN.

Special Train Over the Pennsylvania Double Lines to the Sea, Annihilates Time.

The magnificent physical condition of the Pennsylvania Railroad's Double Lines to Atlantic City was fully attested April 21, in the splendid run made by the special train from Philadelphia to Atlantic City. The train put out of the slip at Market street wharf at 5:30 a. m. precisely, and fifty-one and one-half minutes thereafter came to a stop in Atlantic City station.

The train left the station in Camden six and a quarter minutes after the departure from the Philadelphia side, so that the actual running time was only forty-five and three-quarter minutes. The distance by this route is fifty-eight and three-tenths miles, and the average speed was seventy-six and one-half miles per hour. This is the fastest time ever made between the Delaware and the Atlantic Ocean, and is actually the fastest time ever made by any railroad train for the distance. From Winslow to Absecon, twenty-four and nine-tenths miles, an average speed of eighty-three miles per hour was maintained.

The fastest single mile was made in forty-one seconds, which is an average of eighty-seven and eight-tenths miles per hour.

This is the most notable performance in railroad speed which has yet been recorded. It could not be accomplished without the aid of the best and the most substantial roadbed, the finest modern equipment, and the skilful management of experienced men.

No portion of the Pennsylvania system, off the world-famous main line, is superior to the division over which this phenomenal run was made. The track is laid with heavy steel rails on stone ballast, a great part of which has been renewed during the past Winter, and the movement of trains is protected by block signals. The equipment has been greatly improved by the addition of locomotives of the highest standard and handsome coaches and parlor cars.

These facts are of peculiar interest in view of the great traffic which the Summer will bring to this popular route.

The management is fully alive to the demand for the best accommodations and the quickest time consistent with safety, and the Summer schedule will undoubtedly present the largest number of the best equipped and fastest trains ever enjoyed by the travelers between the Delaware and the ocean.

AN UP-TO-DATE HOTEL.

Councilman Westphal's Maiden Production as a Playwright.

The Daily Press predicted that "An Up-to-Date Hotel" would be a success, and last night at its presentation by the members of Miantonomoh tribe of Red Men this was verified. The piece was a farce, and was written and arranged by Wm. Westphal, and displayed considerable dramatic skill. It was in two acts into which was mixed a number of specialties by the various performers.

The first act represented the office of the hotel, the proprietor of which was impersonated by Wm. Newcorn, who had an assistant in the person of "Nig", a porter, acted by Harry Dreier.

The action of the piece was kept going in a busy and entertaining way in the first act by the arrival, registering and rooming of guests. A tramp character by William Westphal added a bit of burlesque to the comedy parts and kept the audience in constant laughter. In the last part of the first act Mr. Westphal changed his character and appeared as an Irish gentleman.

The second act was made up almost entirely of the specialties, which were as follows: Banjo and guitar duet—William Force and Harry Dreier; recitations from Lady of Lyons—Wm Newcorn; Burlesque on legerdemain—Wm Westphal; recitation—The Telephone, Miss Lehman of Newark.

After the farce the floor was cleared and dancing enjoyed.

Another New Bicycle Store.

Park avenue near Fourth street will soon be termed Bicycle Row. The Eldridge Bicycle Company last night signed a lease for the store in the Miller Building, corner of Park avenue and East Fourth street, and will open a sales, rental and storage branch there. This will make three bicycle stores clustered together in that section.

MISS SMITH'S MUSICALE.

She and Her Friends and Pupils Provide a Delightful Concert.

An appreciative audience was present at the W. C. T. U. rooms last evening to enjoy the piano recital given by Miss Alice O. Smith, pianist, of Newark, assisted by Mrs. M. Albert Davis, Miss M. Elizabeth Davis, vocalists, of Cranford, and Miss Smith's pupils, the Misses Reilly, Kennan, Firstbrook, Alice Quinn, Kittie Quinn, and Millie Tyrrell.

The programme opened with the "Overture to Zampa" by Lattenberg, by Misses Alice and Kittie Quinn, Reilly and Firstbrook. Two pianos were used, the rendition and precision being most excellent. Rigoletto (Opera de Verdi) by Billem, was finely rendered by Misses Smith and Kittie Quinn. Mrs. M. Albert Davis then gave a soprano solo "When the Heather is in Bloom". She has a remarkably well trained voice, and her singing was enjoyed exceedingly.

"La Belle Amazon", Loeschhorn, Opus 25, by Miss Kittie Quinn, was well executed, and showed that the selection had been well-taught and studied. A charming Menuet, by Berthold Toure, was exceedingly well rendered by Misses Smith and Millie Tyrrell. The last selections in part first, Soldiers Chorus from Gounod's Faust, and Serenade from opera Don Giovanni, were played by Misses Alice and Kittie Quinn, Reilly and Firstbrook, and gave evidence of thorough study by the pupils.

In part second the same four pupils rendered the overture from the opera of Martha, as an opening selection, and it was much enjoyed.

A selection abounding in life was "Mazeppa" by Wollenhaupt, and the skill with which Misses Alice and Kittie Quinn interpreted it was noteworthy.

A vocal duet, "Cheerfulness", by Gumbert, was thoroughly appreciated as sung by Mrs. Davis and Miss Davis, and in response to an encore another very pretty selection was given.

Miss Kittie Quinn then gave "Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 2", by Liszt, and the rendition was remarkable for the very fine execution in every detail.

A duet (Spielmann's Standchew) by Joseph Low, was an enjoyable number by Misses Reilly and Keenan, as was also Liszt's Faust Waltze by Misses Smith, Reilly, Alice Quinn and Kittie Quinn.

A soprano solo (Cavatina—The Huguenots), by Meyerbeer, was given by Mrs. Davis in a delightful manner, and an encore was demanded.

The programme closed with the selections "Spanishee Tange" and "Dance of the Fairies", by Misses Alice Quinn, Kittie Quinn, Reilly and Firstbrook.

The entire affair was enjoyable, and Miss Smith is deserving of much credit and high praise for the very choice programme. Her playing throughout was appreciated, and frequent hearty applause was given.

IT WAS GOOD LAW.

But Somehow or Other It Didn't Fit the Case in Hand.

The contract case of W. C. Smith against James Rogers was tried before Justice Nash yesterday afternoon. The plaintiff was suing for $100 for work done and materials furnished on the construction of the Cranford Opera-house, of which the defendant is owner.

The work and materials were ordered by the architect, Mr. Lent, and the plaintiff claimed that Lent was acting as agent for Rogers. On the contrary, the defendant said that he had never authorized Lent to make any such contract. The case was aggressively conducted by the attorneys of both sides, Fred A. Pope of Somerville for the plaintiff and George H. Bruce of Cranford for the defendant.

After the testimony of the plaintiff had been finished, Attorney Bruce made a motion for a nonsuit on the ground that the evidence they had produced was not sufficient to substantiate their claim.

Lawyer Pope, who is new in the profession, made an eloquent reply in arguing against the motion, and quoted law which Justice Nash said "was very good law, but he could n't see how it fitted the case under consideration".

At the conclusion Justice Nash granted the motion for a non-suit, at which the young lawyer said with a flourish of his arms: "All right, sir".

The Price of Shoes.

In an interview with Mr. Doane of the Commercial Palace shoe department, The Press is informed that the price of leather is climbing higher all the time, and although it has not affected the retail price with them as yet, as they order their Spring and Summer stock as early as January, it will affect the price of Fall and Winter goods, unless there is a drop by July 1.

EUTERPE'S FIRST.

A Casino Audience Enjoys an Excellent Programme.

The first entertainment of the Euterpe Literary and Musical Society was given last evening in the Union County Country Club Casino. It was entirely unconventional, but an enthusiastic audience enjoyed it thoroughly, and rendered generous applause to the performers, most of whom are residents of this city. The friends of the society were present in full force, and nothing that deserved hearty commendation escaped their appreciation.

The programme was varied, and included piano playing, six hands, by Mrs. Korff and the Misses Vordermeier; singing by Miss F. May Grant; instrumental music by the "Musical Russells" and Hugh J. Emmett, and violin and piano selections by Masters George Smith and Oscar Smith. Miss Lillian A. Force accompanied Miss Grant on the piano.

The piano overture, "Le Calelf de Bagdade", by Mrs. Korff and the Misses Vordermeier, opened the evening's programme in a brilliant manner, and was unquestionably more finished in execution than the later selection by the same young women.

Messrs. Emmett and Martyne were intensely humorous in their musical and character specialties, and the "Musical Russells" surpassed any like pair that ever appeared in the Casino.

The violin solo by Master Smith gave evidence of considerable inherent talent and careful training. He played bravely enough for so young a lad before such a large audience, and well deserved the encore which his delighted hearers demanded of him. His brother's accompaniment was excellent support.

Entre Nous Club at Whist.

The Entre Nous Whist Club enjoyed another very pleasant evening, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Waldrof of La Grande avenue last night. The evening passed away very enjoyably with the usual three tables of players, after which ice-cream and cake with cooling drinks were very acceptable after a close contest through the advance guard of a Summer's night.

Those fortunate in capturing prizes were Mrs. Will F. Williams and Fred Cutter first prizes; Mrs. Scribner of Pennsylvania and Will F. Williams the consolation prizes.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Fred Cutter, Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong Mulford, Mr. and Mrs. McClintock, Mr. and Mrs. Will F. Williams, Judge and Mrs. William A. Coddington, Mrs. Scribner of Pennsylvania, Mr. and Mrs. Waldrof and Miss Waldrof.

A Plainfielder's Success.

T. H. Hardy, formerly of Plainfield of the firm of Howell & Hardy, and for two years past with the wholesale grocery house of Heissenbuttel, Nearing & Co., Brooklyn, has accepted an important position with Austin, Nichols & Co. of Hudson and Jay streets, New York, and will begin service with that large wholesale house Wednesday, May 1. Not only is the change a material advantage to himself, meriting the congratulations of his friends, but also the house is to be congratulated in securing the services of so honest, reliable and worthy a young man. Mr. Hardy's new situation is a responsible one, and his services are sure to secure such high regard with his new employers as to make him a permanent factor in their business.

Death of John M. Board.

John M. Board, once a leader of the Whig party, died Wednesday in Metuchen, aged seventy-eight years. In 1855 he was offered the nomination for President by the Whigs, but refused it. He lived many years in Hoboken. In 1854 he was elected to the Assembly from Hudson County. During the war he equipped several companies at his own expense.

Our better halves say they could not keep house without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is used in more than half the homes in Leeds, Sims Bros., Leeds, Iowa. This shows the esteem in which that remedy is held where it has been sold for years and is well known. Mothers have learned that there is nothing so good for colds, croup and whooping cough, that it cures these ailments quickly and permanently, and that it is pleasant and safe for children to take. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. THE POLICE DEFENDED.

Counselor Stillman Shows that the Slanderous Attack upon Them Is Unwarranted.

Columns of abuse of the Plainfield police force were printed yesterday by another paper which has long been devoted to that sort of thing, and it was made to appear that the reason that the First National Bank officials did not immediately report the robbery to the police was because the police could not be trusted to handle such a case.

Counselor Wm. M. Stillman of the bank this morning utterly repudiated the statements.

"The lapse of time between the robbery and its discovery"—said Mr. Stillman—"gave us no hope of recovering the money. Had we any hope, we most certainly would have consulted Chief Grant immediately. The reason we finally went to see Superintendent Byrnes was because Bank Examiner Stone advised us to, as Mr. Byrnes would be likely to know what gang was engaged in such work and could take measures to protect other banks. We had no hope that Superintendent Byrnes could help us. We have not intended nor desired to cast any reflection on the local police, and should not have acted other than we did, no matter who was at the head of the police department."

Cashier Runyon told a Daily Press reporter this afternoon that nothing new had developed regarding the robbery.

May Have Baseball.

Physical Director MacPhie this morning told a Daily Press reporter that the Y. M. C. A. athletics had not yet totally abandoned the plan of organizing a baseball team. Mr. MacPhie is endeavoring to make arrangements with the Crescent Wheelmen for the use of their grounds, and if satisfactory terms are agreed on, the team will probably be put in the field.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. SHE FEARS AN UPRISING

Japan Replies to the Protest of Russia.

Her Own People Would Not Submit —Russia, Nevertheless, Adheres Firmly to Her Demands—Confidence Felt in Assurances Given by England and the United States.

London April 26.—The Morning Post has this dispatch from St. Petersburg: "Japan has replied to the joint protest of Russia, France and Germany. She declares that if she should yield she would be exposed to the danger of an uprising of the people. This reply does not affect Russia's attitude. She adheres firmly to her demands.

Not Apprehensive.

London, April 26.—The Central News correspondent in Tokio says the Japanese watch with keen interest the course of the European powers regarding the Shimonoseki treaty. He finds that the Japanese diplomatists are not particularly apprehensive of the outcome. The refusal of England to act in concert with Russia, Germany and France has encouraged the Japanese to believe that no strong single police can be agreed on by the countries that feel their interests in the east are threatened by the terms of the peace. Germany is thought to be but half-hearted in her co-operation with France and Russia, if such co-operation has been secured. Much confidence is felt in the assurances of good feeling given by Great Britain and the United State .

Russian Intervention Inevitable.

The last dispatches from St. Petersburg are hardly in harmony with the sanguine views held in Tokio. Prince Uchtomoky, who accompanied the present czar on his tour in the east, has written a long communication to the Moscow Viedomosti explaining the threatening features of the situation in the orient. He declares that Russian intervention is inevitable. It would be criminal neglect, he thinks, if Russia were to allow Japan to menace Russia's interests in east Asia as is contemplated in the Shimonoseki treaty.

Fears Bloodshed Will Be Necessary.

He expresses the fear that bloodshed will be necessary before Japan's aggressive spirit can be checked. He regards the Japanese as intoxicated with the completeness of their victory, and determined to force upon the rest of the world a policy which all nations having great interests in east Asia must frustrate, by peaceful means if possible, but otherwise by the sword.

A Threat to England.

In commenting upon these opinions the Viedomosti says that if England persists in supporting Japan against other European powers, Russia will retaliate by opening the Pamirs question. The Central News correspondent in Rome says he learns from good authority that Austria and Italy have decided not to interfere in the east and will not take part in any European congress convoked to revise the terms of peace.

Germany Wants To Act for Japan.

London, April 26.—The Morning Post's correspondent in Berlin hints that Germany possibly will propose to occupy Wei-Hai-Wei or some other Chinese port in Japan's interest until China shall pay the war indemnity.

There has been little rain for thirty days in that section. The trees are as dry as tinder, and without rain a repetition of the calamity of last year is considered inevitable.

DURRANT'S DEFENSE.

Will Try To Show That Rev. Dr. Gibson Committed the Murders.

San Francisco, April 26.—The defense in the Emanuel church murder case believes that it has a case against the Rev. Dr. Gibson and it will, it is said, try to show that he, and not Durrant, killed Miss Williams and Miss Lamont. It was in support of this theory that Dr. Gibson was asked to give Durrant's counsel specimens of his writing yesterday. George Monteith, a well known attorney, discovered what led to this line of investigation. On the morning after the finding of Minnie Williams' body the Call published a fac simile of names written on the margin of paper sent around the rings and returned to the dead girl's aunt, Mrs. Noble. Monteith is an expert on handwriting and says he discovered peculiarities in the writing which showed that both was by the same hand. He reported his discovery to Durrant's counsel and it is said their investigations have satisfied them that Durrant's case has received a great deal of strength from it.

AMERICAN SAILORS RELEASED.

The United Press correspondent interviewed both sailors. They told a perfectly straightforward story. They were caught in a gale off Hayti and were swept over to the Cuban coast.

TROOPS LANDED TO-DAY

British Admiral in Command at Corinto.

An Unofficial Dispatch from London Says the Occupation of the Guatamalan Capital Was Begun This Morning—The United States Said To Approve of England's Action.

Washington, April 26.—An unofficial dispatch from London this morning says that Vice-Admiral Stephenson, in command of the British fleet at Corinto, Nicaragua, began the landing of troops at 6 o'clock this morning, according to the notification which he sent to the Nicaraguan government.

Fully Agreed.

London, April 26.—Inquiries made today at the United States embassy here confirm the statement contained in these dispatches that Great Britain and the United States are fully agreed as to the former's course of action in enforcing her demands upon Nicaragua.

British Admiral's Plans.

Washington, April 26.—Advices received here last night said that Vice-Admiral Stephenson, in command of the British fleet at Corinto, had given Nicaragua detailed information as to the time and circumstances of the proposed landing of British troops. The admiral said he would consider the time of grace to run until 12 o'clock midnight last night, and that he would not begin the landing of troops during the night. He fixed 6 o'clock this morning as the precise time when the British forces would move.

Pauncefote Left Out.

The exactness of the notification is in line with the notice of the British admiral before the bombardment of Alexandria. He fixed 7 a. m. as the time for opening fire, at which time to a minute the action began. It can be stated on authority that Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British ambassador, has not communicated in any way with Secretary Gresham on the Nicaraguan question, and that he has received no advices from his home government on this subject. All exchanges of communication between Great Britain and the United States respecting Nicaragua have been conducted through the British Foreign office and Ambassador Bayard, while on all points in which Great Britain alone is concerned, the changes have been between British Minister Gosling and his home government.

Uncle Sam is Interested.

It is intimated by some officials, in explanation of the harmony existing between the United States and Great Britain on the question of enforcing the British ultimatum, that the United States itself has an interest in the success of the British attempt to collect the indemnity, being about to make a demand on Honduras for indemnity for the murder of the American Benton, and the destruction of his estate there last spring, and also to move on Guatemala for reparation for the illtreatment of a number of Americans by government officials.

British Press Comment.

London, April 26.—The Daily News will say to-day: "The United States are bound to be jealous of foreign interference with the small republics of their continent. Nicaragua evidently has been under the impression that she could take advantage of this, and it must have been an unpleasant surprise so find that the United States did not intend to intervene, but even approved of Great Britain's demands. Perhaps at the last moment Nicaragua will be wise enough to yield."

France Has Grievances.

London, April 26.—The Daily News correspondent in Paris says: "The British ultimatum to Nicaragua is strongly approved here. France's own relations to the South American republics have been very unsatisfactory lately. She has sent an ultimatum to San Domingo and probably will send another to Venezuela.

THE BLUES.

Why do Women have the Blues more than Men?

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Are not women naturally as light-hearted, brave, and hopeful as men? Yes; but woman's organism is different from man's.

Women in perfect or good health are rarely victims of this symptom. Women nearly monopolize the blues, because their peculiar ailments promote them.

When the female organs fail to perform their functions properly, when the dreaded female complaints appear, there is shown nervousness, sleeplessness, faintness, backache, headache, bearing-down pains, etc., causing the dreaded "let-me-alone" and "all-gone" feelings.

When the woman does not understand what the matter is, and her doctor can not or will not tell her, she grows morose and melancholy; that's the blues.

Mrs. Newton Cobb, of Manchester, O., says: "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will correct all this trouble. I cannot praise it enough. I am pleased to tell every one that it cured me; and if it will cure me, why not others? I am sure my case was severe enough." It will. Get it of your druggist at once.

DIPHTHERIA

Too many homes bear this fear-inspiring placard, denoting the prevalence of that most insidious and dreaded of all diseases—Diphtheria.

It is to-day a recognized fact among the best practitioners that nine out of ten cases formerly considered hopeless may be brought to a happy termination by the use of that great original raw food product,

Bovinine.

This great blood-generating, life-maintaining, strength-developing, and flesh-producing product of lean, raw meat, contains the greatest amount of life-preserving qualities in the least possible bulk of any preparation known.

In cases of Diphtheria, Bovinine has special advantages. In this disease, as in others, the rapidity with which it is assimilated gives to it a preference over all other foods, passing, as it does, into the system immediately, without causing the digestive organs to perform any labor. And considering the fact that the lesions in the throat prevent the swallowing of solid food, it becomes an absolute necessity. In the worst cases, where even liquids cannot be taken by the mouth, Bovinine by being used as an injection. Above all, Bovinine is in itself a germicide, and in all such diseases as Diphtheria, caused by microbes, it not only performs its greatest mission of maintaining life, but antidotes the existing bacilli.

Bovinine has done wonders in thousands of cases of Diphtheria. When your doctor uses it you may cease to worry, and be assured of a speedy recovery. To neglect its use may mean years of remorse in the feeling that some loved one might still be with you if everything possible had been done. Bovinine is sold by all Druggists.

HERE TO TALK POLITICS

Spain's New Minister Tells of His Mission.

Believes the Cuban Insurrection Will Soon Be Put Down—Spain To Send Over 24,000 Troops in All—Only 4,000 Rebels—Great Faith in Gen. Campos.

New York, April 26.—Senor Duputy de Lome, the new Spanish minister, was still in the city this morning and said that he would remain to await the arrival of his family before going to Washington. He is a short, well-built man with black hair that is beginning to be shot with gray. He wears a pointed beared, trimmed closely, and speaks English fluently, but with a marked French accent. When seen by a reporter this morning the minister seemed very anxious to deny the story that he had spoken unpleasantly of the American press.

Politics His Mission.

"My mission to America is to talk politics to the authorities at Washington," the minister said. "As for the matter of the firing upon the steamer Allianca I have nothing to say; it seems already to have been satisfactorily settled. I must say, however, that I think it would have been wiser for the captain of the Allianca to have stopped when he was requested to do so, and then sought indemnity for detention afterwards.

Spain's Military Plans.

"Concerning Gen. Campos and his proposed plans, I think it is worthy of note, as a characteristic of the excellent soldier and tactician that he is, how little he has said since his arrival in Cuba. The general is a most loyal and patriotic man. He has nothing to gain by the present campaign. It is his policy to be as lenient as possible with the insurrectionists except in the case of the leaders. These will be most severely dealt with. The government proposes to send to Cuba 24,000 men in all before the first of May. With this force there can be no doubt as to the fate of the insurrectionists.

No Buying Off This Time.

"General Campos has with him two of his sons, Miguel, the Marquis of Razzan, who holds the rank of first lieutenant, and Jozef, a second lieutenant. Statements have been published that the money General Campos brought with him was for the purpose of buying off the leaders of the revolution. It is well known that this was done during the last insurrection in Cuba, but the government has no intention of pursuing such a policy in the present instance. The revolution is to be stamped out by force of arms.

Strength of the Insurgents.

"Estimates by conservative men who have been among the revolutionary forces place the number of them at about 3,000, not more than one-half of whom are armed and equipped. We estimate their number at about 4,000 with the armed proportion. It is a difficult matter to get a correct idea of their numbers, for one day many of them will be at work on the crops and the next day they are off on a skirmishing expedition. Four thousand, however, is certainly a liberal estimate; and they are of a class that would scarcely be taken seriously in America.

Spanish Fleet in Cuban Waters.

"At present there are eight modern Spanish war vessels in Cuban waters. Seven of these are second class cruisers, and one of the first class. The ship I came over on with General Campos was the Reina Maria Cristina, the vessel in which the Princess Eulalie came to this country. It is not intended, I think, to send any more ships to Cuba."

Campos at Havana.

Havana, April 26.—The steamship Villaverda arrived here at 10 o'clock last night with Gen. Martinez de Campos and his suite. The streets were decorated and illuminated and thousands gathered near the docks to greet the new captain-general.

LEAPED FROM WINDOWS.

Several Persons Fatally Injured at a Fire in Montreal.

Montreal, April 26.—Shortly after 6 o'clock last evening flames were discovered in MacDonald's tobacco factory, the largest of its kind in Canada, covering several acres of ground on Ontario street, in Hochelaga, a suburb of this city. The fire which started in the tower of the main building, made rapid progress and in a short time the whole upper portion of the building was in flames. The place was crowded with employes, many of them girls who were finishing their day's work and preparing to leave for their homes.

Jumped from Windows.

Exit was cut off and many of the girls had to jump from the upper floors to save their lives. Ambulances were called and several girls were removed to the hospital badly injured. The fire was not under control until 1 o'clock this morning. Eleven persons were brought to the hospitals suffering from injuries sustained by jumping. They are Delphis Caput, Napoleon Blonin, Fireman Joseph Gagon, Zeraphin Senet, Rosanna Beauchamp, Adele Fontin, Alphonse Thibaudeau, Etienne Guillmette, May Celinas and Mary Peirier. No one was killed outright, or burned to death, but most of those named in the list of injured will die. The loss to the building is about $250,000, with no insurance.

JOINT ACTION PROPOSED.

Howorth Thinks We Should Act with England in the East.

London, April 26.—Sir Henry H. Howorth, M. P., has written a letter to the Times, in which he declares that it is to the interest of England to formulate a common policy with the United States in regard to the far east. The Pall Mall Gazette approves the ideas expressed by Sir Henry Howorth, and says: "America has received many marks of respect from China and Japan, and joint diplomatic action with the United States would prevent stronger action on the part of others. Our stake upon every side of the Pacific, in China, Canada and Australia forbids us to remain passive."

Li Hung Chang's Views.

Cologne, April 26.—The Koelnische Zeitung has a special dispatch from Tien-Tsin, which states that Li Hung Chang recently, in the course of an interview with foreign diplomats, expressed surprise at the large proportion of the European press taking the side of Japan. The viceroy declared that it would be a long time before Japan would permit Europeans to share in her markets. The Zeitung adds that all the Europeans trading in the far east share in the opinion expressed by the returned Chinese envoy.

BILL COOK IN ALBANY.

Arrival of the Outlaw and Twelve Manacled Companions.

Albany, April 26.—"Bill" Cook, the famous outlaw, arrived in this city last evening with twelve other notorious convicts, sent here from the west. They were immediately transferred to the Albany penitentiary, where Cook is to serve a term of 45 years. The prisoners were conveyed in the prison van and one of the old Delevan stages. They attracted a good deal of attention as they rode through the streets to the penitentiary, which is situated in the extreme western section. They still wore their wild loking western costumes. The men were chained together and guarded by armed men.

ENGLAND WILL NOT INTERFERE

She Can't Appeal to the United States About Hawaii.

London, April 26.—Sir Thomas Esmonde asked in the house of commons last night if Hawaii was under the protection of the United States, and if the government could not be approached with a view of obtaining proper treatment for ex-Queeen Liliuokalani. Sir Edward Gray, under foreign secretary, said that Hawaii was not under the protection of the United States, and therefore no application could be made to the Washington government.

SATOLLI GOING TO ROME

Said That the Papal Ablegate May Not Return.

The Climate of America Does Not Agree with Him—Believed That He Will Be Made a Cardinal—His Secretary Denies That Satolli Is Preparing To Leave.

Washington, April 26.—Notwithstanding Dr. Rookers's statement that Mgr. Satolli cannot return to Rome without the consent of Pope Loe, and that the ablegate has not asked permission to return, and further that he has engagements extending into the middle of June, the assertion that Mgr. Satolli is making arrangements for departure comes from a source which hardly admits of contradiction. It is understood that Cardinal Gibbons will sail on the same steamer.

May Not Return.

During Mgr. Satolli's absence Mgr. Sharretti, auditor of the legation, will, it is understood, have charge of its affairs. While the departure of the papal ablegate is ostensibly on leave of absence, it is doubtful if he will ever return. His health has suffered in America from climatic reasons. It is expected that he will be raised to the cardinalate at the next consistory. What his future mission will be is unknown, but there is a rumor that he may to go Portugal, the climate of Lisbon being agreeable to him.

Probable Successor.

The present nuncio to Holland is regarded as the probable successor to Mgr. Satolli in Washington. It is understood that Crrdinal Gibbons has been meditating a trip to Rome for some time. He was requested to postpone his visit until May, that he might accompany Mgr. Satolli. Upon his arrival at Rome, Mgr. Satolli will be presented with a suitable testimonial by the propaganda, it is said, expressing their thanks for the successful manner in which he has fulfilled his mission. He considers that his work in America has been practically brought to a point where another may undertake successfully to continue it. Mgr. Satolli's course has met the unqualified approval of the pope and the propaganda. Knowing this to be the case he has passed unmoved through a storm of criticisms and attacks.

100 REBELS REPULSED.

Twenty-two Spanish Soldiers Rewarded for Defending a Town.

Santiago de Cuba, April 26.—One hundred insurgents under Ramirez Lozano attacked Dos Caminos, eighteen or twenty miles from here, last Saturday. There were twenty-two Spanish soldiers in the town. They stood together and kept up a steady fire on the storming party until Lozano gave up the attack and beat a hasty retreat with his men. The insurgents lost seven killed and fourteen wounded. General Salcedo, commander-in-chief of the troops in this province, has given medals to the twenty-two who defended the town.

CROWNS HIS AMBITION.

Gen. Merritt Receives Many Messages of Congratulation.

St. Paul, Minn., April 26.—Congratulations came by telegraph, by note and personally, to Gen. Wesley Merritt, the new appointee of the president as major-general. One of the telegrams read: "After all, republics are not ungrateful." "The appointment crowns my military ambition," said the new major-general. "For the present I shall remain here. In September, when Gen. Schofield retires, I shall probably go to Chicago and Gen. Ruger will probably be transferred to New York."

A $200,000 FORGERY.

It Is a Note Purporting To Have Been Signed by Millionaire Flood.

San Francisco, April 26.—A forged note for $200,000, signed by the late millionaire J. C. Flood, and indorsed W. W. Corcoran, of Washington Art gallery fame, has come to light here. The signatures are pronounced perfect, and the note is believed to have been forged by a man in New York. He is believed to be the same man who made J. G. Fair's note for $300,000, indorsed by Leland Stanford.

Gas Explosion at Boston.

Boston, April 26.—A terrific gas explosion took place in the basement of Vercelli's saloon at the corner of Tamworth and Lagrange streets last night causing a damage of at least $1,000. A crowd of diners to the number of sixty escaped uninjured, with the exception of one man, who was but slightly burned. The explosion was due evidently to a leaky gas pipe.

TEA AND TABLEAUX.

Pretty Event in Grace M. E. Church.

Pretty tableaux, followed by a tea and reception, entertained a large audience in Grace M. E. Church last evening.

The first part of the programme was a series of tableaux entitled A Dream of Fair Women, by Tennyson. The characters in it were taken by the following: Helen of Troy—Miss Clara Steiner; Iphigenia—Miss Maggie Schuck; Cleopatra—Miss May MacDonald; Jeptha's Daughter—Miss Alice Loomis; Rosamond—Miss Carrie Tingley; Eleanor—Miss Mamie Steiner; Joan of Arc—Miss Grace Carroll; Saint Agnes—Miss Emma Stevens; Lady Clara and nurse—Miss Alice Carroll, Miss Emma Smalley.

The costumes were very tasteful, and added much to the beauty of the entertainment.

A piano duet by Miss Mabel Benner and Miss Ella Benner was next enjoyed. Horace J. Martin then rendered a vocal solo and Miss Emma Stevens gave a recitation. After a piano solo by Miss May Conroy, the second series of tableaux took place.

Seven scenes represented that well-known old story, of Under the Mistletoe Bough, where the young bride runs off to hide and becomes locked in an old chest. The bridegroom and all his friends hunt in vain, but after the lapse of many years the remains of the young bride are discovered. The part of the bride was taken by Miss May Schuck and the bridegroom by Frank Schuck. The other characters were taken by Miss Grace Carroll Miss Clara Steiner Miss May McDonald Miss Carrie Tingley, Raymond Carroll, Louie Hummer and Dick Winckler.

Mrs. T. W. Powell acted as pianist during the tableaux, which were arranged by Miss Anna Most, assisted by a very efficient committee.

John H. Carney was in charge of the calcium lights.

The tables were presided over by the following: Pink table—Mrs. Griffin; violet table—Mrs. Valiant; yellow table—Mrs. Most.

Those who remained after the programme was concluded enjoyed a period of social chat, while the young women of the church served refreshments.

The committee in charge certainly made a great success of the evening, and the whole affair reflects great credit on them.

The Eldridge Move.

The Eldridge Bicycle Co. of Newark, realizing that they were a little "out of the swim" at their old stand, 35 and 37 Somerset street, have signed a two-years lease for the store corner of Park avenue and Fourth street. They have not decided as yet whether they will still continue business at their old stand, or sublet, the lease not expiring until April next. They will carry a full line of Columbias and Hartfords; rent new wheels, and do fine repairing at moderate prices. Sundries will be sold at rock-bottom prices. It looks as though the Eldridge Bicycle Co. intend to have a first-class agency for Columbias regardless of expense. Their new store will be opened about May 1, and particulars of the opening will be announced in The Daily Press.

—A meeting of fire insurance men representing the leading companies in this city, will be held Friday morning May 3, at 10. Business of importance will be transacted.

—After much careful preparation Pharmacist J. H. Leggett has evolved the most delicious of all soda-water syrups, Royal Fruit, which, despite its lusciousness, retails at only 5 cents a glass.

George B. DeRevere, who fifteen years ago made the hotel a success, has resumed control of Hotel Albion and will open next week Wednesday. Mr. and Mrs. Marion Ackerman are the first guests booked. Mr. DeRevere will probably change the name to the Revere House, and will surely make it a most popular family hotel.

The press is the best instrument for enlightening the mind of man and improving him as a rational, moral and social being.—Thomas Jefferson.

MADE PENNIES COUNT

HOW THE INGENIOUS "KING OF FAKIRS" MADE A BIG FORTUNE.

Some of His Famous Ten Strikes. His Death Removes the Backbone of a Unique and Interesting Trade of New York Streets.

Gone is "Nat" Sanders, "King of the Fakirs" in the world in which he moved. Sanders amassed a handsome fortune in the peculiar business that earned for him the sobriquet of "King of the Fakirs.

There was less of the mourning about Sanders than there was of the small army of sidewalk merchants and venders of cheap boots, musical toys, puzzles, straw hats, rugs, songs and the thousand and one notions all mourn the loss of their friend.

Nat Sanders was a New York street fakirs' supplies merchant. He knew every reputable member of the craft, and was ever ready to stake him to an outfit of suitable goods.

His two stores on Ann street, the storm center of the business, were No. 158 Leonard street, have long been veritable curiosity shops. Sanders had an eye for bargains. He bought frequently the auction rooms, and it is said that when a notion house failed he would be found sitting on the front steps prepared to make an offer for the stock. Anything that could be sold, from baskets to gondolas, was always fish to his net.

Every morning the fakirs, whom he always referred to as "my boys," assembled at the Ann street place with their baskets, or on Leonard street with their push carts and received their goods. No cash deposit was required. The stock was carefully inventoried, and a retail price agreed upon. In the evening the fakirs returned with their unsold wares, and another inventory was taken, after which an exact division of the profits was made. An article inventoried at one cent usually sold for three cents.

The main stock was boundless in its variety. Fifty men might start out on a summer day to sell fans or straw hats. A rain storm would come up and the fakirs would hasten to the base of supplies and promptly secure armfuls of cheap umbrellas with which incoming excursionists would be met at the steamboat docks.

Always watchful of the peculiar markets which he supplied was Sanders. He on one occasion attended an auction sale of the effects of a magazine, now a great and prosperous concern, but which had troubles in its younger days, and bought 30,000 copies of the publication. It was his intention to put them on the streets at three cents a copy. Before he had completed his arrangements a man came to him and offered him $3,000 for what had cost him $300. Sanders afterward regretted this, for he learned that the purchaser had gone to parties who had arranged to revive the magazine and represented to them that the sale of old copies of the publication on the streets at three cents each would forever ruin future sales of the resurrected publication, thereby disposing of the lot to them for $10,000. Sanders never referred to this transaction with pride.

Early in the summer of 1882 the publishers of Puck got out a campaign novelty in the line of political playing cards, which were to sell at 25 cents a pack. Litigation tied up their sale until the very eve of election day. Sanders bought the entire stock of 30,000 packs at one cent a pack, and his agents sold out the lot at three cents within a week.

One of Sanders's coups was the purchase of a famous Japanese puzzle called the Zepo Boy for 90 cents a gross. The manufacturer had expected to get $7.50 a gross. Children were to be amused at 10 cents each. The fakirs gave them pleasure for one cent.

A syndicate at one time thought they had cornered all the poker chips in the country. Sanders somehow got hold of their supply of 5,000,000 vegetable ivory chips and his boys sold them for 12 cents a box. They had cost 15 cents to manufacture, and the combine had intended to sell them at 25 cents.

"It is to the "King of Fakirs" that the public owes the recent influx of cheap standard literature on Park Row. They are for the most part shop worn goods. One enormous lot was purchased at a fire sale. The edges were all smoke stained.

To his "boys" Sanders was ever generous with his purse when they were in trouble. As a bondsman he was in constant demand, when the police, seized with a sudden spasm of devotion to duty, made wholesale arrests for obstructing the streets.

He died rich, and the fakirs of Park Row lost their stanchest friend in him.

Took His Drink on the Premises.

One morning last week a woman living in one of the suburban districts of Philadelphia had the misfortune to be robbed of her milk can. She had placed it in its accustomed place on the front porch the night before, but the next morning there was only a little spilt milk on the floor where the can had stood, showing that the thief had come after the milkman's matutinal visit.

As there was no clew to the rogue, the lady provided herself with a new can, but was astonished the next day to find that it also had been taken. This was a little too much, and so, not wishing to go into the wholesale tin business, she procured a chain with a small padlock and securely fastened the next new can to the baluster. This scheme seemed to work all right for a few days, and the woman was satisfied that she had outwitted the thief at last.

Bright and early this morning, however, she heard a rattling of tin and a jingling of chains, and going out hastily was surprised beyond measure to see a little black-and-tan terrier with the open can tilted between his paws, helping himself to its contents as best he could, the milk trickling down his chops in the richest profusion. The little rascal, finding it impossible to carry the can away, had succeeded in removing the top and was getting at the "cream of the matter" right along.

Why He Was Punished.

Father (wishing to impress the lesson)—Now, my son, tell me why I punished you?

Son—That's it—you've pounded the life out of me, an' now you don't know what you done it for!

Matched.

He hastened away to the dentist's
And made that good worthy rejoice,
By ordering a false set of molars
To go with his falsetto voice.

A PASTOR'S RECEPTION.

Rev. Mr. O'Donnell Welcomed to Monroe Avenue Chapel.

A very pleasant reception was given to Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, the new pastor of the Monroe Avenue Chapel, last evening, by the Ladies' Aid Society of that church. Although the committee in charge was greatly disappointed by the nonappearance of the greater number of those who were to take part in the programme, yet all those present enjoyed a very pleasant evening.

After an opening hymn, Rev. Dr. C. R. Barnes of the First M. E. Church offered prayer, after which James McGee welcomed the new pastor with a few words of encouragement. Dr. Barnes also welcomed him to Plainfield and concluded by introducing Rev. Mr. O'Donnell to the assembly. J. R. Joy next gave a reading, "Armazindy", at the conclusion of which Mr. O'Donnell spoke a few words. He expressed his thanks for the kind words spoken to him and hoped to be able to co-operate with the church as well as to have their hearty co-operation with him in the great work that lay before them.

After partaking of refreshments provided by the Ladies' Aid Society, the congregation spent a pleasant hour in becoming better acquainted with their new pastor and each other.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, Druggist, Beaverville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at L. W. Randolph's drug store.

ONLY WOMAN CLOWN

JOSEPHINE EVETTA MATTHEWS TELLS ABOUT HER EVOLUTION.

She is One of Twenty-one Children Whose Parents Were Brought Up in the Ring. First Appearance When She Was Five Weeks Old. An All Round Acrobat.

Josephine Evetta Matthews, the only woman clown in the world, creates somewhat of a sensation when she enters the center ring at Barnum & Bailey's circus. She is assisted by the only woman ringmaster in the United States.

Miss Matthews said to a woman reporter who was admitted to her dressing room:

"There were thirteen boys and eight girls in our family. Six of my sisters and I used to do the acrobatic act in various circuses. We were down as the 'Seven Sisters Matthews.' One by one the girls married, and I thought that as they had made such fools of themselves that I'd make one of myself, too, and get some money out of it, so I went at clowning. My first engagement was with Newrom's circus, and you may be sure that I didn't let the management know that the business was new to me.

"The first night I went into the ring I had no idea what I was going to say, but I made a big hit. It wasn't so much what I said but the way I said it that caught the crowd. A woman clown was a novelty. It was not my cleverness but my ideas and the confidence I had that carried me through.

JOSEPHINE EVETTA MATTHEWS.

"My father and mother were in the business all their lives, and a few weeks after each of the twenty-one children was born it was wheeled across a tight rope in a wheelbarrow by my mother. That was our first appearance. Is it any wonder that we went into the circus or on the stage? When I was six years old I entered the ring, and I haven't been out of it for twenty years, except occasionally, to go on the stage."

"It seems to me that I've done a little of everything—acrobatics, traps, tumbling, character and serpentine dances, pantomimes, and goodness knows what else! But I like clowning the best of all."

Like a flash Miss Matthews got off her street gown and slipped into fleshings. She then pulled on a pair of bright red socks. She next tucked up her brown hair and pulled on a gray wig which runs up to a point in front like a fool's cap. Then she sat down before her dressing table and began to make up, talking all the while, sometimes to the women who shared her dressing room and sometimes to herself.

"The minute I put on this wig I feel funny. I tell you I like this business because I've never seen any other woman in it. It always has been my ambition to do something that no other woman does, and when I hear of any other woman clowning I shall think of something new. I keep everything to myself until I go into the ring, because clowns are very tricky and will steal your ideas. I'm quite pleased with the way my comic Russian dance and walking shoes have taken, and I've got something new and funny that I'm working out now. I'll spring it soon."

She looked a clown as she turned from her mirror. Her face was painted white, and on her forehead and cheeks were crimson triangles. A dab of paint at the corners of her ample mouth made it seem twice its size.

The clown scratched the back of her head with her foot and said:

"That's the music for my turn. I'll go. Good-by, everybody."

She dashed down the narrow stairway and bounded into the ring with about a dozen men clowns and a bareback rider. Her first trick was to step out of a pair of very large clog shoes. These, at her command, walked from the ring without visible assistance. Then she began to jolly not only the other clowns but the audience. Every one received her sallies good naturedly. The other clowns do not take her seriously, but she is very much in earnest about her business. Her tumbling and dancing are original.

Miss Matthews is short and plump. She is remarkably strong, one of her feats being to carry her six sisters on her shoulders.

Why They Didn't Capture Washington.

Strolling along the Virginia roads leading into Washington, I am often tempted to wonder why the Confederate troops did not capture the city when they had the chance early in the civil war. Somebody asked Gen. Beauregard why the southern army did not occupy the capital at once after the first Bull Run, and he answered very seriously:

"Well, I will tell you; the Washington papers received in camp informed us the city was overcrowded!"

Which was as felecitious as Parepa-Rosa's response when asked how it was she came to marry Carl Rosa.

"Oh, because he asked me to."

Gen. Joseph E. Johnson gave a different answer from Gen. Beauregard's.

"There were two reasons why we did not take Washington," said he, "myself and the Potomac river. I had reached that age that I knew an American soldier could not ford a river a mile wide and eighteen feet deep."—Kate Field's Washington.

"Colonel, what would you do if a man called you a liar? I mean a friend?"

"Well, sub, if he were a real near and dear friend, I would show him the respect of attending his funeral after it all were over, suh."—Indianapolis Journal.

THE SUN'S FASHIONS.

INFINITE VARIETY IN DETAIL OF THE SEASON IN VANITY FAIR.

Huge Sleeves and Widely Flaring Skirts Familiar Manifestations of the Mode. Ribbons of All Colors, Widths and Designs an Important Part in Decorations.

Huge sleeves and widely flaring skirts are familiar manifestations of the mode, so this panorama of fashion which opens the spring season in Vanity Fair must be distinguished chiefly for its infinite variety in detail rather than novelty in general outline.

Ribbons of all widths, colors and designs play an important part in dress decorations, and especially new are the wide satin ribbons plaited on one edge in the weaving, so that as the plates open another shade or a flowered stripe is seen. Other novelties in wide ribbons are woven, with a narrow ribbon on one side, connected only by a feathery edge with gauze edges and stripes, and glace ribbons are made double, entirely separated except on the edges, where they are woven together. Reversible colored ribbons have black edges; shot ribbons are striped with black, and there are ribbons with velvet edges, with Valenciennes lace on the edge and with goffered stripes like the silks and crepons.

Square collars are made of wide ribbon to fit across the shoulders, and point out into the sleeves below a band of ecru linen embroidery arranged to form a square yoke effect, and ribbons, both plain and striped, are in great demand for the small standing collars and cuffs of the latest gowns. Striped blue and white or black and white is very effective on dark blue, brown, and black gowns, and changeable taffeta ribbons are especially pretty on dark colored crepons. Ruffles of ribbon two inches wide are set in on the upper edge of a plain standing collar, so that it will turn over but not quite meet in front. Ribbon is sewed on the inside and at the bottom of the new circular dress skirt to give it a little stiffness, and, in fabt, ribbon is an indispensable addition to most of the new gowns.

Chiffons are still well to the front in all matters of dress, but the latest novelties are figured in dainty flower patterns or striped with silk on the edges, making it very pretty and useful for frills and ruffles. Grass lawn, either embroidered in an open work pattern or applique with handsome lace, is a distinctive feature of dress trimmings, and, like lace, it is used on the plain dark woollen gowns as well as on light silks and the thinner summer dresses.—N. Y. Sun.

Spring in New York.

Blackbirds, bluebirds and robins in daily increasing numbers are joining the song sparrows, and under the influence of warm rains the hepatica is in bloom here and there, while the spring beauty is well above ground and the new shoots of the iris are showing sword like ends in their accustomed wet places.—N. Y. Sun.

Not So Very Scandalous.

"What do you think!" said one Chicago woman to another in an awestruck whisper, "Miss Dearborn has married one of her father's clerks."

"Only one?" replied the other interrogatively.—Judge.

EDISON HAS A RIVAL.

John A. Secor Has Completed His System of Direct Marine Propulsion.

The recent reports of the transatlantic steamship companies make it apparent that many of these corporations are either losing money or barely meeting expenses. The showing made by the debit and credit accounts of the two great crack "flyers" is decidedly discouraging in this so called age of steam.

It is painfully evident that these ships carry too much coal back and forward between New York and Queenstown. More than half the available space in the interior of the Campania and the Lucania, for example, is occupied by machinery and boilers, in addition to which 3,000 to 3,500 tons of dead weight in the shape of coal has to be carried out of the port of departure. So little space is left for merchandise and passenger that the ships cannot be made self supporting. Such is the explanation made by engineers. The mind of a Jules Verne can very readily imagine a time at which (if the dumping of coal ashes into the Atlantic continues) a causeway will be formed between Sand Hook and Rouse's Point!

The dream of scientist and engineers—of Edison and Tessla, especially—is the direct conversion of fuel into electricity, which they expect to reconvert into a propulsive mechanical force. Such a dream is now realized by John A. Secor, who has attained the direct conversion of fuel into a propelling force sufficient to move vessels without intermediate transformation.

The latest Secor boat propelled by the direct combustion of fuel has no screw, paddle, boiler or steam engine, and it is within the bounds of truth to say that the control over the machinery far surpasses that of any steam engine in existence.

Stated in its simplest form, the Secor system consists in the use of several inclosed cylinders into which are introduced a mixture of air and atomized fuel, which, being automatically ignited, is discharged directly against the external water at the stern of the vessel. The instantaneous explosion of the gases drives the vessel forward in the water just as a rocket is elevated in the air. The explosions under perfect control, are produced with regularity and average 300 per minute.

The commercial revolution likely to be effected by the success of this direct system of propulsion will be as great as that following the original introduction of steam.

A Pleasing Combination.

Raided by Parkhurst.

It is the story of a frugal German of the type who keep small saloons in the district where sanded floors and plain bars abound. His name was Jacob Miller, and, not unlike many of his countrymen after being in New York four or five years, had managed not only to keep a horde of children well dressed and in school but to accumulate a small sum of money.

He feared thieves would find his little hoard, which he kept snugly stowed away in a stocking in the bottom of his emigrant trunk, and so he determined to open a bank account. Pushing his way through the heavy swinging doors of a banking house one morning he shuffled up to the first window and said:

"I want to open me a little bank account here."

"Second window to the right," was the laconic reply.

Approaching the cashier's desk he repeated his desires.

"Your name, please," said the cashier.

"Yacob Meeler."

"What is your business?"

"Vell, I keeps me a little restaurant."

"Do you do much business?"

"Vell, I sells a few meals, vonce in a while a drink or two, and I keeps me a few rooms upstairs."

"Do you intend to keep a large balance on deposit?"

"Vell, I don't know about that. You see I make me a leedle money and all that I vants is a place to keep id."

"Let me see," continued the cashier, turning to Bradstreet's book of commercial ratings and running his finger up and down the names commencing with M., "I do not find the name Jacob Miller here. Were you ever rated by Bradstreet?"

"Rai-ded, did you say? Vell, no, I vas never raided by Bradstreet, but I vas two times already raided by Parkhurst."

The Good Time Coming.

"Your husband is an exquisite housekeeper, Mrs. Banker," said the woman with pink rosettes in her bonnet.

"Yes," replied Mrs. Banker, "he is indeed; and the queer part of it is he never had a broom in his hand until after we were married."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

No Favoritism.

"Don't the soprano have a better showing than any one else in the choir?" asked Fitzgoober.

"I don't know," mused Philgit. "They all have the same chants, it seems to me."—Atlanta Constitution.

Goutran burst like a whirlwind in upon his friend Gaston.

"Will you be my witness?"

"Going to fight?"

"No, to get married."

Gaston (after a pause): "Can't you apologize?"—Los Angeles Herald.

PIZZI.

BY EDWARD MARSHALL.

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

CHAPTER I.

The patrons of Moraldi's Italian table d'hote restaurant liked music with their dinner, and they liked good music. After old Pizzi and his daughter came they had it for one hour every evening. Pizzi played the guitar and Guilia played the mandolin—oh! how she played the mandolin! Moraldi's is an expensive restaurant. Dinner there costs a dollar and a half, and no better dinner is served in all New York. That is why the Pizzis played there. Pizzi, who had once been the leader of a great Italian orchestra, was still too proud to play for his dinner, although misfortunes had come thick as flakes in a snowstorm after rheumatism had tied his fingers. So he was paid three dollars and twenty-five cents in cash for his own and his daughter's work upon their instruments every evening, but only on condition that the three dollars should go back again into the till of the restaurant in payment for their meals. The twenty-five cents he invariably gave to the waiter.

Pizzi, the musician, and Pizzi, the diner, were different men. Pizzi, the musician, was at first a shrinking, timid old chap, who picked a simple accompaniment, with knotted fingers, on his guitar, rarely looking up and evidently most unhappy. Pizzi, the diner, was a grave seigneur. The music was always finished before the best of Moraldi's patrons left the restaurant, and when it was finished Pizzi's humility was finished with it. One of the best tables in the restaurant was always reserved for him, and he led his daughter to it with all the grace of an old-time foreign courtesy. He sometimes hinted that there was noble blood in his veins. His selection of viands was careful, and his manner perfect. To see Pizzi eat spaghetti—that dish which, to the vulgar, is so disconcerting—was a poem.

Later, though, after some one started the fashion of applause in the restaurant, the old man's manner changed under the warming influence from humility to that of gratified pride. Pizzi, old, and not, now, too quick of perception, believed that all the hard clapping with which the diners followed each number was meant for him. It did not occur to him that his little daughter, whom he had trained, could be more pleasing than her master, and as the pleasant spattering of hands ceased he invariably struggled infirmly from his seat and bowed and smiled as gracefully as he used to in the days when the audiences of great theaters had risen en masse to his music and time after time demanded his presence before the curtain. It was no longer Pizzi the musician, but Pizzi the great artist who played in the restaurant. He even attempted a guitar solo one night and never suspected that the applause which followed was philanthropic.

All this pleased Guilia. Her devotion to her father was her life almost. It was for his sake that she played in the restaurant and at other places where the reward was small. Guilia knew that she could win money and fame with her mandolin. The great dancer, la Carmencita, had once offered her a vast sum to play for her, but Guilia knew that her father would be crushed should she leave him, and she knew and sympathetically understood why the old artist did not realize the waning of his own powers and the waxing of hers. She could not bear to make the truth plain to him by accepting a triumph in which he did not share. Sometimes the desire to make money, so that she could buy creature comforts for his old age, was almost strong enough to make her change her resolution, but with a tactful realization that creature comforts were to him as nothing to his mental placidity she always finally decided to let him plod along in satisfied poverty which she uncomplainingly shared.

But there was one who was dissatisfied. That was Tom Johnson. Tom Johnson was a painter—a poor painter so far as money goes, a rich painter so far as ability and future prospects go. His studio was in the same building in which the Pizzis lived, and the delicate-featured, brown-skinned Italian girl had become the ideal of his heart. Pizzi liked him, too, which was fortunate. From the lofty height of a great artist in one line, he believed that he saw in Tom the possibilities of a great artist in another line, and encouraged him with a patronage which would have maddened the Englishman had not his love for Guilia been so broad as to cover a multitude of things and blind his eyes to many annoyances. The delicacy which made Guilia permit her father to live in poverty because she thought comfort earned by other fingers than his own would be distasteful to him, Tom could not understand. When he dined with them it angered him to have Pizzi accept the applause that belonged to Guilia, but she kept him silent.

The cheerful effect of the applause at Moraldi's kept Pizzi in a very pleasant humor for a few weeks. Then he began to change. Guilia was the first to notice it, and it sent terror to her heart. With exquisite anguish she realized that her father was getting to be an old, old man, and that she soon must inevitably lose him. Even the knowledge that her after-life would be spent in the companionship of Tom Johnson, whom she also adored, could not comfort her. Often and often she tried to imagine what life would be after her father, with his querulous conceited childishness and his gallant old-time grace, had passed away; but each effort to picture such a situation resulted only in failure and a flood of tears.

And after the change began to come over the old man she could see the end approaching. Night after night she sat beside him in the restaurant, and there was woe in her heart as her fingers danced merrily over the strings when she saw that not even the applause could rouse him from the lethargy of age and weariness and discouragement. When to this indifference Pizzi began to add ill temper and sharp words, she knew not what to make of it and that night she wept for hours.

The first real outbreak came one evening when Tom Johnson dined with them. He brought it about through his clumsy kindliness. As they sat at table after the music had ended, Tom noticed that the old man seemed taciturn and gloomy. Of course, he believed that the playing had wearied him, and he said:

"Why don't you stop playing, signor? It wearies you. Guilia alone would please as well—why don't you rest?"

Guilia saw the blunder before it had been fully spoken and laid a warning hand on Johnson's sleeve; but it was too late. The damage had been done.

For an instant old Pizzi gazed at Tom in silence. Then a red flush slowly rose on his yellow old face and his dull, old eyes took on the brightness of wounded pride and quick anger. Tom saw now, too. He quickly tried to correct his mistake.

FOR AN INSTANT OLD PIZZI GAZED AT TOM.

"I beg your pardon, signor," he began to say, but the old man would not let him finish. He interrupted him with a sputtering which did not immediately develop into speech. Eventually it became the expression of one who has been cut to the quick. "That's it! That's it!" he exclaimed. "That's what you've both wanted! Oh, no; it's not me, the people, want—not me! It's Guilia! Si! Si! Si! Guilia! Not me!"

"I really beg your pardon, signor," Tom interjected, while Guilia tried to sooth her father as best she could. But the old man's anger grew instead of dwindled. He would not be pacified. His tone grew louder and his face redder. Finally, in wrath, which drew the attention of everyone in the restaurant, he rose majestically, and, waving his hand at Tom, commanded:

"Out of my sight! Out of my sight! You have insulted me!"

Guilia, almost beside herself, in an undertone beseeched Tom to say no more, but to do as he was told, and Tom shamefacedly put on his coat and hat and went out of the restaurant without a word.

After he had gone the old man sank into his seat again, exhausted. He would eat no more dinner, and after a short time he silently left the restaurant with his daughter.

He said never a word to her on the way home. When they reached the dark corridors of the studio building she held her hand out to him as usual to help him in the darkness, which was full of little steps and stairs, but he rejected it and stumbled on independently. As they passed through the gloom toward their little rooms a black figure, which Guilia knew to be the contrite Tom, approached and touched her hand. She gave his a distressed pressure and whispered to him to say nothing. The old man did not notice.

The week that followed was a weary one. Not for one moment did Pizzi allow his resentment to relax. He would not speak of Tom, and once or twice when that thoroughly humble young man tried to speak of him he flew into an almost uncontrollable rage. To Guilia, too, he showed none of the little love attentions of the past. He was the stern parent now—he would no longer let her lead. The effort which he made to keep his tottering footsteps and his trembling mind in advance of her strong, young vigor was tremendous.

At the restaurant they played as usual. One afternoon before they went there, Guilia noticed a queer, cunning expression flit across the old man's face, and as they rode down in the horse car saw a sly smile hovering around his lips. Of late there had often been a wild expression in his eyes which had worried Guilia greatly. Constantly she watched the old man as a mother might watch a sick child, puzzling over each expression of his face, each inflection of his voice. This new look she could not understand.

In the midst of their music she learned what it had meant. Pizzi's slow old mind had concocted a plan for undoing what he thought was her unholy pride. In the midst of one of their most difficult numbers he stopped playing, leaving her to finish alone. Instantly she understood. He had decided to show her that if he did not play his pitiful accompaniment the people would not applaud; to prove to her that it was his art, not hers, which they admired.

Oh, how Guilia prayed, as she played out the number, that no hand clapping would follow its finish. It is doubtful if ever before a performer was so anxious not to receive recognition for her work. She tried to play badly, but when the music ended there came the same little tumult of spatting hands as before. There were probably not two people in the room besides herself and Pizzi who noticed that his guitar had been silent.

It was a dreadful blow to the old man. For a moment the disappointment of her success dazed him. Then his rage came with ten-fold the fury which had risen against poor Tom. He grasped her wrist with his trembling hand so fiercely that the pick, with which she had been playing, fell from her frightened fingers to the floor, and hissed into her ear: "Oh, unnatural child! You have seen them and talked with them without my knowledge so that they would appland your wretched music and ignore my art. Out upon you! You are an ungrateful daughter."

Poor Guilia! He had never spoken so to her before. His words cut like little knives. She could not answer.

[TO BE CONCLUDED.]

Facts in Regard to a Fool Story.

There is no place in the world where more dirty paper money is handled from day to day than in the national bank redemption division of the Treasury Department, Washington. There are in existence some thirty-five hundred national banks, each of which has outstanding bank notes ranging in amount from two or twelve tho sand dollars up to nearly half a million. Every dollar of these notes passes through the hands of the men and women employed in the national bank redemption division. This office has been in existence now for about thirty years. There are employed in the division somewhere about 25 girls and women. They handle untold millions of bills in the course of a year, and if there was any danger from contagious and infectious diseases in old bank notes it would seem as though this would be the place to find symptoms.

Yet Mr. Rogers, who has been the chief of the division for ten years, and who has been connected with it since it was organized, says that there has never been a case of infectious or contagious disease contracted by one of the employes of his office. Every one of them handles the bills sent in for redemption. They are counted and sorted time after time. They are the dirtiest specimens of money to be found in the country.

A Difference.

Mrs. Greene Gates—I've just been reading of that Hetty Green; I think she must be crazy.

Mr. Greene Gates—Why, she's worth forty millions.

Mrs. Greene Gates—Is she so? Then she can't be crazy, she's only eccentric.

The Silver Lining.

Imp—That wave of reform which is sweeping over America has been a bad thing for us.

Satan—That's all right, my boy! We'll soon be ourselves again; I see by the papers that there will be a big revival of the roller skating craze this spring.

The other day when a prim, precise New England professor sat down to dinner in a Southern hotel, three waiters in quick succession asked him if he would have soup. A little annoyed, he said to to the last waiter who asked:

"Is it compulsory?"

"No, sah," answered the waiter; "I do sah. I think it am mock turtle."

"Well," said Mr. Sorkins, "I've quit worrin' about the fate of the country and the destiny of the present social system and things."

"Have you solved all the problems?"

"No, I haven't solved any of them. But my daughter Minerva Jane will be at work on her graduation essay pretty soon and I guess I may as well make my mind easy and find out all about it when she gets through."—Washington Star.

EASTER LILIES.

With Onions and Potatoes, a Leading Source of Income in Bermuda.

It is the popular impression that the production of lily blossoms for the Easter season in this country is an important industry in the Bermudas. The fact is that the blossoms are only a by product, incidental to the growing of lily bulbs to be sent to Europe and America. The exportation of the blossoms is small except at the Easter season, and at any other time of year when the plants are blooming the blossoms are given to visitors. The same is true of freesias, which are grown in great numbers.

The soil and climate of the Bermudas are especially favorable to the growing of the lily, and the bulbs are an important product, sharing with onions and potatoes the attention of cultivators. The lily grower separates the bulb into parts and plants each part. The new bulbs are not exported the first year, but are the second. It takes four years to produce the great bulbs, three inches in diameter, from which spring the tall stalks crowned with many blossoms. The grower has boards with four holes of different sizes, and the bulbs are sorted by passing them through these holes. One sees in Bermuda lily fields covered with plants varying in height from a few inches to two or three feet. The small ones are the stalks from the young bulbs. The tallest are the ones sent to this country at Easter. The bulbs are removed from the ground in summer and set out again in the autumn.

Effects of Early Training.

A gentleman walking along Lexington avenue one day encountered two boys who looked so much alike that he stopped them and asked:

"Are you little boys twins?"

They looked up at him for a moment as though they did not understand; then one said meekly:

"No, sir; we are Methodists."—Harper's Magazine.

The reception given in Vincent Chapel last night by the senior department of the First Methodist Church Sunday-school was a delightful event, in providing an evening of entertainment and sociability for those who attended. The exercises were opened by singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers", after which Superintendent Jackson made brief remarks appropriate to the occasion.

A piano solo was rendered by Miss Maude French, which was executed in such a manner as to win applause from the hearers.

Miss Addie Parker Jackson next gave an elocutionary recital entitled "The Tenor". It was a piece that brought into action all the versatile accomplishments of the elocutionist, whose gesture, tone and enunciation are such as only acquired by constant and thorough study. Very naturally her effort was received with marked appreciation, so that it was necessary for her to respond to an encore.

A cornet solo was played by Raymond McGee, which displayed musical ability on the part of the player.

Miss Kittie Mitchell of Philadelphia sang a solo, entitled "Orpheus With His Lute". Miss Mitchell has a beautiful soprano voice of real depth and range, and her rendition of this delicate piece was so pretty that the audience demanded an encore.

By special request Miss Jackson recited Fred Emerson's "Swing", which, like her previous pieces, was very pleasing. For an encore she recited a juvenile piece that displayed better than anything else her scope of ability.

The exercises were closed by a piano solo by Miss French, a cornet solo by Mr. McGee, and a vocal solo by Miss Mitchell.

At the conclusion pleasant social intercourse was indulged in, and refreshments were served under the direction of Mrs. L. M. French, Mrs. N. Y. Hull, Miss Jackson, and the Misses Sharp.

On the first of May we shall begin publication of a remarkable detective story from the pen of PARK BENJAMIN, the well known scientist and civil engineer. It is a tale of the present day, and we guarantee that anyone who begins it will read it to the end. For ingenuity of plot and deftness of literary treatment, this story is remarkable.

Don't fail to read how the great city of New York fell into the peril of sudden destruction, from which it was finally rescued after a series of decidedly interesting adventures.

Mr. Underhill Will Play Them All.

The characters to be represented in "The Rivals" Thursday evening in the Casino are: Sir Anthony Absolute, a choleric old gentleman; Captain Jack Absolute, his son, masquerades as Ensign Beverley; Mr. Bob Acres, a country squire, one of the rivals; David, his servant; Sir Lucius O'Trigger, of Blunderbuss Hall; Mrs. Malaprop, the redoubted linguist, whose select words are so ingeniously misapplied without being mispronounced; Miss Lydia Languish, her niece, who thinks nothing can be quite so lovely as an elopement; Lucy, her servant. In part first, Sir Anthony proposes on behalf of his son; in part second, Mrs. Malaprop accepts on behalf of her niece; in part third, a rival appears; and part fourth gives the great duel scene.

In Music Hall.

Bartley Campbell's grand play "The Galley Slave" will be presented in Music Hall Tuesday night. The company is said to be an excellent one, comprising such well-known metropolitan actists as Miss Lora Addison Clift, Miss Loduski Young, Miss Duddie Douglass, Miss Harriet Sheldon, Miron Leffingwell, W. W. Allen, Carroll Daly, C. W. Goodrich, and others.

The deft and incomprehensible Herrmann will take lovers of genuine amusement on a tour to magic land next Wednesday night, May 1, in Music Hall, and will exhibit his latest feats of inexplainable impossibilities and bewildering marvels.

Malicious Boys.

During the noon hour yesterday some boys, maliciously inclined, filled one of the lamp holes of the new system of sewers on East Fifth street with paper and stones, so that Civil Engineer Hallock and an assistant were compelled to spend a portion of the afternoon in cleaning out the rubbish.

PLAINFIELD CONTRIBUTED.

Her Quartette of Instrumentalists Made This a Great Concert.

The residents of Scotch Plains and Fanwood had the pleasure of listening to one of the finest musical performances that has ever been given in that section, Wednesday evening, April 24, in the Baptist Church, Scotch Plains.

Plainfield contributed largely to the success of the entertainment in furnishing a quartette of instrumentalists, consisting of Mrs. F. A. Pollock, piano; A. Z. Petrie, violin; F. A. Pollock, flute; F. Ferrer, 'cello. The playing of this quartette was very fine, showing the result of considerable practice, and the professional instrumental clubs that occasionally visit the neighboring cities will have to look to their laurels.

They were assisted by Miss Alice H. Fine, an excellent solo soprano; Mrs. W. S. Force, contralto; and Spencer F. Smith, tenor.

Miss Fine's singing gave great pleasure to the audience, particularly her rendering of the "Angel's Serenade" by Bragg, with flute obligato beautifully rendered by Mr. Pollock. Mrs. Force and Mr. Smith also won the good graces of their audience by the manner in which they rendered their solos. Mr. Petrie, violinist, delighted the musical audience in the rendering of Bohm's Cavatina, a classical solo for the violin, which he played very artistically. Mr. Ferrer rendered a beautiful solo on the 'cello, which showed he was a master of that instrument, and Mr. Pollock's playing of the "Nightingale's Serenade" was particularly good and resulted in a hearty encore which was responded to with Schubert's Serenade, an excellent arrangement of this beautiful composition. It is due to Mrs. Pollock to say that her playing in the quartette parts, and her accompaniments to the various solos, were all that could be desired. Miss E. A. Randolph accompanied Mrs. W. S. Force to the great satisfaction of the audience.

Birthday Party.

Miss Evelyn McHarg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Hillman of 828 Sherman avenue, celebrated her third birthday yesterday by inviting a few of her friends to spend the afternoon from 3 to 6 with her. The time was passed pleasantly, and no doubt too quickly, by the little people in various ways, including the playing of games, etc., until 5, when all sat down to a well-laden table, in the centre of which was a birthday cake surmounted by three candles, denoting the age of little Miss Hillman. All did justice to the good things set before them, and in due time the children left for their respective homes, wishing the little hostess many happy returns of the day.

Among those present were the Misses Ellena Woodcock, Rosa Woltmann, Florence Maguire, Grace Kinsman, Marie Fountain; and Masters Kerro Knox, Jack and Will Douglass, Gideon and Guion Fountain.

Give Us Baseball.

The announcement made exclusively in last night's Daily Press that an endeavor was being made by the Y. M. C. A. athletes to secure the Crescent oval grounds for baseball, and if successful, a team would be organized, was received with marked favor by the kranks about the city. All are anxious to see a team in the field, and there is no question that it would receive liberal support.

Inter-Club Tourney.

It is probable that the return all-around contest between the Park and Country Clubs will be played in the latter's clubhouse next Friday evening. The games played are bowling, pool, billiards and whist. In the first contest, played several week ago in the Park clubhouse, each side broke even by winning two games. The coming event will be one of intense, but friendly, rivalry.

A Smoker Once a Month

The entertainment which was to have been given by Perseverance lodge, K of P., after their regular meeting last night, has been postponed to the third Friday in May. This was done because the talent which they expected to secure was unable to appear. It is proposed to give one of these entertainments and smokers once a month in the future.

—Some malicious sneak looted the flower beds of George Belcher on East Fifth street last night.

—The State Shooting League will have a meet in Elizabeth next Tuesday, in which a number of Plainfield gunners will contest for prizes.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at L. W. Randolph's drug store.

ANOTHER BIG MEET.

Plainfield's Track Gathers the Crack Cyclists from Everywhere.

The bicycle meet of the Newark Diocesian Union of Catholic Clubs will be held on the Crescent Wheelmen's oval in this city some time in August—either the first or second Saturday of that month. The bicycle races are part of the field day sports of the union, which was held in Caledonian Park, Newark, last year. The sports will be held at the same place this Summer, with the exception of the bicycle races. The cause of separating the events this year and bringing the wheeling races to Plainfield was brought about by the Jersey City members of the field day sports committee making a complaint about the poor bicycle track at Caledonian Park. P. McDonough, who is the member of the committee from the Young Men's Catholic Lyceum of this city, immediately made a suggestion that the bicycle races be brought to Plainfield, where is one of the finest tracks in the State, making a seperate day for them from the regular field sports. This proposition received a favorable reception from the other committeeman, and arrangements were immediately made to that end. The matter of securing the use of the oval was left with Mr. McDonough, who will know Monday, May 6, as to the exact date of the meet.

This event will bring to Plainfield some of the best riders in New Jersey, for the union is composed of twenty-five clubs in the Newark Diocese.

A UNIQUE INSTRUMENT.

It Was Made by a Plainfield Clergyman, and Is Highly Prized.

The Society of Antiquity of Worcester, Mass., has recently come into the possession of a piano which is priceless from the standpoint of the antiquarian and interesting to every musical person. It is one of the first upright pianos ever made, probably the first in America, and the only upright ever attempted with a folding keyboard. The value of th instrument to the society is enhanced by the fact that it was invented by Rev. William Phipps, once a resident of Plainfield, who manufactured it himself, not in a joiner's shop or piano factory, but in the parsonage of the parish of Paxton, of which he was then pastor.

The straits to which the inventor was put to manufacture the piano are shown in every detail. A jack knife sufficed to shape the parts of the action, the keys and the wooden pins. The hammer is tipped by the perpendicular piece striking an ordinary brass pin. The wires, of which there are but few sizes, Mr. Phipps depending upon tension to procure degrees of pitch, are cleverly but primitively strung in pairs to hand forged keys.

Mr. Phipps was graduated from Amherst College in 1837, studied theology with Rev. Jacob Ide, D. D., at West Medway, was ordained to the ministry in 1840, when he assumed charge of the Paxton parish. He remained there until called to Plainfield in 1869. He died in this city in 1876, aged 63 years.

Fairview Avenue Surprise.

A complete and most delightful surprise and house-warming was arranged by Mrs. E. E. Winckler of Jackson avenue in honor of Mrs. H. J. Martin of Fairview avenue, last evening. The surprisers met at the home of Mrs. Steiner and then proceeded to the new home of Mr. and Mrs. Martin.

It required several rings of the bell to bring Mrs. Martin to the door, and when she did come she was completely surprised. The party included Mr and Mrs R M Fountain, Mr and Mrs I Sheppard, Mr and Mrs E E Winckler, Mr and Mrs H H Moore, Mr and Mrs William Lunger, Mr and Mrs J E Townsend, Mr and Mrs Fred Slater, Mr and Mrs Charles Steiner, Mrs Rebecca Fenner, Miss Squires, Miss Holly, Miss Cora Van Arsdale, Miss Ruth Fenner, Harry Swackhamer and Mr and Mrs H J Martin and family.

The evening was passed pleasantly with music, games and in a social manner, after which a fine collation was served.

About 12, the electric lights went out and failed to shed their rays the rest of the night. In consequence lamps were provided.

Successfully Repeated.

At the entertainment given last evening by the women of Grace Church on Park place, consisting of tableaux, the audience was not as large as was expected, but those that were present displayed appreciation of the affair. The entertainment surpassed any ever given in the chapel. Through the kindness of Oscar S. Teale in arranging the calcium, and Messrs. Drake and Freeman in handling the same, too much cannot be said for the beautiful blending of colors. The young women who posed as the various characters did themselves credit and showed very careful training.

I recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm for rheumatism, lame back, sprains and swellings. There is no better liniment made. I have sold over 100 bottles of it this year and all were pleased who used it. PLAINFIELD'S TREE PEST

Now's the Time to Fight the Elm Despoiler.

STAMP OUT THE VORACIOUS BEETLE

When Our Trees Are Ravaged 'Twill Be Too Late to Deal With the Pest—Tree-Saving Greater Than Tree-Planting—Ex-Mayor Randolph Points Out a Cure to Save One of the City's Chief Charms.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—It is well to observe Arbor Day. It is well to plant trees. It is better to preserve noble trees well-grown, and in the full course of beauty and usefulness.

It is painful to note the paralysis which appears to have come over this community in relation to the protection and preservation of the elm trees, which have constituted so large a share of the interest and beauty of our town.

This is the more deplorable in view of the fact that a cure is at hand, and can be availed of at small cost and trouble.

The appropriation of $1,000 per annum by our Common Council (and probably of a much less sum) will save our elms; and, by so much, will preserve and increase one of Plainfield's chief charms. Is there no enterprising member of our city government ready to champion effectively the cause of the elm?

If the city authorities will do nothing in this matter, will you not, in your office, take the matter up as a worthy public enterprise? I will be one of 100 citizens to give either $5 or $10 each per annum to extirpate, or repress, the elm-beetle pest.

I spray my trees each year, and thus have benefited myself and my neighbors; but, working alone, can do but little good in this cause. The pest is increasing each year in power and damage.

Professor John B. Smith, State Entomologist, in a recent bulletin says: "In many of our New Jersey cities, towns and villages, in which shade trees form an important element of beauty, insect injury has been so marked for two or three years last past, as to bring me many letters of inquiry. During the season of 1894 matters were so much worse than ever before that even the authorities were aroused in some instances."

The elm leaf beetle makes its appearance at the beginning of the leafing season. It is usually well at work about the middle of May, riddling the leaves. Late in May and in early June the eggs are laid. Then the beetles disappear, and the larvae hatch, and go to work on whatever of tender elm foliage they can find. Through the month of June the larvae stuff themselves. Then they make their way to the ground, cast their skins, and appear as soft, bright-yellow pupae. A week later, say about Independence Day, the new army of beetles is in motion; and the elm foliage is subject to another attack. These successive attacks in the course of a single season complete the ruin of many trees. In August and September the beetles seek Winter quarters.

The State Entomologist recommends as one cure—arsenate of lead—formed by adding four ounces arsenate of soda and eleven ounces acetate of lead to 100 gallons of water.

The remedy with which, perhaps, we are most familiar, and which is quite as strongly recommended by Prof. Smith, is Paris green. Or again, London purple is quite as good. I quote below Professor Smith's own words:

"These insects can be controlled and the trees entirely preserved, by three sprayings with either London purple, or Paris green, at the rate of one pound of either in one hundred and fifty gallons of water, one pound of stone or shell lime, or two gallons of milk of lime, being added to prevent possible injury to the foliage. Two quarts of glucose, or molasses, add greatly to the sticking power of the poison used."

Spraying should be first done about the first or second week in May. The second spraying should be done in the early part of June, and the third spraying may be done about the second week in July.

An additional remedy is to pour on the ground, about the base of the trees, in the early Spring, (and again about the first of July, and again in September) a dilution of kerosene-emulsion or whale oil soapsuds.

For small trees any good spraying outfit will serve, such as may be procured through any hardware dealer. For large trees, and for general neighborhood or city protection, there should be a tank, mounted on a wagon, holding from one to two hundred gallons prepared as above told. To this should be attached a double-acting brass cylinder force-pump, with full hose couplings. The hose should reach well up into the large trees, and should be supplied with suitable nozzles, such as the Nixon nozzle, or the Vermorel nozzle, or a graduating nozzle, such as is used in lawn sprinkling, may be used with advantage in some cases.

Three or four such outfits could, perhaps, thoroughly protect our town from the elm beetle—each tank and spraying apparatus being in charge of about three men.

I am aware that, in portions of our State, the elms and other fine trees are already subject to attack from another imported pest, known as the elm borer or leopard moth. As yet, I think this pest has not reached Plainfield—though it may appear this season. The remedy for this is to cut back the tree, and plug the borer holes with bi-sulphide of carbon and putty.

But, the emphasis of this article, and of these suggestions, has to do with the elm-leaf beetle, one of the most destructive of modern tree pests and one which we can suppress effectually if we have the pluck and purpose to do it.

L. V. B. RANDOLPH.

Plainfield, April 27, 1895.

THEY'LL ALL BE HERE.

A Great Army of Wheeling Talent Coming to Plainfield.

A letter from Louisville, Ky., where many of the best known Class B cyclists are in training for the coming racing season, states that all of the great racers there expect to ride in the Crescent Wheelmen's meet here Memorial Day.

Among these speeders are Harry Tyler, holder of most of the short distance records; Louis Callahan, who has just returned from Mexico and Texas with the best of their records; Arthur Gardiner and E. C. Anderson who ran away from all western Class A men last year; Con Baker and W. de Cardy, the strongest road riders of the west; Mike Dirnberger, who rode a mile unofficially in 1:41 two years ago; H. R. Steenson, M. Carter, F. H. Allen, G. A. Goble, Arthur Porter, L. C. Johnson and Ernie Johnson, not to mention the great and only John S. Johnson himself. And this is but one of the many counties to be heard from.

ECCENTRIC ALLEYS.

But You Can't Lose the Plainfield Club Men Bowlers.

A picked team from the Union County Country and the Park Clubs went to New York last evening and rolled a match game, best two out of three, with a team from the Friday Night Bowling Club. The game was full of interest from the start to finish. It took the visiting team one game to get onto the eccentricities of the alleys, but when they did succeed in finding the grooves they just piled up the neat score of 818 pins, to let the New York boys know what Plainfield could do even on bad alleys.

The following scores of the games rolled shows how our team carried off the victory.

BOROUGH OR NOT?

Fanwood to Have an Election to Settle the Question.

A large meeting of Fanwood voters was held in the clubhouse last night, with George Miller in the chair and L. J. Ellis secretary.

The committee on borough reported a computation that the increase of tax-rate within the limits of the proposed borough would be 14½ cents on each $100.

After much discussion, it was voted to apply for a borough commission, instead of a complete separation from the township.

A petition was signed by the required property interests, asking the Freeholders to call an election. The petition was given to Freeholder Westcott, and the election will be held as soon as the law permits.

The citizens will then decide whether or not to govern the station end of the township by borough commission.

Our better halves say they could not keep house without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is used in more than half the homes in Leeds, Sims Bros., Leeds, Iowa. This shows the esteem in which that remedy is held where it has been sold for years and is well known. Mothers have learned that there is nothing so good for colds, croup and whooping cough, that it cures these ailments quickly and permanently, and that it is pleasant and safe for children to take. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. These who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. NO MENACE TO JAPAN

Russia, France and Germany's Friendly Counsel.

China's Conquerer Is Asked To Relinquish Possession of Liu Toug.

United States Expected To Prove a Friendly Counsellor for Japan.

England and Italy Holding Aloof.

London, April 27.—The latest and most direct information from authoritative sources as to the precise status of the negotiations between Russia, France, Germany and Japan received here is as follows: The Russian, French and German minister interviewed separately the Japanese vice-minister for foreign affairs, under instructions from their respective governments, and presented a memoranda as it was stated that the governments of Russia, France and Germany, upon examining the terms of peace imposed by Japan upon China, found that the possession of the peninsula of Liu Tong, claimed by Japan, would be a constant menace to the capital of China, and, at the same time, would threaten the independence of Corea and render it non-effective in fact.

Constant Menace to Peace.

In this sense, and for other reasons, it would be a constant menace to the permanent peace of the far east. Consequently the governments of Russia, France and Germany, desiring to show their sincere friendship for the government of Japan, advise it to renounce the absolute and final possession of the peninsula of Liu Tong. The memoranda of the three governments make it plain that they are presented in the way of friendly advice to the Japanese government and are not intended in any way to convey any open or covert menace.

Can Rely on the United States.

The impression is gaining ground that Japan can rely upon the friendly consul of the United States at the present moment. The governments of Great Britain and Italy have made it plain that they do not intend to follow the example of Russia, France and Germany, and the great commercial interests of the United States in the far east, which the Japanese-Chinese treaty of peace would largely benefit, no less than the constant attitude of the United States towards Japan, lead diplomats to believe that the United States at this juncture will not fail to make such a use of its good offices as will prevent Japan from being deprived of the fruits of her victory.

Difficult To Make Any Change.

The treaty of peace has already been ratified by the emperor of Japan and it would be extremely difficult to make any change. The only effect of the attitude of Russia, France, and Germany must be to encourage the party in China which is opposed to any moderate and reasonable settlement, and thus to prolong the war indefinitely.

Japan Has Not Replied.

It may be stated in the most positive terms that the reports thus far circulated regarding Japan's reply to the powers are incorrect. The reply had not been sent as late as the evening of the 26th, and from intimations received from the highest and most reliable sources here it may be stated that the reply, while moderate and conciliatory in tone, will not contain any recession from what Japan regards as her rightful due.

Material Features Confirmed.

Washington, April 27.—Careful inquiries confirmed in all material features the dispatch from London giving some substantial foundation for the reports of the joint action of Russia, Germany and France in regard to the projected treaty. It is now apparent that while the dispatches sent out from St. Petersburg and other cities in regard to this alleged intervention have been erroneous and exaggerated, there was a basis of fact in the statements that something in the nature of a protest had been filed by these three governments.

The Gibraltar of China.

But it was not against the occupation of "Manchurian territory," as asserted, but against the "absolute and final possession of the peninsula of Liu Tong," otherwise known as the "Regents Sword," which commands the gulf of Pechili and the approaches to Pekin, and is substantially the Gibraltar of China. It is on this promontory that Port Arthur is situated.

Devised by an American.

The general design of this citadel was devised by our own Admiral Shufeldt and was by him regarded as impregnable, if manfully defended. Obviously the "absolute and final possession" of this citadel would leave the capital of China at the mercy of Japan. But every advice received here has indicated that Japan has waived a claim to absolute and final possession of Port Arthur and has only insisted upon holding it as a hostage until the indemnity shall have been paid.

Will Act Individually.

Secretary Gresham has freely stated that if Japan, in its treaty arrangements with China, has stipulated that the commerce of that great empire shall be still further opened to all the nations of the world and not to Japan exclusively, that was a proposition which would command the earnest approval and support of the United States. Whatever action, however, this government may feel called upon to take in this emergency, will assuredly be entered upon in its individual capacity and not in combination or after consultation with any European power.

The Japanese Minister Decorated.

Washington, April 27.—A telegram received at the Japanese legation states that the emperor of Japan has conferred upon Minister Kurino the decoration of the second class of the Order of the Rising Sun, on account of his services in the negotiations of the commercial treaty with the United States.

LIGHTS SEEN BEYOND RANGE.

Abnormal Case of Refraction Reported to the Hydrographic Office.

Washington, April 27.—Capt. A. E. Leganger of the British steamship Beresford has reported to the hydrographic office a remarkable case of refraction apparent in the English channel during his last voyage from Mobile to Bremen. On March 10 he wrote: "The light of Owers lightship was seen at 7:50 p. m., ship's time, when St. Catherine's light, Isle of Wight, bore northeast by north half north magnetic, distance five miles. Thus the Owers was seen twenty-seven miles. The British admiralty light list gives the Owers light an elevation above sea level, range from an elevation of fifteen feet, eleven miles. Our elevation was twenty-three feet above the sea level. The light remained in sight all the time, and dipped at 11 dist. The sky was cloudless with nearly a full moon. Other lights were also seen several miles outside their range. This is something very unusual for this part of the world, and it is the first time it has come under my notice. Here one must most times steer very close in order to sight anything."

VICTIMS OF A MINE DISASTER.

Recovering Bodies After Six Months from Flooded Workings.

Shamokin, Pa., April 27.—The body of William Barcavidge, one of the four workmen who were closed in the Luke Fidler mines in October, 1894, was recovered yesterday. The accident in which the four men lost their lives occurred on Oct. 8. The shaft was set on fire by the carelessness of an employe named Buffington, who lost his life at that time. The flames spread rapidly and cut off the escape of George Brown, Michael Covalis, Stanislaus Bobbert and William Barcavidge. It was found necessary to flood the mine in order to extinguish the flames. The water was allowed to remain in the workings for five months. It has nearly all been pumped out and it is expected that the bodies of the other miners will be reached soon.

METHODISTS WILL AID.

Plans for the Care of Rev. Jonathan Bell's Wife and Children.

London, April 27.—The Methodists of Blackheath have decided to support the wife and six children of the Rev. Jonathan Bell. Mr. Hall, father of the girl whom Bell is said to have betrayed, is surprised because he has received no communication from America regarding his daughter. He will take steps at once to learn the facts concerning her disappearance and death and to bring to punishment the persons responsible for both. The police still say that they have no direct information as to the case.

The Crisis in Norway.

London, April 27.—A dispatch from Stockholm says that Premier Stang and his colleagues of the ministry of Norway are resolved not to withdraw their resignations, but, at the same time, they will do nothing to embarrass the king. TORTURED FOR YEARS.

A Fireman's Battle With Rheumatism.

How He Conquered the Disease After Years of Misery.

Henry Wagner, assistant engineer at Fire Station No. 5, Cleveland, O., says: "For the past nine years I have had rheumatism at intervals and suffered greatly. I would be off duty from ten days to two weeks each time, and although I tried many different so-called remedies, could not obtain any relief. When I first heard of the remarkable cures Munyon's Rheumatism Remedy was making I was very skeptical, but just about then I had a very bad attack and concluded to give them a trial. The first bottle relieved me very much, and by the time I had taken the second bottle I was completely cured I have not had a rheumatic pain since, although I have been wet many times. Now I use Munyon's Remedies in my home and find them most excellent."

Munyon's Rheumatism Cure is guaranteed to cure rheumatism in any part of the body. Acute or muscular rheumatism cured in from one to five days. It never fails to cure sharp, shooting pains in the arms, legs, sides, back or breast, or soreness in any part of the body in from one to three hours. GYPSY MOTH PLAGUE

Trouvelot's Error May Cost $1,000,000.

The Infected Area Now Comprises More Than 200 Square Miles in New England—Massachusetts Preparing To Renew the Work, Which Was Suspended for Lack of Funds.

Boston, April 27.—After years of vain endeavor to ascertain how the gypsy moth obtained a foothold in New England, the fact has just come to light. It is quite common knowledge that the moths were brought to this country by Prof. Trouvelot, a naturalist, astronomer and artist, then at Harvard university. He hoped to produce, by crossing the gypsy moth with the silk worm, a hardy specimen of silk spinning worm, which would thrive in a temperate climate.

Trouvelot Silent.

Time and again Prof. Trouvelot, who is now believed to be living in Paris, has been written to, but he has not seen fit to answer and the state board of agriculture has been in complete ignorance as to how the pest secured its freedom. A few days ago Prof. Forbush, the ortholegist of the state board, was given what appeared to be the authentic version of the story and it is here given publicity for the first time.

Costly Error for Massachusetts.

It appears that he had a number of the moths under a tent or netting fastened to a tree for cultivating purposes, and imagined that they were secure. In this supposition he erred, and the error is likely to cost Massachusetts more than $1,000,000 before it is rectified. One night, during a somewhat violent storm the netting protecting the moths was torn from its fastenings, and the insects scattered on the ground and adjacent trees and shrubbery. This was in Medford, about twenty-three years ago.

Over 200 Square Miles Infested.

The infested area now comprises more than 200 square miles. The legislature will doubtless pass to be engrossed the bill appropriating $150,000 for the work this year, and the gypsy moth commission is making active preparations for renewing the work which was suspended owing to lack of funds.

IN CONTEMPT OF COURT.

South Carolina Disobeys Judge Goff's Injunction.

Columbia, S. C., April 27.—United States Judge Goff and the state of South Carolina are likely to lock horns. Despite the temporary injunction restraining dispensary officers from seizing liquor brought into the state in violation of the dispensary law, yesterday constables, acting under orders from Governor Evans, seized liquor in several parts of the state. They are in contempt of Judge Goff's order, and it is expected that he will promptly take steps to punish them. If Governor Evans attempts to protect them there will be a lively clash of authority.

New York, April 27.—The state committee of the prohibition party has decided to hold its convention for the nominations of candidates for states offices on September 2. The place for holding the convention has not yet been decided upon, but the choice lies between Rochester, Syracuse and Utica. Dr. I. K. Funk said to-day that there was no doubt that business men of all sections of the country were beginning to think more seriously of the prohibition question.

WILL PAY THEIR OWN LOSSES.

Newark Traction Company Drops the Guarantee Indemnity Company.

Newark, N. J., April 27.—The Consolidated Traction company has opened a new department, styled the accident insurance department, and hereafter the company will be wholly liable for all damages recovered because of accidents, instead of having the burden shared by the Guarantee Indemnity company of Philadelphia. The former company claims that the action is voluntary, and the latter asserts that the policies were cancelled because of an indisposition to carry the consolidated any longer. In referring to this, one of the guarantee's agents said his company had at present 1,486 cases to defend, many of which they expected to lose because of the carelessness displayed by the party or corporation insured. For this reason they were about to make a change in rates, and in some instances positively refuse to assume risks.

EVERY CENT MUST BE PAID.

Dubois' Bank President Says He Will Sacrifice Everything, If Necessary.

Dubois, Pa., April 27.—James E. Long, president of the defunct bank of Dubois, has returned home from a trip abroad. The first news he received of the bank's failure was when he was in Paris. Mr. Long said: "The assets of the bank, I am told, will come within $40,000 of paying everything. But whatever they lack will be paid, if I have to pay every cent of it myself. If the sum needed is all I have, and my wife has to sell all her personal effects and jewelry, no man will suffer. On the marble shaft above my father is the legend: 'Here lies an honest man.' I am old and broken in health, but I will begin anew, without a cent, if necessary to square off the accounts and without staining that name."

CALLED HER TO DEATH.

A Woman Prisoner Shot in Jail by Her Husband.

Lima, O., April 27.—John Perkpile shot and killed his wife in Sidney yesterday. Mrs. Perkpile was arrested in company with several men, and sentenced to fifteen days' imprisonment. Perkpile called at the jail to pay her fine, and, calling his wife the bars, pulled a revolver and shot her dead. Perkpile escaped, but a big mob is in pursuit. The Perkpiles were young people and enjoyed the best of reputations. The husband is a successful business man and the wife was a beautiful woman. It was supposed that they lived happily. Last Tuesday Perkpile left home on a business errand and on Thursday night he received a telegram announcing that his wife was in jail awaiting his assistance. He returned home and was crushed to learn the cause of his wife's arrest.

PLOTTING AGAINST HAWAII.

Revolutionary Combination Believed To Be at Work in San Francisco.

San Francisco, April 27.—There seems to be good reason to suspect that a conspiracy is on foot in this city to make more trouble for the Hawaiian provisional government. A number of inquiries have been made by persons visiting the water front as to the chances for securing a vessel suitable for transportation of goods to Hawaii. It is reported on good authority that Hawaiian Consul Wilder has been apprised of the existence of a revolutionary combination, and it is even stated that arms have already been shipped to Honolulu.

MRS. PARNELL IMPROVING.

Her Physician Now Hopeful of Her Recovery.

Bordentown, N. J., April 27.—The condition of Mrs. Parnell was more favorable this morning than at any time since the assault. She experienced no convulsions last night and has taken considerable liquid nourishment. Dr. Shipps seemed quite hopeful of the aged lady's recovery, but said an unfavorable change might occur at any moment. There are no new developments in the work of hunting down Mrs. Parnell's assailant. Casey, the arrested "suspect," has engaged counsel to look after his interest.

Archbishop Kenrick's Will Not Lost.

St. Louis, April 27.—Referring to a story relative to the will of Archbishop Kenrick, Coadjutor Archbishop Kain denies emphatically that there is any question as to who will be the former's heir. He says the story that Archbishop Kenrick's will has been lost is untrue. It is now in Archbishop Kain's possession, and there is an attested copy of the will in the hands of Archbishop Hennessey at Dubuque, Ia.

MAY LOSE NEARLY ALL

Dark Outlook for Willimantic Bank Depositors.

Capital Stock, Surplus and Probably $100,000 in Addition Wiped Out—Stockholders Are Not Wealthy Men and Risley's Bondsmen May Escape by Time Limitation.

Willimantic, Conn., April 27.—The depositors in the First National bank of Willimantic will probably lose the greater part of the money which they put into the bank. The amount of the late Cashier Risley's defalcation is not yet known, but more than $200,000 deficit has already been discovered.

Many Forgeries.

A Hartford trust company sent out yesterday $70,000 in notes which it had rediscounted for Risley and wanted them examined. It was found that more than $20,000 of the paper bore forged signatures. Bank Examiners Dooley and Lynch think they have discovered all the forged notes, but are in doubt about one of $5,000. They refuse to give the names signed to the notes. No record of the manner in which the notes were rediscounted could be found.

All Wiped Out.

The directors had no suspicions that such an amount of their paper had fallen into other hands, and the arrival of the notes put an end to all talk of opening the bank again. The capital stock of the institution is $100,000, and its surplus fund was $26,000. This and probably more than $100,000 in addition has been completely wiped out.

Stockholders Not Wealthy Men.

The stockholders are, of course, liable for an assessment of 100 per cent. but most of them are comparatively poor men, who will be unable to pay more than 35 per cent. of the amount assessed. The payment of the assessment will leave many in absolute poverty.

What Became of the Money?

Risley certainly did not spend the money on himself. His board cost him $9 a week, and he kept a pair of fast horses which cost him $25 a month. He drank and smoked, but not to excess, and had not been away from Willimantic for two weeks altogether during the last two years, when all the irregularities took place. His salary was $3,500 a year and it was supposed he lived on $2,000, as he was rather penurious. It is not probable that he speculated in stocks.

Bondsmen Cannot Be Held.

On account of the time limitation, it is probable that the men who went on Cashier Risley's bond many years ago cannot be held. A report that Risley committed suicide is to be investigated by a Hartford company in which he was insured.

PACIFIC MAIL SUBSIDIES.

Completion of the Contract with the Central American States.

Washington, April 27.—Under date of April 13 United States Minister Baker reports to the state department that W. P. Tisdel, general agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship company, has recently renewed the contract of that company with the government of Costa Rica, the last of the five Central American states. The contract took effect on March 14, and will expire April 8, 1898. The term is two years shorter than that of the contracts with the other republics. The company is to receive a subsidy of $12,000 Costa Rican currency annually for transporting the mails and having its steamers touch at the port of Punta Arenas three times a month going north and south.

Their Mails Ordered Stopped.

The steamship North Erin is ashore off Shinnecock Light.

The bursting of a reservoir near Epinal, France, has inundated many villages and drowned 38 persons.

Nicaragua has refused to accept the British ultimatum, and the British forces have taken possession of Corinto.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Theodore Marsh is slowly improving from his recent illness, and hopes to be out in a few days.

Miss Edith Darby of Ivy Villa, Alton, is visiting her friend Miss Mabelle Force of West Fourth street.

Charles H. Randolph of 442 West Front street is better, and his physician says he may go out Monday.

Wm. Startup will spend Sunday in Middletown, N. Y., visiting his mother. Mrs. Startup, who has been spending a week or two visiting there, will return with him.

Remer R. Shephard, uncle of Elisha M. Shephard, died Thursday, at his brother's residence, Brookside Farm, Bound Brook. The funeral takes place this afternoon. Deceased was a bachelor.

The friends and neighbors who have enjoyed the company of Robert Clark and family during the Winter at 20 Manning avenue, are sorry to learn that they have returned to their country home at Washingtonville for the Summer. But no one can blame them, as they have one of the most complete country homes in this part of Jersey.

The Press is indebted to E. W. Mills, local manager for the U. S. Express Company, for a copy of the company's new and valuable Express and Railway Guide. The U. S. Express is managed by Tom Platt, the man you can't lose; and you can't lose their Plainfield hustler, E. W. Mills, either.

A Reliable House.

After a tedious illness, S. H. Whitney has resumed personal charge of his business at 112 East Front street, and in his advertisement today tells of a few of the many advantages to be had by trading of him.

He gives a moquette rug free to every purchaser of $10 worth of carpetings, a line in which he excels; and not only are his prices extremely low, but also he offers an extra discount of 5 per cent. for cash. He is a most reliable and energetic merchant, and proposes to do a hustling trade this season.

No News of the Robbery.

The detective working on the First National Bank robbery case is in the city today, but has developed nothing concerning the affair but what has already been published in The Daily Press.

A sensational despatch in The Evening Sun today states that three tramps held in New Brunswick are suspected of being the robbers. The New Brunswick authorities deny this emphatically.

—Handsome badges were presented to various members of Court Plainfield, Independent Order of Foresters, last night, by Court Deputy Chief Ranger Joseph Bond.

—Plainfield people don't mind the high price of beef, for they find excellent table supplies at Rogers's, whose seafood market affords the freshest marine delicacies at low rates.

—Dr. E. B. Lighthill, having recovered his health in Plainfield, has returned to New York and resumed his large practice, at 214 West 48th street.

—Thomas McGann, a drayman who has a license in the borough but not in the city, was arraigned before Judge Coddington this morning for violating the license ordinance on this side of the brook. Sentence was suspended on his promise to take out a license.

The press is the best instrument for enlightening the mind of man and improving him as a rational, moral and social being.—Thomas Jefferson.

High School Baseball.

An attempt will be made to have at least one Plainfield baseball club this Spring. The Plainfield High School Athletic Association has discussed the question and decided to organize one. There is plenty of good material in the High School, and if sufficient enthusiasm can be aroused, there is no doubt but that an excellent team can be formed. Charles Noble '96 is the manager of the nine, he is a good player himself, and will certainly work hard for the success of the team. At present, there is no candidate for the position of pitcher, but it is to be hoped that one can be developed from the abundant material at hand.

TAMING ANIMALS.

GENTLENESS, COOLNESS AND NERVE THE ONLY REQUISITIES.

Savage Only When Frightened. Wild Animals That Are Untamable Do Not Exist. Don't Hurt or Scare Them and They'll Leave You Alone.

A great misconception has been until very recently cherished concerning wild animals. Nearly all were considered dangerous, and not a few characterized as untamable. The zebras even, which now make pretty but rather common teams for circus chariots, were long deemed quite intractable.

The only animal yet left on the untamable list is the rhinoceros, and he, too, would be conquered and made to do tricks of some sort, if he were worth while. He is enormously heavy for his size, yet with all his bulk astonishingly quick in his movements when aroused, and he has an infernally malevolent disposition. All this would not save him from being mastered and put to work, if he were not so costly a brute, but violent measures would be necessary in training him, and all he could be made to do would not be worth the risk of permanently injuring him.

In whatever other light he may cause himself to be regarded by lions and tigers, man is primarily to them, meat, and naturally if they were hungry, they will desire to eat him. But they are much more chary about involving themselves in trouble than is popularly believed and if their stomachs are full, will very willingly let him alone, provided they feel assured of the amiability of his intentions toward them.

Whatever theorists and apprehensive persons may say to the contrary, fear is a powerful factor in the mental processes of all wild creatures. Experience teaches them that vigilant self protection is a prime necessity of continued existence, and inherent love of life impels them to combat threatened dangers, even imaginary ones which they conceive to be real.

Fear of being hurt is the greatest difficulty the animals have to overcome in being educated by their trainers. When that is conquered they are generally willing enough to obey man, and even seem to take pleasure in doing so. Their educators, therefore, resort to various ingenious devices to rid them of their apprehensions as the first step in their tuition. A goat, for instance, if left to himself on a flat saddle upon a horse's back, will get to the ground in the fractional part of a second when the horse moves, for fear of being thrown off and hurt. But if suspended from a "mechanic," so that he cannot get down and will not fall even if the horse goes from under him, he very quickly learns to have confidence in himself, to keep his balance and to ride a steed that gallops and jumps hurdles.

The elephant is a positive crank on the subject of sound and safe footing, and his figure is in itself a sufficient assurance that the idea of standing on his head would never naturally occur to him. Yet circus elephants play seesaw on "teetering" planks and seem to find it sport, balance themselves on rolling barrels, with evident pride in the accomplishment, and stand on their heads without any apparent consciousness of loss of dignity or fear of a fall. And all their easy confidence is the result of having been supported by powerful tackle from the overhead beams of the training house when taking their first lessons, and subsequently guarded very carefully against falls until they were thoroughly accustomed to the novel exercises.

If the carnivorous animals habitually performed together in the great cage that are now let loose in it at one time to make their first acquaintance, probably not half of them would have survived the ceremonials of introduction. Each anticipating attack from some other, would have sought the advantage of the initiative. But that was altogether avoided by giving them opportunities to make acquaintance and in their own way exchange mutual assurances of amicable intentions. Primarily, they were put singly in adjoining compartments of cages with iron gratings between them. Then, after a few days the gratings would be removed, when the trainer was in the cage, for a short time only. Soon it would be found safe to let the animals come together all the time. To two thus made acquainted a third would be introduced in like fashion; to the three, a fourth, and so on until the aggregation was complete.

The great secrets of wild beast taming have been found to consist in careful avoidance of causing alarm, in gentle and deliberate but firm persistence in enforcement of requirements, and in prompt application of superior force when absolutely required. With these anything can be tamed—even a rhinoceros.

Making Butter from Whey.

An interesting bulletin, just issued by Cornell University Agricultural Experiment Station, describes a new process of making butter from whey. It is a well known fact that in the process of cheese making a small percentage of fat escapes in the whey. The Cornell experts were led to believe that this fat could be utilized in the form of commercial butter. "Accordingly, Jan. 18, 1895," the bulletin says, "we began to run the whey from the cheese making regularly through the separators, and we have been successful in securing a large proportion of the fat in the whey in the form of commercial butter of good quality. This butter has been scarcely, if any, inferior to that made from cream separated from whole milk, and it has been printed and sold in the same market with our best butter."

Good judges who have seen the two kinds of butter side by side have been in some cases unable to detect which was made from whey and which from cream.

A Complex Question.

Son—And the missionary was eaten by the cannibal! Will the missionary go to heaven?

Father—Oh, yes!

Son—Will the cannibal?

Father—No.

Son—He'll not! Why, how can the missionary go to heaven if the cannibal doesn't, when the missionary is inside of the cannibal?—Puck.

His Logic.

EX-SHERIFF OF ULSTER COUNTY.

Hon. Davis Winnie Owes His Health to Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy.

SHANDAKEN, N. Y.—One of the most prominent men in Ulster County is the Hon. Davis Winne, of this town. His reputation is not confined alone to this county, where he held the office of Sheriff for three years, he was also this district's representative in the New York State Legislature. For years Mr. Winne has been suffering from a complicated case of kidney and bladder trouble and congestion of the liver. Upon the advice of friends he decided to try Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. He was not disappointed, for in a short while after he began its use, he was in better health than he had been in years before.

In speaking of Favorite Remedy to your correspondent Mr. Winne said: "It has done more for me than all the physicians I ever employed, and I most unhesitatingly recommend it to any one suffering from kidney, liver or urinary troubles, for it will cure them."

Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is today the acknowledged specific for all diseases arising from acidity of the blood, and will cure dyspepsia, rheumatism, kidney, liver and urinary troubles, scrofula and eczema.

You can not afford to trifle with health and life. Putting off treatment when dangerous symptoms exist is only slow suicide. Accept the aid of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy; it has restored thousands to health and strength.

LAY WRITERS OF THEOLOGY.

English Statesmen Rush in Where Our Own Fear to Tread.

Theology is a favorite study of many English statesmen. Gladstone has written half a dozen or more theological books. Balfour, the coming man, has just broken into theology with his book on the "Foundations of Belief." Those who regard the Duke of Argyll as a statesmen must be aware that he is one of the most voluminous theological writers of the age. In running over the list of British statemongers we see the names of a lot of theologians. Henry VIII. took a hand in the theological disputes of his time, and so did Oliver Cromwell. Even Beaconsfield, while yet he was Disraeli, dabbled in theology; Peel, known as "Orange Peel," made a deep study of it; and Brougham annotated an edition of Paley.

It is queer that there never has been any great theologian among our American statesmen or high functionaries. The President now in office, for example, has given us no book on the subject, though his father was a clergyman. Harrison has made no contribution to theological literature. Buchanan, Lincoln, Jackson, Grant and most of our other Presidents were not scholars in theology. Garfield knew a good deal about it, but he wrote only fragments. Jefferson was better versed in it than any other President, but he was not orthodox. The Hon. Thomas C. Platt, though a Presbyterian by conviction, has never figured as a theologian, outside of the Sunday school. In Mr. Cleveland's cabinet there is not a theological writer. We do not know of a member of either House of Congress who is an adept in theology, though there are clergymen in both Houses.

We cannot divine how it happens that there are so many theological writers among British statesmen and in Parliament, while there is not one known to us among American statesmen or in Congress. England is ahead in this respect. —N. Y. Sun.

THE STATE OF TRADE

Review of Business for the Week Just Closing.

Continued Strength of Prices. Firmer Undertone in Nearly All Branches of Trade—Greatest Gains in Industrial Lines—Wages of Fully 75,000 Operatives Raised.

New York, April 27.—Reviewing the business situation for the week just closing, Bradstreet will say to-day: The feature of the week is the continued strength of prices of staples after the striking advances of preceding weeks. Perhaps the most relentless advance has been in hides, 3c. within ten days, from 4c. to 10c. from the lowest point. There is a firmer undertone in nearly all lines of trade, but at a number of points gains in industrial are more marked than in commercial lines. The flurry in petroleum is succeeded by a very dull market. Woolen dress goods mills have secured a number of orders for fall delivery, which accounts for the moderate activity in the market for wool. Cotton goods are firm on the advance in cotton and higher wages paid eastern mill operatives.

Wages Advanced.

The number of strikes for higher wages increases. About 25,000 people have struck in April, most of them for an advance. The number of voluntary advances in wages reported is large. During the past two weeks the wages of 50,000 operatives, most of them in textile lines, have been advanced without strikes. As most of those who struck for, received higher wages, fully 75,000 industrial operatives appear to have had their wages advanced since the beginning of April.

Bank Clearings.

Bank clearings this week indicate that the operating influences looking to the expansion of general trade increases as compared with the preceding week, being reported from 50 out of 80 cities from which Bradstreet receives these totals by telegraph. This week's aggregate is $995,000,000, a gain of nearly 7 per cent. over last week, 16 per cent. over the total for the fourth week of May, 1894, but 7 per cent. less than in the last week of April, 1893, just prior to the outbreak of the panic. The decrease this week with the like period in 1892 is 18 per cent., and in 1891 it is 11 per cent.

At Eastern Points.

Baltimore and Pittsburg alone among larger eastern cities announce an increase in the demand, the former a number of staples, notably hats, and the latter in iron and steel. At Philadelphia the advance in cotton checks demand for cotton yarns, but at Boston and Providence textile interests generally are noticeably stimulated. There have been 223 business failures in the United States this week, as compared with 219 failures last week, 201 in the week one year ago, 186 two years ago and 147 three years ago.

GERMANY AND JAPAN.

Protest Against Peace Conditions Withdrawn from the Reichstag.

Berlin, April 27.—At the request of Freiherr Marschall von Bieberstein, minister of foreign affairs, the interpellation protesting against Japan's acquirement of Chinese mainland territory, which it was proposed to introduce in the Reichstag, has been withdrawn.

Mr. Foster at Pekin.

London, April 27.—A dispatch from Pekin to the Times states that the Hon. John W. Foster and Li Hung Chang's secretary, arrived in that city yesterday, and visited the foreign office, the authorities of which held a consultation with the foreign legation later. It is thought unlikely that Li Hung Chang will come to Pekin, the dispatch states, but instead will go to Che-Foo to exchange ratifications of the treaty of peace, if the treaty is ratified.

MUST PAY FOR THE LAND.

Decision Against Settlers in the Old Crow Reservation.

Washington, April 27. — Secretary Smith has decided that lands located within the boundaries of the Old Crow Indian reservation in Montana, which, by an erroneous survey, were believed to be outside the limits of the reservation and were settled upon in good faith prior to the opening of the reservation, must nevertheless be paid for at the rate of $1.50 per acre. This is the rate fixed by law opening the reservation to settlement.

The Delaware Deadlock.

Dover, Del., April 27.—The Delaware legislators took two ballots for a United States senator yesterday but without result. Senators Moore and Pierce and Representative Fleming deserted Pennewill and cast there votes for Massey giving the latter six votes. Both ballots resulted as follows: Higgins 6, Addicks 6, Massey 6, Pennewill 1, Ridgely 8, Bayard 1.

Did Not Wish To Testify.

New York, April 27.—It is believed by many of ex-deputy chief of the fire department John McCabe's friends that he killed himself because he did not wish to testify against his former associates before the senate committee.

Many People Drowned by Floods.

Vienna, April 27.—The Hungarian towns of Mosrin, Kutoz, Vilova and Rudolphsgrad have been nearly destroyed by floods, and many persons and hundreds of cattle have been drowned.

Clarke Oratorical Contest.

Utica, N. Y., April 27.—The annual Clarke oratorical contest took place at Colgate university last night. Six seniors competed, J. W. Griffith of Nanticoke, Pa., winning the prize.

One and a Half Cents a Loaf.

Rochester, April 27.—The bread war still continues, and to-day dealers are selling 1½ for one and a half cents a loaf.

THE REASONS WHY

Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites is so useful in all wasting diseases, such as Consumption, Anæmia, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Bronchitis, and Marasmus and Rickets in children, is because it furnishes to the depleted blood the fattening and enriching properties of the oil, and to the bones and nervous system the phosphorescent and vitalizing properties of the Hypophosphites, which together nourish the body arrest the progress of the disease, and commence a process of repair that finally means restored health and vigor.

Invasion of England Appears Doubtful, and He Turns His Eyes on the East—Battle of the Pyramids and Rout of the Mamelukes—Egypt Ruled by the French.

[Copyright, 1895, by John Clark Ridpath.]

XI.—CONQUEST OF EGYPT.

Bonaparte returned to Paris on the 5th of December, 1797. His coming was heralded. The democratic Directory must receive him in the name of the people; but the act of hero-worship was embarrassing. The people of Paris must have a spectacle; and the Jacobin administration must glorify the hero of Italy. Arrangements were made at the Luxembourg Palace for a reception—first of many such—to the child of the Republic.

All France will be free; but perhaps he never will; such is his destiny." Barras, president of the Directory, also spoke. Napoleon bore himself with great modesty, pronouncing a brief speech of congratulations on the improved condition of France.

The reference to "studious retirement" in Talleyrand's address was not bad. It was an allusion to Bonaparte's election to membership in the National Institute of France. This was an honor of which he was very proud. In accepting the distinction, he said, referring to the members of the Institute, "I feel assured that before I can be their equal I must long be their scholar. True conquests—the only ones which leave no regret behind them—are those which are made over ignorance. The most honorable occupation for nations is the contributing to the extension of human knowledge. The true power of the French Republic should henceforth be made to consist in not allowing a single new idea to exist without making it a part of its property." For some time after this, Napoleon was wont to sign himself, Member of the National Institute.

Such ceremonies as those attending his reception in Paris were always regarded by Bonaparte as so much mummery—quite necessary in the make-up of glory; but very cheap. Not a month elapsed before the General became restless to a degree. To Bourrienne, his secretary, he said: "Bourrienne, I do not wish to remain here; there is nothing to do. They [the Directory] are unwilling to listen to anything. I see that if I linger here, I shall soon lose myself. Everything wears out here; my glory has already disappeared. This little Europe does not supply enough of it for me. I must seek it in the East, the fountain of glory. However, I wish first to make a tour along the coast, to ascertain by my own observation what may be attempted. I will take you, Lannes, and Sulkowsky with me. If the success of a descent on England appear doubtful, as I suspect it will, the Army of England shall become the Army of the East; I will go to Egypt."

Bonaparte was now made commander of the new army, which was alleged to be intended for an invasion of England. On the whole, it seems that he never seriously contemplated a descent on the English coast. He was too prudent for that. But he lent himself to the popular whim, and made as though he would invade the British Isles. The Directory, meanwhile, gave him no orders. It had already come to pass that he did much as he pleased. On the 10th of February, 1798, he set out from Paris with his secretary, his aide Sulkowsky, and General Lannes. He went to Etaples, Ambleteuse, Boulogne, Calais, Dunkirk, Furnes, Nieuport, Ostend, and the Isle of Walcheren; and then returned to Paris by Antwerp, Brussels, Lille, and St. Quentin. Everywhere on the journey he showed the greatest activity and discernment. His glance shot into every situation. He informed himself of the conditions existing along the coast, but did not prosecute the scheme of invasion.

The superiority of Napoleon over the men of his epoch lay in his far-reaching gaze and comprehension of great things. His vision flashed over the European landscape like a gleam of light. At twenty-eight he had already discerned that the best way to afflict Great Britain was by destroying her influence in the East. Out of this notion sprang his project of conquering Egypt. Beyond Egypt lay all Asia. "Europe," said he, "is a molehill. There have never been great empires and revolutions except in the East, where there are 600,000,000 men." The Directory readily assented to his wishes. It is in evidence that that body was more than willing to have the ambitious commander out of Europe.

On the 12th of April, 1798, Napoleon was appointed General-in-Chief of the Army of the East. Virtually he was to go where he would, and accomplish what he could. The matter once determined, he brought everything to results with the greatest rapidity. He made Toulon the rendezvous for his army and fleet. He gathered to his standard a retinue of the learned, mostly members of the Institute. He would disseminate the civilization of the West in the effete Orient. En route, he would conquer Malta, still nominally under the dominion of the Knights. That done, he would debark at Alexandria, overthrow the dominion of the Mameluke Beys, and conquer and colonize the land of the Pharaohs.

Admiral Brueys was called to the command of the fleet. Napoleon ordered his equipage to be prepared as for a conqueror, a governor, a man of letters. He made up an extensive list of books for his camp library, and in doing so spelled Du Guesclin thus—Ducesling, and Ossian thus—Ocean! Strange that this astounding cacography was not coincident on his part with ignorance of the authors referred to!

The Egyptian expedition sailed from Toulon on the 19th of May. The General's ship was the Orient. On the 10th of June, the squadron came to Malta, and that place, with its strong defenses was—partly by intrigue and partly by assault—taken from the Knights. The French flag was raised over the fortress, and many of the Knights joined the expedition. Meanwhile, an English fleet, under command of Nelson, passed the French flotilla without discovering it; sailed on to Alexandria; paused there, and then turned to the northeast, believing that Brueys had made for the coast of Syria.

All this inured to the advantage of the French. Napoleon was able to reach Alexandria without attack. On the 1st of July the column of Septimus Severus, rising in the distance, caught the sight of the French commander, and gave token of a safe arrival. The army was hastily debarked; but not sufficient care was taken to put the French fleet in a defensible position. Without a moment's delay, the city was assailed by the invader, and after some desultory fighting was captured. The conqueror of Italy easily made himself master of the city which Alexander had founded as the capital of the world.

But all Egypt was not to be so easily taken. Bonaparte proclaimed his mission as that of liberator and pacificator. The Turks and Mamelukes should be expelled; but the people of Egypt should otherwise have peace. The nation should be raised from the dust. New institutions should be founded; but the old institutions, and in particular the Mohammedan religion, should be respected. "Extend to the ceremonies prescribed by the Koran," said the General to his soldiers, "and to the mosques the same toleration which you have shown to the synagogues—to the religion of Moses and of Jesus Christ."

For six days Bonaparte had his headquarters in Alexandria. He then removed to the house of the sheik of Damanhour, and there organized his expedition up the Nile. A flotilla was ordered to ascend the river, while the army marched up the left bank. By a strong wind from the north the boats were driven ahead, and the land forces were obliged to advance without naval support. On the 14th of July, the Mamelukes, who, falling back from Alexandria, had been organized into an army under Murad Bey, made a stand at the village of Chebreisse, and were forced from that position by the French; but the action was not decisive. Meanwhile, the flotilla was assailed by the enemy from both banks of the Nile. The Mamelukes mounted small cannon on camels, and inflicted not a little loss on the Europeans. The French boats, separated from the army, were galled by these attacks. On the 23rd of July, a junction was effected, but not until a great battle had decided the campaign.

The conflict occurred on the plain within sight of the pyramids of Gizeh. It was perhaps the most picturesque battle of modern times. The French army was drawn up in squares, on the Egyptian sands. The artillery was planted at the angles of the squares. The commanders were Generals Desaix, Kleber, Berthier, and Menou—under the eye of the General-in-chief. The plains round about were covered with heavy masses of Mameluke horsemen. Bonaparte addressed his soldiers after his manner, in a sort of Pindaric apostrophe. He called their attention to the setting of the scene, and reminded them that from the summit of Khufu's pyramid forty centuries were looking down upon them. The battle was bloody and decisive. The Mamelukes were overwhelmed by thousands. The officers on the French flotilla, descending the river on the next day, saw on the bank literal heaps of the Mameluke dead which the rising Nile was gathering and bearing out to sea. Murad Bey fled to Upper Egypt, and the French entered Cairo.

Without a moment's delay Bonaparte set to work at the herculean task of reorganizing Egyptian society. He divided the country into provinces, and over each province appointed a divan, or council, of seven persons. To each he assigned a body of Janizaries. Over each a civil intendant was appointed to levy the taxes. A finance department was organized, under direction of French officers. Desaix was ordered to pursue Murad Bey into Upper Egypt. Bonaparte himself marched against Ibraham Bey, and, falling upon him at Salehyeh, defeated him and drove him back on El-Arish. The French authority was rapidly widened and confirmed throughout the country.

Four days after the battle of the Pyramids, Napoleon wrote to his brother Joseph, saying, "Egypt is richer than any other country in the world in corn, rice, vegetables and cattle. But the people are in a state of utter barbarism. We can not procure money, even to pay the troops. I may be in France in two months. Engage for me a country-house near Paris or in Burgundy, where I mean to pass the winter." To this was added a list of things necessary to be sent out from France, as follows: "A company of actors; a company of dancers; three or four dealers in marionettes; a hundred French women; the wives of all the men employed in the corps; twenty surgeons; thirty apothecaries; ten physicians; some founders; some distillers and dealers in liquor; fifty gardeners with their families; all kinds of vegetable seeds; each party to bring two hundred thousand pints of brandy; thirty thousand ells of blue and scarlet cloth; a supply of soap and oil." The purpose of the General to return to France, but to leave an army of occupation in Egypt, is sufficiently shown in these orders, in which the comedy of war is grotesquely figured on the background of statesmanship.

"Leave No Stone Unturned."

The origin of the expression, "Leave no stone unturned," is thus accounted for by authorities on the many obscure expressions used: "After the battle of Platea Mardonius, the aid of Xerxes, buried a vast amount of treasure on the field. Polycrates, consulting the oracle at Delphi as to the best means of securing the same, received the answer, "Turn every stone."—St. Louis Republic.

CASTORIA

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them, poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

CHAPTER II.

After that the wild look in the old man's eyes became more frequent. When he was not moody and silent he was fiercely muttering to himself about his wrongs. He had forgotten the existence of Tom, apparently. And there was no doubt that he literally hated Guilia. Once or twice a day she slipped quietly away from him and ran into Tom's studio for a moment to tell him of the new development and gain what small comfort he could offer her. Her father looked upon these absences with suspicion, and once when she stayed away a few moments longer than she intended he broke out upon her return with a storm of angry words which claimed that she had secretly visited the restaurant to arrange some new humiliation for him. That night he stopped playing again in the midst of a number, but Guilia, fearful, stopped, too. He eyed her, cunningly, and took up the accompaniament again.

Night after night, after that, he tried this plan. At first it rather pleased him to have her stop playing when he did. "Ah!" he would say; "you have not arranged with these dogs here to applaud you to-night after my music has stopped. You are afraid to play on for fear they will express their scorn of your poor tinkling."

"No, father," she would answer, gently; "I do not play, because I know that no one cares to hear me. It is the full tones of your guitar that they wish to hear."

But she could not pacify him.

By and by, when the wild look had grown almost habitual with him, he tired of these tactics. He was angry when she stopped playing because he did. He wanted her to let him enjoy the triumph of her defeat. When she stopped he would hiss: "Keep on! keep on! Ah! you are afraid. You will not give me the satisfaction of proving that I am right." But Guilia knew what the result would be if she kept on, and would not play. For a whole week this continued, the old man growing uglier every night.

Finally a day came when he kept her in a state of terror constantly. All day he walked up and down muttering to himself. Just before the time came for them to start he wheeled toward her suddenly and demanded, almost in a scream:

"Will you play alone to-night?"

"I cannot play without you, father—the people do not want to hear me," she replied.

"We shall see," he shouted back, "we shall see whether my daughter will longer disobey me!"

They walked to the restaurant in silence. Their first three numbers went off smoothly. The fourth was "La Palerma"—an arrangement prepared by the old man himself, and with an immensely difficult mandolin part. They began it as usual; then the old man stopped. Guilia had feared this, and she turned her eyes quickly to him with an appealing glance. He had dropped his hands until his guitar lay across his knees, and was fumbling with something which he kept under the cloth of the table at which they were sitting. She paid no attention to this, but looked straight into his eyes.

"Please, please, play, father," she entreated.

When he answered her his eyes were red as fire and his face was as yellow as parchment. His voice was a thick and husky whisper, so low that she could scarcely hear. An expression of cunning hatred and triumph played in the wrinkles around his lips.

"Play? I will not play. Look down. See what I have in my hand, and you play."

She looked down, and peeping from the folds of the tablecloth was the end of a pistol barrel with its black little bore pointed straight at her body. She started back in amazement and fright. She realized now what the wild look meant. Her father had gone quite mad. Her lips parted.

"Don't scream," he hissed. "One sound from your lips, and I shall fire. Not a word. But play! play! Now we shall see! Now we shall see! You have thwarted me long enough. To-night you have not plotted with the people here to give you applause that you do not deserve. Play alone and we shall see how they will hiss you and scorn you."

"Father, dear father—" she began.

"Not a word, not a syllable. Play!"

The old man's face plainly showed that he had reached a point in his insanity where he would carry out his desperate intention to its desperate end. Guilia, after an unhappy glance about her which no one noticed, began to play. Her nervous fingers lost a note.

"No mistakes," came intensely from the old man. "No mistakes on your life."

PEEPING FROM THE FOLDS OF THE TABLECLOTH WAS A PISTOL.

He went on with the music, her heart beating almost as fast as her fingers flew.

"Play! Play!" he constantly hissed.

From tremolo to staccato, from pianissimo to fortissimo the music changed, while all the time Guilia's heart was shrinking with fear and breaking with grief. When she came to the passage where the clacking of the castanets comes, when the piece is played by an orchestra, he whispered, close in her ear:

"Louder! No shirking now; I want to show that your best, alone, is not good enough for them!"

And louder, she twanged the strings.

At last she approached the end of the piece, occasionally as she looked momentarily from the notes which lay before her on the table. She caught a glimpse of that wicked, black little hole in the bright steel circle, concealed from all but her, and knew that there was death in it if she disobeyed. It was with great relief that she began to strike the fine full chords that terminate the piece.

But her heart sank within her when she heard, close to her ear:

"Again! Repeat it, and faster! faster!"

Her tired fingers started again on the different notes.

"Faster! Faster!" whispered the voice at her ear.

Faster and faster the pick twinkled on the staccato and shook on the tremolo, and faster and faster the fingers of the other hand danced and pattered over the strings and frets. It was magnificent—the music that the fear of death was drawing out of the pale-faced, black-haired girl. Faster and faster. Diners stopped their eating and paused to listen, amazed by it. Such music had never come from a mandolin before.

"Glorious!" whispered a girl to her lover at one table. "See how excited she is."

From harmony to song; from song to tinkle; merriment, pathos, wild abandon — all were in the music; none hinted at the tumult in the poor girl's heart. Not one of those who heard, guessed it.

But back of the musicians, half hidden by an angle in the wall, sat the big blonde artist. Every night since Pizzi had ordered him away, he had come before the music and staid until after the musicians had gone. To-night he, like the others, had been amazed by Guilia's playing. At first he thought that she was simply singing out her sorrows on the mandolin, but a glance at the musicians showed that something was wrong. Pizzi, now with his face flushed, was bending forward, gazing at Guilia with an intensity which seemed to Tom to bode mischief. Guilia bore the paleness of death upon her face. Tom saw the old man lean toward her and whisper something into her ear. A wave of color swept over her face and her renewed effort was evident. Some person, too delighted by her music to wait for her to stop before expressing his approval, shouted: "Bravo!" Tom saw the old man, his dearest hope dashed to earth by that shout, start and look quickly around the room. Then there came into his face the expression of a wild animal. That shout of glory for his daughter was a shout of failure for himself. His look of hatred and fury was so intense that Tom rose from his chair and started toward them, while Guilia still played magnificently, now pale as death again.

Tom hastened and in an instant stood close behind the musicians. It was just as he reached them that the second shout of "Bravo!" came. The old man did not wait to look about the room this time. Tom, watching him as a cat might watch a mouse, saw a quick motion of his hand and then saw what was in it. With a spring he caught the pistol barrel and forced it down toward the floor. There was a report—partly drowned by the crash of the last fear-forced chord on Guilia's mandolin and muffled by the tablecloth which had in the struggle been bunched about the pistol's muzzle. Guilia's instrument fell rattling to the floor as she dropped back unconscious in her chair. Tom despite his bullet-punctured, bleeding hand, still held old Pizzi's now nervous fingers and with the other hand pressed firmly but soothingly on the old man's shoulders.

"Signor," he said, quietly, his English calmness now helping him, "you are excited. Do not be frightened. We all understand. It was an accident. It has harmed no one very much."

Poor old Pizzi! With the culmination of his mad anger he had broken. There was no fierceness left—there was no anything left except the wretched old shell of what had once been a great artist. In a moment he rallied, though, and it was evident that his mind was wandering along pleasant paths. It had left the tempestuous ways of the mountains of his anger and turned to the peaceful valley, sunwrapt and smiling. He looked up at Tom with the smile of a baby on his face.

"Guilia! Guilia, my daughter! did you hear her play?" he whispered slowly.

"Yes," said Tom gently, and I think he was unconscious of his wound. At least he paid no attention to it, although it dropped blood on the carpet and dyed the tablecloth. "Yes, I heard her," he repeated.

The old man's face was contorted with strange twitchings when he essayed to reply. One syllable only could he speak. "Mag—" he uttered twice with lips that trembled and tongue that rolled indefinitely and would not do his bidding. "Mag—" "Mag—" "Mag—" he repeated, but could go no farther.

No one called the police. The guests of the restaurant who had gathered about the group or three in inquisitive excitement did not understand the muffled report and Tom's wound, but they did understand that the old musician's hands had been stricken with something that would bind them tighter than rheumatism had.

After Guilia revived they carried him away. Constantly he muttered "Mag—" "Mag—" "Mag—". It was midnight before he could complete the word, and with its completion came that of old Pizzi's life. But it was a pleasant ending for them both. Tom and Guilia were watching over him and the doctor, realizing, stepped away. Pizzi started again at the beginning of the tribute which had been stopped by the paralysis. Before he passed out of the sunshine into the shadow of the valley, he was warmed into correcting the error he had made. "Guilia!" he whispered. "Did you hear my daughter Guilia play?"

"Yes, yes," whispered Tom, bending close to him.

The wrinkles in the poor, contorted old face smoothed out into a smile.

"Mag—nif—i—cent!" came the unfinished acknowledgment. "Magnificent! She—is—a—great—artist."

And with this final tribute to the great artist whose day was coming, the great artist whose day was past breathed deeply, and his words, like his music, were forever silenced.

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND

Best Spring Remedy in the World---It Makes People Well.

There is one true specific for diseases arising from a debilitated nervous system, and that is Paine's celery compound, so generally prescribed by physicians. It is probably the most remarkable remedy that the scientific research of this country has produced. Prof Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL. D., of Dartmouth college first prescribed what is known the world over as Paine's celery compound, a positive cure for dyspepsia, biliousness, liver complaint, neuralgia, rheumatism, all nervous diseases and kidney troubles. For the latter Paine's celery compound has succeeded again and again where everything else has failed.

The medical journals of this country have given more space in the last few years to the many remarkable cases where the use of Paine's celery compound has made people well than to any other one subject.

Borough Sidewalk Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the ordinance of the Borough of North Plainfield requires that flag sidewalks be laid and prohibits the laying of new board walks or repairing of old board walks.

An impression seems to exist that old board walks may be repaired without violation of the ordinance.

This is not the fact. In every case where any repair of a board walk is necessary stone must be used.

Public notice of this fact is now again given so that no one need feel aggrieved if they are required to replace a newly laid or repaired board walk with stone.

Dated April 22, 1895.

Chairman Street Committee.

Magic, Mirth and Mystery.

Herrmann, the great practitioner of the art diabolique, will give in Music Hall Wednesday night a programme of illusions, mystifications, marvels and miracles. He gives special attention this season to a number of mechanical illusions that are costly, brilliant and spectacular.

In "The Artist's Dream" an artist has painted the picture of his ideal and falls in love with it. He is placing the finishing touches to it when it suddenly becomes flesh and blood.

Madame Herrmann, as ever the able assistant of the magician, has a large share of responsibility in the entertainment. She dances in a ray of fourteen calciums, and the many new combinations of color present a new invention in dancing which has never been seen here before.

The Galley Slave Tomorrow Night.

Of all the late Bartley Campbell's plays, the most popular one is "The Galley Slave". Each year it seems to grow better. The company to present it in Music Hall tomorrow night is the same which has just closed most successfully in New York, Philadelphia and Boston, and includes such recognized players as Miss Lora Addison Cliff, who is not only an accomplished actress but also a very beautiful woman; Miss Loduski, identified with such sterling stars as the late Edwin Booth and Frank Mayo; Miron Leffingwell, for several seasons leading man at the Girard Avenue Theatre, Philadelphia; Carroll Daly, one of the best leading heavy men on the road; W. W. Allen, of Old Homestead fame; J. A. Wheelock, and many others, who helped to make this grand old piece a success of the season, under the management of Goodrich and Daly.

On the first of May we shall begin publication of a remarkable detective story from the pen of PARK BENJAMIN, the well known scientist and civil engineer. It is a tale of the present day, and we guarantee that anyone who begins it will read it to the end. For ingenuity of plot and deftness of literary treatment, this story is remarkable.

Don't fail to read how the great city of New York fell into the peril of sudden destruction, from which it was finally rescued after a series of decidedly interesting adventures.

Thieves Scared Away.

At a late hour last night thieves entered the home of J. E. Townsend on Coddington avenue and were preparing to make a large haul when they were detected. Mr. Townsend heard a noise made by the opening of a door, and he got out of bed immediately. Before he could reach the first floor the sneaks made their escape. There were several valuable pieces of silverware and two gold watches in the room, and had the thieves not been scared away they would have made a good haul.

A Bleak Sunday.

The rain of Saturday spoiled the wheeling for yesterday so that scarcely a bicyclist could be seen all through the day. Late in the afternoon a few ambitious wheelmen ventured out, but none went far, owing to the muddy roads. A club of wheelmen from Brooklyn had expected to have a run to this city yesterday, but none of them appeared on account of the poor condition of the roads. As a whole, it was a poor day for out-of-door pleasure.

—George Conover went to New York this morning to move a family to this city.

THE ADVANCED WOMEN.

They Get Together on an April Day.

NEVER MIND THE WEATHER.

They Are Here to Celebrate the Monday Afternoon's Club's Anniversary, and Royally They Do It.

The Congregational Church was filled with an audience of cultured and brilliant women this morning who attended to hear the literary exercises of the seventh anniversary of the Monday Afternoon Club.

The meeting was presided over by Mrs. Isaac L. Miller, president of the club. Arranged about the platform were a few choice and beautiful potted palms and plants.

In her address of welcome Mrs. Miller said there was no special significance to the occasion though this was the seventh anniversary of the organization. She said that the organization was practically the same as that of seven years ago. During the interval since its formation a great deal of talk has been indulged in with the result of increasing the club's mental fibre very largely; the increase in membership had been large since that time, and of course they had a feeling of braveness and substantiality. Mrs. Miller's remarks were very brief, at the conclusion of which she introduced Mrs. William Todd Helmuth, president of the Sorosis club, who spoke on the subject, "How Sorosis was begun". Mrs. Helmuth said that Sorosis was the first woman's club organized in this country—the beginning of a spirit which had grown extensively throughout the United States. The inception of the club was at the suggestion of several members of a New York press club. At first all efforts made towards organizing a woman's club were treated as jokes, but one of its earliest and most sincere advocates was Horace Greeley. The principles and aims at first suggested for the club to adopt were many and varied, but the objects finally decided on were to provide sort of a free masonry among women of artistic and literary minds.

"Working Girls Clubs" was the theme which Miss Katharine Jones of the New York college settlement spoke of. Working girls clubs she said, worked along lines that were practical rather than theoretical. So long as one class of women are rising higher and higher and another class going lower and lower the need of these clubs is evident. One of the principal aims was to prevent early marriages, which, to a large extent in the cities, caused the slums to exist.

Mrs. Margaret Yardley, President of the New Jersey Federation of Woman's Clubs, spoke on "How the Federation helps your club and mine". The great trouble she had encountered in her work was that a great many clubs considered only how much they could get out of the Federation, rather than what they might contribute.

"The Democracy of Clubs" was spoken of by Julia Ward Howe, whose appearance on the platform was greeted with enthusiastic applause. She said that in all our lives there is some central thought or idea, and it was so in club life. Her idea of club democracy was to permit all to enter on the same level and have the same chances for benefit along the lines which the club sought to attain.

"Is there such a thing as club can't," was what Miss Florence Howe Hall spoke of. In the sense of insincere words she did not think there was club can't.

Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson spoke of "The Value of Club Discussion". The value of discussion, she said, was the interchange of thought, conviction and sentiment.

Mrs. E. W. Conklin gave an interesting address on what she considered to be an ideal club woman.

"What constitutes higher education" was logically discussed by Miss Kate Thompson.

The exercises were closed by Miss Elizabeth A. Kenyon, founder of the club, who spoke on "Has our club reached its highest development?"

Immediately after the club members and invited guests repaired to the Casino where a dinner was served.

This was the menu, prepared and served under the efficient direction of Thomas Toombe: Strawberries; puree of clams; olives; almonds; radishes; homard farcie; filet de beouf hote; petits pois francaise; pommes parisienne; plumier d'ori; salad laittue and tomat; glaces fantasie; petits fours; coffee.

A Russian Honeymoon.

Everyone concerned in the forthcoming production of "A Russian Honeymoon" is hard at work this week as the play is only 10 days off. The enthusiasm among the cast, principals, peasants, soldiers and all, grows daily as one detail of the finished programme after another drops into place.

The production promises to be the most brilliant one ever given by amateurs in Plainfield.

Costuming, setting and accessories have all been carefully planned to produce the most elaborate and beautiful stage pictures. The music alone, consisting of a large orchestra and well-trained singers for the incidental choruses, would make a long and varied programme in itself. Everything that can be conducive to the pleasure and comfort of the audience has been done. People will have time to eat their dinners in comfort and be sure of their seats; the house will be clean, cool and airy, and the waits will be short.

Applications for seats are coming in thick and fast and the management has provided a diagram, to be corrected daily, that may be seen at Reynolds's pharmacy where orders may be left as well as sent to P. O. Box 644. No one should fail to see this play, as by going he will be sure of a most excellent performance, and besides will be helping the most thoroughly admirable charity in Plainfield.

The management requests that any failure to receive tickets after today be reported at once.

Miss Wray's Effective Talk.

The auditorium in the Y. M. C. A. Building yesterday afternoon was well filled with men to hear Miss Sara Wray of New York. P. Ludwig Conde and the Symphony Orchestra assisted at the service, and rendered a pleasing selection during the offertory. Miss Wray's remarks were very impressive and full of interest. She related in a telling manner many of her experiences in the great cities, and told of scores of conversions which had taken place under remarkable circumstances. Several evidenced a desire to lead a better life at the close of her talk.

There's Only One Company with a Trunk Line.

Westfield is trying to decide whether she wants the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company in her town or a local system of which Mr. Pucci is manager. The latter system does away with operators, they claim, but if the town wants to be in it with the outside world she would better consider the N. Y. & N. J. company's offer. There will be a meeting in Westfield tonight to decide the matter.

She's One of the Many He Impersonates

"Caparison's are odorous"; "You go first and we will precede you"; "I'm quite analyzed for my part"; "No delusions to the past, if you please, Sir!"—are a few of Mrs. Malaprop's "parts of speech". She is a strikingly original character, and Mr. Underhill has so carefully studied Mrs. John Drew in the part that he has been able to work out a very good imitations. A delightful evening is in store for all who go to the Casino Thursday evening.

Our better halves say they could not keep house without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is used in more than half the homes in Leeds. Sims Bros., Leeds, Iowa. This shows the esteem in which that remedy is held where it has been sold for years and is well known. Mothers have learned that there is nothing so good for colds, croup and whooping cough, that it cures these ailments quickly and permanently, and that it is pleasant and safe for children to take. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. MR. FROST HOME AGAIN.

He Brings Positive Ideas on Plainfield Sewerage.

HE INVESTIGATED IN ENGLAND.

Disposal Beds to Be Forthwith Established on Land to be Condemned Within the City Limits—Rock Avenue and Front Street a Suitable Locality—Satisfied the Sewage Farm Will Establish Its Inoffensiveness.

Councilman George H. Frost and wife, of Watchung avenue, arrived home Saturday evening from a two-months European trip.

One of the first to call and extend congratulations on their safe arrival home was a Daily Press reporter.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Frost feel greatly recuperated and invigorated in health, a fact that was made evident by the hale and hearty salutation with which the reporter was greeted.

During their trip they spent five weeks viewing the sights of London, and also some little time enjoying the healthful atmosphere of noted South-of-England seaside resorts. They had pleasant weather.

Mr. Frost devoted some time to visiting and personally investigating the workings and results of two of the best of the English sewage farms, in order that he might understand this method of sewage disposal. At present the matter of sewage disposal is one of the most important problems with which the municipality has to deal, by reason of the proposed adoption of intermittent filtration and the opposition which has been encountered by the authorities in the attempt to consummate any such plan. However, the matter is no longer a problem to Mr. Frost, who returns with well defined and clear opinions, gained by the knowledge which he has acquired from personally inspecting two of England's noted sewage farms—the Croydon and the Wimbledon.

The reporter asked Mr. Frost what conclusions he had formed concerning these farms which would be of interest and applicable to this city and vicinity.

"The chief result of my visit"—replied the Councilman—"is that it removes every feeling of doubt in my mind as to the feasibility of the city of Plainfield using the intermittent filtration system for sewage disposal. If the Piscataway Township Committee, who refused the city the right to purchase and use lands within the territory over which they have authority, for sewage disposal purposes, could visit these farms in England, they might possibly change their present opinions on this subject.

"The territory surrounding the Wimbledon farm is partially built up with a superior-class of residences." To illustrate this Mr. Frost showed the reporter maps of Wimbledon and Croydon farms showing the populated territory closely bordering their limits.

"The sewage to the Croydon farm comes in a stream larger than the volume of Green brook and in its fresh condition was free from offense. The Croydon farm contains 632 acres. I visited it March 22, when the first crop of grass was almost ready to cut. The inflow was a river of raw sewage from a populous city; the effluent was a stream of clear water. No better illustration of how little the people in that vicinity cared for or were interested in the close proximity of the sewage beds to their homes, is afforded than by the fact of a gentleman telling me that he had never yet visited the farm, and did not know it was operated, though he lived within a half-mile of it. Three hours after the sewage leaves Croydon city it is disposed of, thus obviating any posible chance of its becoming offensive."

"Now that the city has been denied the privilege of establishing beds where it was proposed, what policy do you think is best for the city to follow out?"—asked the reporter of Mr. Frost, to which he replied:

"The city being debarred from going outside, can now only resort to the use of territory within its own limits. So sure are the sewer beds to be void of offense that the true policy is to go on and condemn property, which the law authorizes the Council to do within the city, and finish our system as contemplated, and by an actual illustration demonstrate its efficiency and inoffensiveness. The time may come when these sewage beds may be needed for residential purposes; the city may then deem it advisable to sell and remove to more remote and cheaper property".

"But"—suggested the reporter—"do you not think any other plan of sewage disposal probable? You know there is talk that the Council really means to adopt tidewater disposal."

"In my opinion"—replied Mr. Frost—"the best method is filtration beds; tidewater disposal means pumping-works and maintenance."

"What section of the city is most desirable for the location of the beds?"

"The land in the vicinity of Rock avenue and Front street is the best situated for this purpose."

"How many acres will be needed?"

"I should say 40 or 50. The farm to be a success must be properly managed, just the same as anything else. To turn the sewage on the ground and leave it without attention would doubtless cause a nuisance. On the Croydon farm 60 men are employed constantly. In the location of the sewage beds the city officials will probably be criticised, but they cannot prevent that, and they need not care so long as they know that they are promoting the best interests of the city."

He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. NICARAGUA'S PROTEST

Statement Issued by President Zelaya.

Bewails Her Weakness and Counts Upon Sympathy—England, He Says, Is Collecting by Force Money Not Due Her—Efforts To Keep the Populace in Restraint.

Managua, Nicaragua, April 29.—The following has been issued by President Zelaya: Nicaragua protests before all nations against the outrage which Great Britain inflicts upon her by military occupation of the port of Corinto in order to seize from her by force a sum of money which is not owed, in absolute disregard of international laws and of the dictates of right, justice and equity. Nicaragua, although counting upon the sympathy of all, as she is powerless to oppose the aggressor, is ready to submit the case without fear, bewailing her smallness and weakness. ZELAYA.

Excitement Increasing.

London, April 29.—Advices received here from Nicaragua state that the excitement throughout Nicaragua increases. Great disappointment is expressed at the failure of the United States to secure some modification of Great Britain's terms. While the conservative course pursued by the Washington government was fully expected by President Zelaya and his cabinet, in view of the information furnished to them by the Nicaraguan minister at Washington, the people generally believed that the United States would interfere.

Trying To Restrain the Populace.

The Nicaraguan government is exerting itself to restrain the populace. No indication has yet been given of an immediate intention to pay the indemnity, although the continued occupation of Corinto must sooner or later prove very embarrassing to Nicaragua. Mr. Bayard's request for a brief respite in order that Nicaragua might pay the indemnity in London, it is stated here, was refused by Lord Kimberley. Had this respite been granted, Nicaragua would have borrowed the money in New York to settle the British demand.

British Still in Control.

Washington, April 29.—The situation in Corinto remains unchanged. Dr. Guzman, the Nicaraguan minister, this morning in reply to a cable dispatch asking for specific information as to the position of affairs, received from Manuel Mutus, secretary of foreign affairs, an official dispatch stating that the British were still in control of the city.

British Flags Flying.

The British flag was flying over the custom house and the Nicaraguan flag has been withdrawn from all public places. All the national authorities have deserted the town and Corinto at present is practically a British possession. The dispatch contained no further particulars which leads Dr. Guzman to believe that all is quiet in the republic.

PRESS COMMENT.

Views of the London Papers on the Nicaraguan Affair.

London, April 29.—The Morning Post will say to-day: "That Nicaragua permitted extreme measures shows a decided opposition on her part to the policy pursued by Mr. Cleveland. We are inclined to think the true reason for her course is an understanding that she shall act with Venezuela, both meaning to do their most to induce Washington to espouse their cause on the ground that holding aloof would contravene the Monroe doctrine. Whatever President Monroe's views were, he certainly never meditated assisting a state which insulted a foreign nation. It may be assumed that Nicaragua's action will fail."

Like a Big Policeman.

The Daily Chronicle will say to-day: "The situation in Nicaragua has reached an almost ludicrous point. England is in the position of a policeman who has captured a little boy a long way from the police station and does not know what to do with him. The boy lies in the gutter menacing terrible revenge by his big brother. The policeman's position is equally humiliating and profitless. Sooner or later Nicaragua, of course, must pay and beg pardon. The United States is acting a friendly part towards Great Britain and Nicaragua in urging the latter to pay the indemnity at the earliest moment."

An Unpleasant Affair.

The Times will say: "Until Nicaragua relents we must keep our ships where they are, whatever the inconvenience to ourselves. Should Nicaragua persevere in her present attitude, it may be necessary to supplement them. It is throughout an unpleasant affair. The attitude of the United States appears to have been most friendly and correct. We believe that, despite the efforts of some newspapers to create ill-feeling, the people cordially endorse the government's course."

One of Troy's Oldest Doctors Dead.

Troy, N. Y., April 29.—Dr. M. H. Burton, who died yesterday from an affection of the kidneys, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. J. Ives Pumb, at Bayshore, Long Island, was one of this city's oldest and best known medical practitioners. He was a delegate to the medical conference at Berlin.

Canadian Embezzler Arrested.

Chicago, April 29.—Alexander C. J. Wilkie, the bookkeeper for Wilmot D. Matthews of Toronto, Canada, who is said to be short $40,000 in his accounts, after eluding the Canadian authorities for more than a month, is under arrest here awaiting extradition.

Successful Strike for More Wages.

Baltimore, April 29.—The 300 men employed at Tyson's chromo works, who went on strike Saturday for an increase of 10 per cent. in wages, returned to work this morning their demands having been granted.

Burned to Death in His Stable.

Canton, O., April 29.—R. R. Tessie, a leading citizen, while filling hay shutes in his stable last night, was burned to death. He fell into one of the chutes and his lantern ignited the hay.

New York Legislature.

CUBAN INSURRECTION

Spanish Troops Building Fortifications.

Rebels Steal Gunpowder and Dynamite from an American Company—Lieutenant Gallego Sentenced to Death and Shot—Troops Demolish Furniture of Cabins.

Santiago de Cuba, April 27, via Key West, Fla., April 29.—The report that the body of the man found in the woods near Guantanamo is Maceo, is not confirmed, and is discredited here. There has been no serious engagements since the arrival of Campos. Eight hundred soldiers of Spain landed yesterday. The troops were sent to reinforce the detachments at the railroad towns of Dos Caminos and San Luis. The latter place is the terminus of the road.

Troops Building Forts.

The insurgents have removed the gunpowder and dynamite in the iron mines near here, the property of an American company. The government censorship of telegraph and newspapers is more rigid. The wires to the interior are still down. Ten Cubans left the city Sunday to join the insurgents.

Benjamin Gallego, lieutenant of the fifth battalion, peninsular regiment, who was court martialled, was shot here yesterday. He was in command of sixty men in custody of arms and ammunition at Juragua city. He was surprised Sunday by the insurgents and disarmed in a saloon. Seventy rifles and six thousand rounds of ammunition were captured. Gallego and the soldiers were released. The authorities placed all under arrest and condemned Gallego to be shot. The others were confined.

GREEN GOODS' NEW HOME.

Headquarters Now Said To Be Located at Allentown.

Allentown, Pa., April 29.—The police and United States detectives have been vainly trying for weeks to locate Frank H. Howard. Under that name a gang of green goods men have been operating in nearly every state of the union for several months. The circulars are all mailed from New York city, but the victim is directed to conduct all business with Howard in Allentown, his address here being given as 704 Hamilton street. The circular quotes the price at $3,000 of the goods for $300 real money, and larger proportionate rates. The recipient is strictly instructed to telegraph, never to write. The postmaster here seizes every letter that arrives addressed to Howard. In three months he has captured over 500, which have come from intended victims who disobeyed instructions and did not telegraph replies. By means of a countersign the strangers who come here discover the mysterious Howard. The victim is well entertained for a day and then taken to New York city, where he meets other buncoers. It recently developed that two of the victims came to this city all the way from Montana.

BRODIE'S RIVAL.

"Toronto Red" Makes a Daring Leap at Buffalo.

Buffalo, April 29.—"Toronto Red," the now famous newsboy, made an addition to his already long list of daring feats yesterday afternoon by leaping from the highest point of the Lackawanna trestle, a distance of 105 feet. A large number of persons in the vicinity became unexpected witnesses to the leap. He watched until the bridge was at a safe distance and then jumped upon the railing and the next moment had leaped. He jumped out a little but struck in almost perpendicular line from the edge of the bridge. On the way down he apparently made no effort to control his movements. When about ten feet from the water he turned slightly over on his left side and struck the water sideways. A moment later his head appeared above the water and he was immediately pulled into a boat in waiting by his companions, smiling and apparently unhurt.

CHANGES AT THE MINTS.

Plans To Take the Service Out of State Politics.

Washington, April 29.—The reported selection of Herman Kretz, the present appointment clerk of the treasury department, as superintendent of the United States mint at Philadelphia, vice Townsend, removed or resigned, and of W. E. Morgan, now examiner in the mint bureau here, as coiner of the Philadelphia mint, vice Steel, transferred, are stated to be the entering wedges of an entirely new departure in the matter of the administration of United States mints and assay offices. Both gentlemen are democrats and citizens of Pennsylvania, Mr. Kretz being from Reading, Pa., and Mr. Morgan from Philadelphia, but neither was urged for appointment by either of the contending factions of local politicians. The purpose is to take the mint service out of state politics, not only in Pennsylvania, but in other states where United States mints and assay offices are located.

THE LATE W. N. GRISWOLD.

Sketch of His Interesting Career Abroad and at Home.

New York, April 29.—William Noyes Griswold who died at his home in West Orange, N. J., last week, of brain trouble, entered the service of the khedive of Egypt before he was 20 years old, and afterward became captain of a Chinese naval vessel sent out to fight Malay pirates. When the civil war began, he returned to this country and enlisted in the navy with the rank of sailing captain. He served through the war and was engaged in several of its most noted naval battles. At the time of the sinking of the Merrimac, Captain Griswold had the deck of the Minnesota under his command, and he was in charge of a vessel in the blockading squadron on the Mississippi at the capture of New Orleans. At the close of the war Captain Griswold refused a commission as commodore, and engaged in the real estate business.

Leander has gone to Takau and German sailors have been landed at Tamsui from the Irene to protect foreigners. The Chinese soldiers killed their general on April 22. The governor's body guard attacked them, killing thirty and wounding fifty. The governor is accused of stealing the soldier's pay, which is two months in arrears. The Chinese artillery threaten to fire on any vessels leaving Formosa with treasure.

THE BOUZY DISASTER

Loss of Life Far Beyond First Estimates.

About 130 Deaths Known To Have Been Caused and Scores of Persons Missing—More Than 200 Families Homeless—Searching for the Bodies—Burying Cattle.

Paris, April 29.—Reports of the devastation caused by the bursting of the reservoir at Bouzy Saturday have been received from Epinal hourly. The loss of life is far beyond the first estimates. About 130 deaths are now known to have been caused by the flood, and the list may grow, as in the confusion and ruin it has been impossible to account for scores of persons who are missing. The search for dead bodies is still in progress. Thirty or more of the dead were buried to-day.

Many Families Homeless.

The villages and peasant farms in the path of the flood are strewn with the wrecks of buildings and are covered with heavy layers of mud. More than 200 families are homeless and destitute. M. Leygues, minister of the interior, has gone with a staff of officials to the afflicted district to distribute money among the needy. Most of the towns near Epinal have sent food and clothing to the destitute sufferers.

Little More Than a Morass.

A large part of the valley is little more than a morass with timbers and uprooted trees protruding from the mud. The soldiers who are looking for bodies make only slow progress, as the work of digging in the debris is necessarily slow. Much damage was done in the villages at some distance from the dam. As the flood swept down the valley it gathered an immense quantity of timber and tree trunks, which were thrown against the buildings in the lower neighborhoods.

Burying Cattle and Sheep.

Fifty thousand persons visited the scenes of desolation yesterday. The little Aviere brook, which ordinarily is but seven feet wide, has been converted into a lake a mile and a half broad. Soldiers and workingmen from the department of roads are burying cattle and sheep as rapidly as possible to prevent disease. Hundreds of carcases have been put under ground. The masonry on the Bouzy dam was begun in 1879 and finished in 1884. It was strengthened in 1889. The dam was 550 yards long, 66 feet high, and the same thickness at the base. It was built against vertical rock and of sandstone.

MURDERED AND ROBBED.

Fred Boebel's Body Then Thrown from a Freight Train by Tramps.

Mansfield, O., April 29.—Fred Boebel, a member of the firm of Daum & Boebel, street contractors of this city, was shot, killed, robbed and thrown from a Pennsylvania freight train between Crestline and Mansfield some time Saturday night. His body was found yesterday. Boebel was 45 years of age, and leaves a wife and four children. The murdered man had been at Monroeville, Ind., and Van Wert, O. He is supposed to have missed the train at Crestline and boarded a freight train in which were tramps, who shot him four times, assaulted him with a piece of railroad iron, and, after robbing him of quite a sum of money, threw the body from the train. A Pennsylvania mileage book, No. 34,247, was also taken.

DESPERATE THROUGH CRUELTY

An Ill-Treated Mother Drowns Her Babies and Herself.

Baker City, Oregon, April 29.—The dead bodies of Mrs. Ernest May Waldt and her two children, aged three years and eighteen months, respectively, were found in Power river, near Summer, 25 miles from here. Driven to desperation by ill treatment of her husband, who drank to excess, the unfortunate woman chose death by drowning, taking her babes with her rather than put up any longer with her husband's abuse.

A STUDENT HUSBAND.

Held in Bail on a Charge of Deserting His Wife.

Philadelphia, April 29.—Walter J. Robbins, a student at the University of Pennsylvania, on Saturday was held in $500 bail, charged with deserting his wife, Alice J. Robbins, who lives with her parents in New York. The couple were married in Camden on December 4, 1893, by the Rev. Mr. Burrell, and Mrs. Robbins alleges that her husband deserted her in August last, while they were stopping at Ocean Grove.

Body Found in a Tank.

Springfield, Mass., April 29.—Joseph Sawyer, a carpenter employed by B. L. Bragg, of this city, was found dead in a tank in the creamery of R. M. Bragg, of West Springfield, yesterday afternoon. The tank had just been built, and he was engaged in painting the interior. Friday was the last time he was seen, and it was thought he died of heart disease, as no marks were found on his body.

"Lucky" Baldwin Changes Trainers.

San Francisco, April 29.—"Lucky" Baldwin, the millionaire turfman, has decided to change trainers and to-day Sam Hildreth will sign a contract to take charge of the Baldwin stable. This action is due to Baldwin's dissatisfaction with Trainer Brien's management of the string and scandals in connection with it during the past year.

Brooklyn Trolley's 108 Victim.

Brooklyn, N. Y., April 29. — James Hafheimer, aged 21 years, a deaf mute, was knocked down and instantly killed by a trolley car of the West End and Coney Island railroad last night. This makes the 108th person killed by the trolley cars in this city.

Starter Caldwell Married.

New York, April 29.—James F. Caldwell known to racegoers both east and west, was married last evening at his home, on Fifty-seventh street, to Mrs. Grace Churchill Foster, a sister of the late Mrs. Caldwell, and a young, wealthy and attractive widow.

Preacher's Residences Their Mark.

Washington, April 29.—A gang of thieves have been operating in this city who have made a specialty of burglarizing the residences of ministers of the gospel while the owners were conducting their Sunday night services.

TRIED TO END HIS LIFE.

Mrs. Blackwell's Supposed Murderer Cuts His Throat in Jail.

Easton, Pa., April 29.—Samuel Carpenter, who is accused of the murder of Mrs. Ray Blackwell, at Phillipsburg, N. J., on Thursday night last, and who has been in jail here since Friday awaiting the action of the Warren county, N. J., authorities, attempted suicide yesterday morning by cutting his throat with a razor. He borrowed the razor from Patrick Morgan, his cell mate, to shave himself. He lathered himself and then Morgan was startled by his falling to the floor, the blood gushing from a gaping wound in his throat. Morgan rang for Warden Walton and messengers were dispatched for physicians. It was half an hour, however, before one arrived. Dr. J. B. Heller sewed the the wound up with twenty-eight stitches and reported that the windpipe and arteries had not been severed. The wound reached from ear to ear and the loss of blood weakened Carpenter, making him unconscious for a time and he is in a precarious condition. He is a strong and robust man, however, and he may survive the injury. In speaking with his cell mate about the death of Mrs. Blackwell, Carpenter protested his innocence only a short time before he attempted to destroy himself. The news of the attempt at suicide spread through Easton and the neighboring New Jersey town of Phillipsburg and created a great sensation coming as it does while the shooting of Mrs. Blackwell is the main topic of conversation. Public opinion regarding Carpenter's guilt is divided.

UNCLE SAM'S WARSHIPS.

The New York and Columbia Return to New York Harbor.

New York, April 29.—The United States armed cruiser New York and the speedy commerce destroyer Columbia arrived in port yesterday from the West Indian cruise, a cruise in one respect remarkable as it brought together a more formidable fleet than has ever been gathered under the flag. As one of the officers of the New York remarked this morning, the government's purpose had been to make a display for the benefit of southern neighbors commensurate with the dignity of our country and its position among the nations. If the New York is to be sent to Kiel, she will doubtless go into dry dock first, as she has not been docked for four months. Otherwise, she is ready to put to sea at once.

Surprised the English.

The officers were feted at most of the ports touched, and they are well satisfied with the impression the fleet made. The English encountered seemed most surprised, never having seen any such display except under their own flag.

Chicago Court Will Await the Decision of the Supreme Justices.

Chicago, April 29.—The Debs trial on the conspiracy charge has been continued indefinitely. This announcement was made by General Black, United States district attorney, after a conference with C. S. Darrow, one of the attorneys for the defendants. General Black said: "The government is not willing to appear in the attitude of a persecutor of its citizens. At this time the case of these men is pending before the United States supreme court. All the vital facts presented in the record are before the court. The court cannot and will not render a decision which will not involve other questions than those of jurisdiction. Hence the postponement."

HIRAM GUM, FIDDLER

Gathered there upon the porch were the school teacher, the chronic loafer, the G. A. R. man and the Patriarch, an old man with a long white beard, who was seated on the oak bench, leaning forward and resting his chin upon the head of his cane. The miller threw himself along the floor, and, propping his back against a pillar, lighted his pipe.

"When it comes ter fiddling," the chronic loafer was saying, "they's few men kin beat Sam Washin'ton. Why, I've know'd him ter set down at a party at 7 o'clock at night an' fiddle tell 7 next mornin', and play a different tune every time."

"My dear man," the Patriarch began, "Hiram Gum was more'n an earthly fiddler. He hed charms; he know'd words."

"I don't believe in them charms furder 'an they 'fect snakes an' bees."

"But Hiram Gum was more'n an ord'nary man. No one know'd where he come from when he settled up the valley, acrosst the Juniata. That was nigh onter sixty years ago, an' I was only 13. I remember him well, though. Hiram settled in a little log house that stood on the South ridge near where Luckenbach's peach orchard is now. He used to live from han' to mouth like, for he couldn't work an' what he made he got from his fiddle playin'. An' sech a fiddler. You uns never seen the beat. Oh, I tell yer when Hiram Gum drawed the bow over thet old black instermen' of his it was worth a hundred brass ban's.

"Peter Billings's farm j'ined Hiram's lot, an' it wasn't long 'fore the leetle man tuk to strollin' over to see his neighbors in the evenin'. By an' by he seemed to take a consid'ble shine fer Peter's dotter Susan. First no one ever thot nothin' of it, for it hairdly seemed likely thet as pretty a girl as she would keer much about sech a dried up leetle specimen as Hiram Gum. Then, besides, fer a long time she'd be'n keepin' comp'ny with young John McCullagh, whose father owned 'bout the best piece of farmin' lan' up the valley. It may a be'n thet old McCullagh an' Billings made it up between them thet John was to marry Susan. I allus tuk it thet way. But she couldn't 'a' feel in with their plans. He was a boastful, fine lookin' young feller, with a powerful temper an' a skin' fer his own way. So when Hiram Gum begin loafin' over at Billings's no one ever dreamt anything would come of it.

"But after Hiram hed be'n livin' up the valley two years, he suddenly stopped visitin' Billings. He was drove off the place I heard, an' Susan for a week was kep locked up in her room. An' sech a change as come over thet man! I never seen the like. It was in the airly spring when it happened, an' he'd been doin' pretty well all winter fiddlin' at parties. But from one of the pleasantest of men he became one of the blackest. He had allus met a man with a hearty how'de' before, but after thet he never spoke no more when he passed. From comin' to the store every day reg'lar, he got to comin' only when he needed things, an' the rest of the time he kep' mopin' up in his place on the ridge. An' Susan, too, was changed. She lost color an' big dark rings come around her eyes. Many a time I seen her leanin' over the gate lookin' away up the ridge to where Hiram Gum's place lay. An' then her father would come out and drive her inter the house with angry words. She wouldn't scerce speak to John McCullagh in them days.

"The weeks went by an' she picked up a little an' her father 'lowed her more freedom. Then come Sam Lander's big party. It was the last dance of the season, for the hot weather was comin' on when there wasn't time tor be swingin' corners, let alone the overheatin' thet would come be it. It was jest 'bout the biggest dance of the year, an' everybody in the valley was there. They didn't hev no fancy organs in them days. The plain old fiddle was enough, an' it would be sufficient in these times if all fiddlers was like Hiram Gum. Everybody danced when Hiram played. He'd no sooner take his place in the corner an' draw the bow than every inch in the room would be covered with sets.

"I done one set with Susan Billings, an' I noticed she could scerce keep her eyes away from Hiram. She only danced a set with John McCullagh, an' lay kinder limp like when she swung corners with him, an' never sayd nothin'. When they finished he left, an' I seen him go out the door with a black look on his face.

"Young an' old danced thet night. They was three sets in the settin' room an' two in the kitchen. They was two in the entry an' one on the porch. It was mighty little restin' we done, save layin' off at 10 o'clock fer sweet cake an' cider. But the queer thing was thet Hiram never passed the hat once. It's seldom a man goes to a party without the hat comin' his way three or four times. An' 'fore thet night they never was a more inveterate hat passer 'an Hi Gum, fer by his playin' he made his livin'; an' never a note 'ud he make tell he'd 50 cents in his old white beaver. Then he'd play thet out an' roun' he'd come ag'in. But thet night he jest set glum an' never once did he stop his fiddlin'. They was never a fiddler like Hiram Gum.

"We lived over the river then, an' they wasn't no bridge in them days. We used to cross in a couple of old boats that was kep' tied along the bank jest below the canal lock. Most all hed gone when I left Lander's airly in the mornin'. I went down across the flat and through the woods tell I come out at the canal, where I crossed on the lock to the towpath. It was a clear night an' the moon shone down bright through the trees. I walked up along the towpath whistlin' fer company. The canal was on one side and down through the open places on the other I could see the river gleamin' along. I come to the bend jest a couple of hundred yards above where the boats lay, an' was jest steppin' out into the clearin' there when sudden I heard a loud voice. I stopped. Then it came louder, an' I recognized John McCullagh's rough talk. I went cautious tell I got out of the woods, an' there jest ahead I seen him, near the path facin' old Hiram Gum, who, with his fiddle under his arm, was standin' with his back to the canal lookin' quiet at the big feller. I dropped down on the groun' an' watched, scarce breathin', I was so excited.

"Sudden John raised a heavy stick an' shook it, and stepped slow like toward the leetle fiddler, backin' him toward the bank.

"'Hiram Gum!' he said, deliberate like, 'I've hed 'nough of you. Git out of this country an' don't come back or you'll never fiddle ag'in.'

"Hiram lowered his fiddle slow, and sayd: 'You can't skeer me, John McCullagh, fer Susan Billings doesn't keer for you.'

"'You shan't run off with her,' yelled the other, shakin' his stick. 'Now, quick. Make up your min'.'

"I could see his face workin' as he swung his stick up an' down an' step by step kep' edgin' the leetle feller nearer the canal. I jest lay tremblin', I was thet frightened, fer I was but a lad in them days. I know'd I ought to run out an' stopped et, but I was undecided, an' 'fore I got my couritch up I hear the soft notes of the fiddle. There was old Hiram, with his withered han' holdin' the instermen', his long fingers runnin' over the strings, the bow slidin' slow like up an' down, his black eyes fastened hard on the big feller.

"'Swing yer corners, John,' he yelled. Then the notes come quick and short. I scerce drawed a breath, expectin' to see the big stick go crashin' through his white hat. Instead John stopped sudden. His arm fell limp like. He passed his hand confused over his forehead. Then he bowed. They was a queer gleam in Gum's eyes; an' the notes come faster. In another minute John was swingin' corners, with his arms graspin' the air. The dead sticks cracked under his feet as he flung around. An' as old Hi called the figgers he follered him, yellin' 'em louder an' kickin' like mad. It was the wildest dancin' ever I seen. He bowed an' twisted, backward an' for'ad, an' chassayd an' chained, his feet seemin' all the time to be movin' faster an' faster. as the notes come quicker an' the long bow slid to an' fro like lightnin' Cautious old Hiram moved around, never takin' his eyes off his en'my tell he was on the riverside, an' John skippin' aroun' on the beaten towpath.

"Them was awful minutes for me. I could do nothin', for the playin' kind of spelled me like. Once I tried to get up, but I kicked out with both feet an' fell sprawlin' to the groun'. Slow old Hiram begin to move toward the canal, all the time the mad dancin' feller backin' nearer an' nearer the bank.

"'Back ter yer corner, John!' called the fiddler.

"'Corners next!' yelled John, kicking' up his heels and throwin' out his arms like he was grabbin' somethin'. Then came the awfullest cry I ever heard. It went right through me like a knife. There was a splash. He'd gone over the bank.

"I jumped out, fer the fiddlin' hed stopped, an' started toward the spot. But before I got there Hiram throwed away his fiddle, run to the bank an' was down on his knees startin' inter the water, with a wild look in his eyes. A head came over the surface, then an' arm reached wildly out. Old Hiram leaned over and grasped the hand.

"I stopped, I was so excited, and calls: 'You've got him. Hi! You've got him! Hol' fast!'

"But it wasn't no use, for he'd nothin' to support himself with. He grasped the bank with his withered hand, but the arm gave way an' he toppled over. Then fer a minute all was still. I leaned over the water an' waited. They was a ripple toward the middle an' two heads come up. I seen Hiram Gum's long black hair an beard an' his drawn face as he looked up at the sky overhead. Then they disappeared agin. I watched a minute, but the surface of the canal become quiet and still, like nothin' hed happened. Then I turned an' ran.

"Them was awful moments for a boy like me. I flew along the towpath, across the clearin', inter the woods ag'in, an' then down toward the river where the boats lay hid among the willer bushes. An' as I went crashin' through the branches I heard a girl's voice callin'.

"'Hiram,' she says, 'is that you? I thot you was never comin'. Why were you fiddlin'?'

"In another second I was through the willers and on the bank. There, settin' in the boat, her hau's on the oars ready to pull away, was Susan Billings."

The old man stopped his story and beat his cane softly on the porch, and hummed a snatch of a tune.

There came a short puffing, as the chronic loafer drew on his pipe until the bright coals shone in the darkness.

"But Sam Washin'ton—"

The old man arose slowly.

"I don't keer 'bout Sam Washin'ton. I must be goin'. I'll git rheum'tism on sech a night with no horsechestnut in me pocket."

A PERPETUAL MOTION CLOCK.

How It Runs Till Its Parts Wear Out or Need Cleaning is a Mystery.

A thing to rival the seven wonders of the world, if not in size and elaborateness, at least in ingenuity and variety, is a clock that requires winding only once in 100 years. Nor is it a modern piece of mechanism. Such a horological curiosity is actually in existence, and is now in the possession of M. Pottin, who lives in Ivey-sur-Seine, France. Nearly a decade ago he bought it of a farmer, who had inherited it from his father. Neither the latter nor his son could tell how it came to be an heirloom in the peasant family.

Expert clockmakers claim that it is the work of some inventive genius of the period of Henry II. For some mysterious reason all imitations thus far attempted have been failures. The original is a sort of water clock, not, however, in the accepted sense of the term.

It is made in the shape of a narrow upright chest. In its front slits a cylinder is suspended on stout cords. The cylinder turns on its axis as it moves up and down and indicates the time on the two face boards, on the one the hours and on the other the half and quarter hours. When the cylinder is on top then all the cord is twined around it, and in proportion to the rapidity of its descent the cord is unwound.

It takes the cylinder just 36 hours to make the round trip, 18 hours each way, the movement maintaining a perfect regularity. It is thus that the points of the axis are made to serve as correct time indicators.

What puzzles the investigator most is how it is made possible for the unwound cylinder when it has arrived at the bottom to again wind the cord around itself and be drawn up to the top.

It is vested with this power of regular movements by a very complicated system of small water filled reservoirs, with which it is connected and which serve as a propelling power. The incessant moving up and down of the cylinder keeps up a constant change of the center of gravity. The receiving tubes are so constituted that only a measured quantity of water is admitted into the reservoirs and the same precaution is taken at the outlets. It has been calculated that the cords wear out in a little more than 100 years and that enough rust collects in the buckets to require cleaning or replacement after the same length of time.

REV. Daniel F. Warren, D. D., Rector Holy Trinity Church, Jersey City Heights, says:

"Dr. Deane's Dyspepsia Pills are unquestionably good. They are, in my opinion, all they claim to be. I have tried them and found in them what I needed. I believe they will cure Dyspepsia, and that is saying much for any medicine. I am glad, therefore, to give my testimony."

WHITE OF PLAINFIELD.

ANNA DICKINSON.

BORN OF POOR PARENTS AND REARED A QUAKERESS.

Wrote an Article on Slavery When Fourteen Years Old and Taught School at Seventeen. Later a Popular Platform Orator With an Income of $40,000.

Anna Dickinson, it will surprise many people to learn, is a Quakeress. She was born in Philadelphia Oct. 28, 1842, of very poor parents, and was left an orphan when a little more than two years old. The Society of Friends took care of her and her sister Susan, and had infinite trouble in making the active brained child submissive to the hard and fast individuality quelling regulations of the sect. Anna received her early education in the free school of the society, and was sent to the boarding school in Westown when she was 12 years old. Two years later she came back to Philadelphia equipped to enter the "Friends' Select School" with girls five years beyond her age, and attracted public attention that same year by an article on "Slavery," which was published in the Liberator.

In 1859 she was graduated and started out to teach school. She was only 17 and small in stature, and the trustees of the first school for which she applied offered her $16 a month. She knew that the man who had previously held the position received $28 a month and demanded the same salary. The trustees replied, "But he was a man and you are only a little girl."

Miss Dickinson made them a speech on the spot that made their ears tingle and became a woman's rights advocate from that moment. She refused the place, and a year later had made herself locally famous by speechmaking on the subject.

In 1861 she secured a position in the Philadelphia mint, but lost that in short order by declaring that General McClellan was a traitor, in a speech to her fellow employes. A speech a few months later on "Woman's Work" in Jersey City made her nationally famous, and she was in demand everywhere, her lectures commanding $100 a night.

She had long before given up Quaker garb and the "thee" and "thou," and she left the sect entirely by branching out into politics. She became an ardent Republican and the star attraction in all the local, State and national campaigns. She stumped in New Hampshire, won the Seymour-Buckingham fight in Connecticut and helped the Pennsylvania State Committee wonderfully in 1863 by literally taking her life in her hands and going through the coal regions for the party. She was invited to speak before Congress in 1864, and spoke for the Union League club in Cooper Union, and for the Union League club of Philadelphia in the Academy of Music. She added temperance to woman's rights and politics, and spoke on these three subjects in a marvelously entertaining and convincing manner. Her vocabulary was remarkable, her voice expressive of all the emotions, and her gestures graceful, and she had the gift of personal magnetism in a marked degree. She wore her hair short, but that was the only outward and visible sign of her advocacy of woman's rights. She had a truly feminine love for jewels and fine attire, and was enabled to gratify her taste as she chose on her annual income of between $40,000 and $50,000. She had a handsome rather than a pretty face, and a graceful figure, and her eyes alone were enough to make her a much sought after woman.

Miss Dickinson had many admirers, but refused all offers of marriage, and kept her name singularly free of the scandal that seems to catch at the skirts of the average noted woman. Even when she listened to a crowd of ill advised persons and went on the stage she kept above all the rumors of that peculiar world. It was in 1875 that she started out to win histrionic fame, choosing for the vehicle a play of her own called "The Crown of Thorns." It proved a flat failure as soon as the inevitable first curious rush to see her had died away, and she was unsuccessful also in "Anne Boleyn." She finally tried "Hamlet," but made even a worse failure, and "Anna Dickinson in tights" was such a shining mark for the paragrapher and the caricaturist that she went back to the home in West Pittson, Pa., presided over by her sister, a heart broken woman.

She brooded over her failure, the loss of her fortune and the ridicule heaped upon her, until her mind apparently gave way. In the desperate Cleveland-Harrison campaign of 1888, the Republican State committee secured her services to stump the State, but her powers had gone and she didn't make the impression that had been hoped for.

A Long Road.

Farmers down in Dixie, like those in New England, have a very grim, but none the less indisputable sense of humor on occasion, if this anecdote from Georgia is to be credited.

A farmer returning from town with an empty produce wagon overtook a young man plodding along with the discouraged air of a city man who was unused to dirt roads.

"Hullo, Jersey," cried the stranger briskly. "Can a man get a lift to Vineland?"

"I don't see why he can't," responded the farmer in a non committal way.

"Then I'll take a ride," said the stranger, vaulting into the wagon and making himself comfortable.

After three or four miles had been traversed, the stranger paused in his inconsequential talk long enough to observe:

"It's quite a distance to Vineland?"

"Yes, it is a distance," admitted the farmer.

Another mile was passed and then the stranger inquired:

"About how far is it to Vineland?"

"Well," replied the farmer, meditatively, "keepin' straight ahead, the way we're goin' now, it's about 25,000 miles; but if you'll get out an' hoof it back, it ain't more'n about 6 or 7."

The stranger got out and "hoofed" it back.—Providence Journal.

Bunco-ing a Hen.

A gentleman in Harrison has a hen's nest so balanced that the moment the egg is laid the top of the nest will gently tilt, rolling the egg in a box underneath. When the hen misses the egg, instead of cackling and otherwise making a great to do over nothing, she at once proceeds to do a better job for the owner by laying again.—Atlanta Constitution.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

NO ONE WOULD BID.

Mrs. Schwardt Wept and the Sheriff Got Only Sixteen Cents.

An execution for $800 that netted the creditors sixteen cents was the result of a sheriff's sale at Columbia, Pa. The levy was made upon the property of Charles Schwardt, and composed all the household and personal effects, which included a very large number of finely bred chickens. Mrs. Schwardt was fondly attached to these. When the sheriff appeared to sell the chickens along with the rest of the property she could not hold back the tears. Schwardt's neighbors, who had dropped in to pick up some good bargains and good chickens, looked on with pity.

Sheriff Hershey decided to dispose of the entire property at one bid. He described the various useful household goods and chattels in his best professional tone, and when he came to the chickens he waxed positively eloquent. Then he asked for bids. Silence pervaded the ranks of the assembled throng, and Mrs. Schwardt wept. The sheriff coaxed and cajoled as he reduced the figures with each breath. Down sank the figures until Mrs. Schwardt, looking up, said in a trembling voice:

"I bid 16 cents."

That settled it. Not a man in the crowd could be induced to go her a cent better, and the sheriff was compelled to knock down the property to the wife of the man he was selling out. This price included all the household effects as well as the beloved fowls.

A Brave Man's One Fear.

"It's astonishin'," remarked an old Yankee forty niner, as he nodded over his glass to a friend, "what a coward a man is at home—a reg'lar crawlin' sneak, by jove! I've traveled a good bit, and held up my head in most o' the camps on the coast since '49. I've got three bullets inside o' me. I've shot and been shot at, and never heard nobody say I hadn't the good grit as most fellers that's goin'. But at home I'm a kyote. Afore I'd let the old woman know that her hot biscuit wasn't A1 when its like stiff amalgam I'd fill myself as full as a retort. I've done it lots o' times. Most o' my teeth is gone from tuggin' on be'fsteaks that the old woman friend. D'ye think I roar out when I go over a chair in the dark?

"No, sir. While I'm rubbin' my shins and keepin' back the tears, I'm likewise sweatin' fur fear the old woman has been disturbed by the upset. I didn't used to be so," sighed the poor old fellow, rubbing his scalp, thoughtfully.

"When we first hitched, I thought I was superintendent; but after a year or two of argyin' the pint, I settled down to shovin' the car at low wages. I can lick any man o' my age and size," cried the old gentleman, banging the saloon table with his fist. "I'll shoot, stand up, or rough and tumble for money, but when I hang my hat on the peg in the hall and take off my muddy shoes, and hear the old woman ask if that's me, I tell you the starch comes right out of me!"—Chicago Ledger.

How to Dress for a Photograph.

As a rule it is well—and should be required—to avoid very positive patterns, such as large plaids, checks, wide stripes and much jet or other glittering trimming and much jewelry. Sharp contrasts in materials, trimming or style of cut are a decided detriment to a pleasing portrait, and, as a rule, the tone of color should harmonize with the sitter's complexion and hair. Glistening silks are difficult to light well, as is any material which does not easily lend itself to soft folds. Dead luster silk, soft woollens, crapes, fleecy tissues and similar materials are always effective.

Take the Collection in Silence.

In the First M. E. Church, of Owosso, Mich., the largest in the city, the choir has always chanted an anthem while the collection was being taken up. But there is now no chanting, the deacons having decided that the singing diverted the minds of the congregation from the collection and made it smaller.

The collections are much larger than usual, and the deacons claim that it is in consequence of the new order.

The objection of the Standard Oil Trust to the payment of an income tax has a certain basis of plausibility. The Supreme Court has decided that property in land is not subject to the income tax, and the contention of the Standard Oil Trust is that it owns the earth.

Fell into the Area.

While coming out of the East Third Street Mission last evening, Lillian Hope, granddaughter of S. B. Hope of Richmond street, stepped off the porch and fell a considerable distance down the area. She lost consciousness, and was taken into the Mission. Dr. Jenkins revived her. No bones were broken, but she was severely bruised.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at L. W. Randolph's drug store.

GOSSIP FROM BERLIN

Rumored Resignation of Chancellor Hohenlohe.

Meeting To Protest Against Curtailment of Free Speech—Sudden Changes in Foreign Policy—The Kaiser's New Nickname—Standard Oil Company Denounced.

Berlin, April 29.—The Boersen Zeitung published on Friday rumors of a cabinet crisis and the possible resignation of Chancellor Prince Hohenlohe. The chancellor was said to object to the anti-socialist bill in its present form and to threaten to retire in case it should be passed unamended. Yesterday the Reichsanzeiger denied the truth of this story. The Boersen Zeitung published, however, only what has been common report in political circles since last Wednesday. The original difficulty in the cabinet is supposed to be the chancellor's differences with Herr von Koeller regarding the conflict between the Prussian government and the Berlin city council.

Free Speech Convention.

On May 5 municipal delegates from all parts of Germany will meet here to protest against the proposal to curtail freedom of speech and the rights of public meeting and the press. This convention will be an imposing affair. Among those who signed the call for it are the mayors of Berlin and Breslau, the presidents of the municipal councils in Frankfort-on-the-Main, Carlsruhe, Dansig, Munich, Kiel, Stuttgart, Posen and Halle. Her von Koeller's newspaper organ, the Berliner Correspondenz, has announced that Prussian municipal councils will not be allowed to send delegates formally to the convention, but this move was anticipated and checkmated when the meeting was first planned.

Germany's Foreign Policy.

It was rumored that Emperor William had sent the czar a telegram putting the German squadron in the Pacific under the command of the Russian Admiral Tyrtoff. The rumor seems incredible. Such a course would cause an uproar throughout the German army and navy. It is significant of the general confusion here that rumors, equally startling, are circulated almost daily. The changes in Germany's foreign policy are so sudden and astonishing that even the men supposed to belong to the inner political circle are often at a loss for explanations. The change of front toward Japan is still unexplained.

Canard Fever.

The official and semi-official newspapers are kept busy denying false reports but they fail to give any clue to the true policy adopted by the government. The virulence of the canard fever was shown clearly when the government found it expedient to deny the report that the Greek ironclad taking part in the Kiel fetes would be seized for the benefit of Greece's German creditors.

Barred from Marriage Permits.

It is announced officially that Germans going abroad to live temporarily or permanently, without having done military service, need not expect hereafter to get marriage permits from the government. The emperor and empress will go to Pasewalk, near Stettin, on June 4 to attend the jubilee of the Pasewalk Cuirassier regiment and unveil the statue erected in the town to Emperor Frederick. Herr von Kiderlen-Waechter was selected by the emperor to accompany him on his present journey in south Germany. He goes nominally to represent the foreign office but really as one of the emperor's personal friends.

The Kaiser's New Nickname.

The emperor's astonishing changes of his political and personal plans recently have earned for him the new nickname of Wilhelm, der Ploetzliche (William the sudden). His latest surprise for the army is that four instead of two army corps besides two cavalry divisions, shall take part in the great manoeuvres before Emperor Franz Joseph in the Stettin district. The change is supposed to be due to his wish to show the Austrian emperor more troops than were assembled before the German sovereigns at Guens in 1893.

CHINESE FOOTBINDING.

An Woman Expert Who Makes a Fortune Out Of It.

There is a wide ocean of difference between the social world of the Chinese woman with feet no larger than those of a new born babe and that of her sisters who walk on natural sized feet.

Among all classes of Chinese the woman of the little foot has a rank and prestige that a woman with a foot moulded and fashioned by nature cannot hope to achieve. The art of the professional footbinder is a necessity in all Chinese families where there is any desire for social recognition.

The woman of the tiny feet toils not, neither does she spin, and, as Chinese style goes, is arrayed in the height of fashion. She lolls in luxury's lap, her body is clothed in silken raiment of the finest texture and most delicate hue, while diamonds and rubies set in soft and beaten gold and bracelets of jade and jasper encircle her wrists and arms. If she leaves her house she either rides or is supported on either side by big foot women. The natural foot woman—big foot is hardly correct—is in vivid contrast to her little foot sister. She is a drudge and a slave. Her dress is the cheap, coarse woven stuff of the Chinese, and her hair is dressed with unscented lard instead of perfumed oils, is bound with thread instead of silk and fastened with pins of brass instead of gold. She is beaten when she fails in any of her duties. Worst of all, she is cheap.

Any Chinese of a saving disposition may buy a natural foot wife, or several wives, if he cares for that sort of investment. It takes a rich man to buy a small foot woman and keep her in proper style.

There are about a dozen Chinese girls in Los Angeles who are undergoing the process of having their feet moulded into the least possible compass, and there are over 200 who are going through the same experience in their homes in San Francisco.

The most experienced and best known footbinder in California is a woman of over 50 years, named Ming Jung. She has calls for her services in every fair-sized city on the Pacific coast from San Diego to Victoria, and makes her headquarters in San Francisco, where she is employed over half the time. Her services are employed principally in the first footbinding process on an infant, and then advising as to the best modes of binding after the little bones have turned and their growth has been arrested.

Among the wealthier Chinese who can afford to employ Ming Jung to undertake the supervision and responsibility of the whole operation of footbinding, she makes weekly visits through the greater part of five years. For such service she receives from $800 to $1,000. Ming Jung is very rich. The assessors in San Francisco say she has an income of fully $18,000 a year, and pays taxes on over $50,000 worth of property. Like many of her race on the Pacific coast, she is a great gambler. Her own feet are 2 1-2 inches long and a little more than an inch wide, while the ankles are enormous.

In San Francisco, as well as in all cities on the Pacific coast, Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children have time and again caused the arrest of parents and guardians for binding the feet of their children, on the charge that the process gave excruciating pain to the little ones, but in every instance so far the Chinese have proved by reputable white physicians that the binding of the feet when begun in babyhood is absolutely painless. The officers of the law are therefore powerless. Only the other day the local society tried it again and found that it was useless to try and make such arrests.

The bandages are kept on the feet until the woman attains her growth and nature no longer attempts to force her way against the stout silk web and linen. Then they are taken off, and the Chinese girl hobbles through life on two withered stumps.

A rich Chinese generally marries one or two natural foot wives, and then buys a little foot wife who at once becomes the head of the establishment.

If times get hard and money scarce, he may dispose of one of his natural foot wives, but he must keep one of them to wait upon Miss Little Foot, help her move about the house and half carry her up and down stairs to her carriage, and do the housework.

Very rich merchants sometimes have two little foot wives, but they are so expensive luxuries, owing to the amount of care they require, that one is usually all a rich Chinese can stand.

The poor Chinese who cannot afford a little foot wife, not infrequently manage to make little foot women out of their daughters born to them by the natural foot wives. It is a paying investment if the father lives long enough to sell or marry off his daughters, and if he doesn't he has conferred a mark of respectability upon them.

Birds That Love Finery.

In order to investigate the migratory habits of birds, some time in the fall two years ago a young woman of Fordyce, Ark., secured a fine Baltimore oriole. She tied a bit of red silk around his leg, turning him loose in time to wing his flight along with his companions.

Last April the bird reappeared, bringing with him a mate having a bit of blue ribbon tied around her leg. The pair took up their abode in a big oak tree, soon swinging a nest and bringing forth a brood. The lady watched the movements of the beribboned couple very eagerly, and what was her astonishment one day, soon after they left the nest, to behold the young birds all strung out in line on a limb, while the parent birds, with deft beaks and feet, tied a bit of bright cloth about the leg of each.

The ingenuity of the oriole is well known, and it is probable that the first bird became so pleased with his decoration that he tied a blue ribbon to the leg of his mate and wished to hand down the custom to his progeny. The young woman is now eagerly looking forward for the reappearance of her little friends this season and means to bestow upon each a bright new ribbon should they come again.

EDISON'S GREATEST.

IT REPRODUCES SOUND AND MOTION CORRECTLY.

Named the Kineto-Phonograph. Acting and Singing of an Opera Could Be Flashed All Over the Country By Wire From the Grand Opera House in New York.

The kineto-phonograph is a new name which will last as long as civilization lasts. Mr. Edison is himself inclined to believe that it is the most important invention of the century. He was at work upon it long before the kinetoscope astonished the world.

In the strange little theater connected with his laboratory the curtain rose upon a scene in a barber shop where there was at first a bandying of words. Then a general fight ensued. The phonograph did its part nobly, keeping in time with the action perfectly, and even reproducing the shuffling of the feet and intense breathing, while the kinetoscope, by means of a glass that magnified the pictures five hundred times, played its part almost as well. Only for the lack of coloring, which photography has not yet been able to satisfactorily reproduce, the illusion would have been complete.

In 1887 it first occurred to Edison that it was possible to devise an instrument which should do for the eye what the phonograph does for the ear, and that, by a combination of the two, all motion and sound could be recorded and reproduced simultaneously. At that time he said to a friend:

"I believe that grand opera can be given at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York without any material change from the original and with artists and musicians long since dead."

Now it seems that this belief will soon be corroborated by the actual occurrence. Already the kineto-phonograph has reached such a stage of advancement in Edison's laboratory that it could be so constructed in the Opera House as to record opera and reproduce it, with the actors life size, a thousand years from now.

THE DEVICE THAT SUGGESTED THE IDEA.

The little kineto-phonograph now on exhibition is comparatively a toy. It only assures the public that the sound and motion of an object can be simultaneously reproduced by electricity in such a manner as to present a crude copy of Nature herself.

The second stage of the great invention was definitely reached when Mr. Edison, just before returning to his iron mines at Hedison, went into the theater of his Orange laboratory, and with his co-laborers saw upon the stage, most exactly executed, reproductions in life size from boxing matches, theatrical scenes, band music, oratorical feats and the like.

As he realized his great dream he foresaw distinctly what would be the next step. If any scene in life and nature can be recorded, stored for ages, and faithfully reproduced, why can it not be reproduced by wire in every corner of the world? It can. It is being done every day from one part of the laboratory to another. Edison himself has expressed his belief that this third stage of his invention is absolutely practicable.

He has told some of his co-laborers that he has even dared to look forward to the day when photography will be chasing the rainbow. For, never until the camera becomes as conscious of all color of nature and as sensitive to them as the retina of the eye, can the kineto-phonograph give a complete copy of nature. The blush in a woman's cheeks, the red glow of the sunset, the meadow green and the brilliant colors of the Household Cavalry must consent to their absence in the kinetoscope until some photographic genius can put them there.

But the motto at the Edison laboratory is "Nothing is Impossible," and the wizard and his co-laborers hope to remedy this defect before many years have passed.

Easy Swindling in Connecticut.

A clever swindler, giving his name as Charles W. Ransom of Washington, representing himself as a Government detective, has been operating a very successful game in the vicinity of Putnam. He calls at private houses, telling the woman of the house that there is much counterfeit coin in circulation. He then asks the lady to let him see some of the coins she has. By the use of acid he turns the coin black.

He seizes the coin, telling a great tale about the penalty attached to holding counterfeit money, and saying that another secret service man would call in a few days and replace the coins. He reaped quite a harvest, and his customers are still waiting for secret officer number two.

Trilby's Stage Money.

The financial aspect of the Trilby dramatization is one that will interest a great many people. It is understood that the manager of the play pays ten per cent. of the gross receipts in royalties. It should play to more than $8,000 a week for many weeks to come, which would mean $800 a week in royalties. Of this it is said that 30 per cent. or three per cent. of the gross receipts goes to Mr. Potter; 20 per cent. to Harper & Brothers, and 50 per cent. to Du Maurier, the author of the book.

OUR POLICY FOR 100 YEARS.

We Can Sell Arms to Either Party in Time of War.

The impression that munitions of war may not be sold by citizens of the United States to Cubans, Venezuelans or any other persons, which has gained general currency at the present time, affecting even Custom House officials, is declared to be erroneous by international authorities, who declare that the attitude of this government is to-day as it always has been, to adhere to the policy laid down by Thomas Jefferson in his identical notes to Great Britain and France, May 15, 1793, and reiterated constantly in the past 100 years. Mr. Jefferson wrote:

"Our citizens have always been free to make, vend and export arms. It is the constant occupation and the livelihood of some of them. To suppress their callings, the only means, perhaps, of their subsistence, because a war exists in foreign and distant countries in which we have no concern would scarcely be expected. It would be hard in principle and impossible in practice."

At the same time Secretary Hamilton in a Treasury circular notified customs officials that "the purchasing in and exporting from the United States, by way of merchandise, articles commonly called contraband, being generally warlike instruments and military stores, is free to all the parties at war, and is not to be interfered with."

Secretary Seward notified Minister Romero in 1862 that "transportation of arms or money from the United States to either of the belligerants in Mexico is not a breach of neutrality, either under international law or the municipal law of the United States," and Mexico acquiesced in the decision. Secretary Fish in 1874 wrote the Spanish government as follows:

"The exportation of arms and munitions of war of their own manufacture to foreign countries is an important part of the commerce of the United States. In time of war their government will expect those engaged in the business to beware of all the risks legally incident to it. No such expectation, however, can be indulged in in a time of profound peace, and indemnification will be asked of any nation which may unnecessarily or illegally obstruct such trade."

A WEST VIRGINIA STRONG MAN.

Wrestled With a Spanish Jack and Threw Him, and Lifts 1,700 Pounds.

Talcott, W. Va., claims the honor of having the strongest man in the State, and after a careful investigation your correspondent is convinced that John Wiley, living a mile from the station, is the most powerful West Virginian alive.

At first glance there seems nothing remarkable in Wiley's personal appearance except his massive shoulders, which measure 56 inches in circumference. When stripped of his coat, however, the big muscles of his arms stand out like ropes. John Wiley is 28 years old and weighs 216 pounds. He is the youngest son in a family noted throughout the country for muscle. His mother could easily carry a bag of flour on her hip, and once, exasperated at her son's inability to draw with his horse a log of firewood 18 inches in diameter and about 14 feet long, she seized one end of it and raised it up until it was nearly perpendicular.

Wiley seems insensible to pain of any kind and does not feel the hardest blow that can be given him. In an altercation once his antagonist struck him three times on the arm, with a half inch bar of iron, bending the rod almost double and bruising the flesh black and blue, yet Wiley assured the writer that he felt no pain whatever, either at the time or afterward. Wiley at the time was held by three men, but he wrenched himself away, and with one slap of his brawny hand took all the fight out of the other fellow.

Once he was attacked in the stable by a large and vicious Spanish jack, which made every effort to kill him. Wiley seized the enraged animal with his powerful arms and threw the brute down and sat on him.

He can easily hold out, at arm's length, 50 pound weights, and has shouldered and carried for some distance a square piece of timber weighing more than 600 pounds.

Perhaps the most remarkable test he has given of his strength was when in the presence of a number of persons, one of whom assures the writer of the correctness of the statement, Wiley lifted clear of the ground the enormous weight of 1,700 pounds.

Our National Hymns.

"Hail Columbia" was written by Joseph Hopkinson, a Philadelphia lawyer, in the summer of 1798; it was sung at the benefit of an actor named Fox, a former schoolmate of the author's. The air was called in those days "The President's March." "America" was written by Samuel Francis Smith, afterward and still a Unitarian clergyman, in 1832. Mr. Lowell Mason, a piano maker and musically minded man, sent Mr. Smith some music, asking him to write words for it; he wrote "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." "The Red, White and Blue," though believed to be an American song, dates from the time of the Crimean war; "Marching Through Georgia" was written in 1865 by Henry Clay Work, who wrote also "The Kingdom Coming," "Nicodemus the Slave," "Grandfather's Clock," etc. "Yankee Doodle" is said to have been written about 1755, by Dr. Shuckburgh, an English army surgeon; it was called originally "The Yankee's Return from Camp," and began

"Father an' I went down to camp
Along with Captain Good'in,
An' there we see the men an' boys
As thick as hasty puddin'."

Over 7,000 varieties of microscopic sea shells have been enumerated by naturalists.

SLOWLY STARVING.

Surrounded by Plenty, but Dying for Food.

An Every-day Occurrence.—Our Friends Perishing Before Our Eyes.

A terrible experience for any one to go through, that of seeing some beloved friend actually wasting away before our eyes, unable to derive sufficient nourishment from their food to sustain life.

Medicine naturally becomes of little avail, and the various organs of the body, debilitated from a lack of nourishment, take on themselves the disease that was originally the cause of the "breakdown," and help hasten the end.

Such cases, though too prevalent, are happily becoming less frequent. The prominent physicians of to-day do things differently from those of twenty years ago. They first put the patient in a condition to stand the "siege," then enrich his blood, create for him new strength, and "build him up" generally. The patient is then in a condition to derive benefit from his medicine.

This is done by the use of Bovinine, the original raw food. It is an extract that contains the greatest amount of the life-sustaining and tissue-building properties of lean, raw meat, concentrated in the least possible bulk.

The advantage of this is obvious. A patient already greatly weakened by disease, needs to husband every particle of strength. A few drops of Bovinine will impart as much nourishment to the body as would be derived by a well person from an ordinary meal; and, in getting this nourishment, the stomach has been forced to do the least possible amount of work.

Bovinine, continued throughout an illness, greatly hastens recovery. Taken at the beginning of a wasting disease, it diverts the cause of the trouble by toning up the various organs, and getting them in a normal condition.

Bovinine is indorsed by 25,000 doctors. Its action is always beneficial, as a single trial will convince the most sceptical.

CHAPTER I.

THE "LONG ROOM" AT SUNNYSIDE.

Gen. Frederick Holliday, my uncle, served his country in the field from the opening of the civil war to its close. He entered the army as a first lieutenant and rose to the rank which I have coupled with his name. Few soldiers of that war participated in so many battles; and his tremendous energy urged him ever to the front. It is therefore the more remarkable that not a drop of blood was exacted from him as the price of his devotion to the cause. Horses were shot under him; comrades fell dead at his side; but neither steel nor lead could touch him. Yet his name was written on a bullet; and it was ordained that, when scenes of violence had become mere dreams, in the home of his peaceful old age, and in an hour of absolute tranquility, the death he had so often gone to meet should come to him.

It was a drowsy summer afternoon. I lay in a hammock under the trees before my uncle's home, called Sunnyside, on the banks of the Hudson, some miles below West Point. Some one passed along the concrete walk near me, but I was so near to sleep that I had not the energy to turn my head to see who it was. I supposed, however, that it was Capt. Charles Marshall, an officer of the United States army, and the accepted suitor of my uncle's daughter.

My feeling for Marshall was not cordial. I would have much preferred to see Margaret engaged to Horace Preble, whom I liked exceedingly. Two years before, I had believed that they would make a match; but my uncle's influence had turned the scale in favor of Marshall. I say this on my own authority, and as an expression of my belief at the time. The accepted theory, however, was that Preble's loss of his small fortune, through the dishonesty of a trustee, had caused him to withdraw from the contest. I had seen comparatively little of him since, though recently I had begun to meet him in society, where, being of good family and remarkably attractive appearance, he was a favorite despite his utter lack of interest in the gayeties of that world.

Marshall was forty years old, and a typical soldier. The idea of Margaret's marriage to him suggested an incarceration in a military prison.

A few minutes after the steps which I took to be Marshall's passed me, I suddenly remembered that the general had asked me to confer with him upon a matter of business that afternoon. I knew that I should find him at that hour in the "Long Room," as it was called, an apartment extending the full length of one side of the house. This somewhat unusual feature had been added to the house, considerably to the detriment of its external appearance, by the general's orders. He made it his parade ground in bad weather; and there he used to march up and down, attended by many a soldier's wraith, summoned by his old commander from a grave in the south. The furnishings of the room were as peculiar as its dimensions. At one end was the general's desk where he wrote his letters. There was also an easy chair for reading, and some small, revolving bookcases. The other end had somewhat the appearance of a conservatory; and midway was a couch with cushions, a work basket with colored wools, and other indications that Margaret often kept her father company in the Long Room.

I found her there seated. She lay on the couch fast asleep. I stood by her side, looking down upon her beautiful face, and she did not know. The general, at his desk, had not moved at the sound of my coming. The somnolency of the summer's day seemed to hold them both.

I put my hand on Margaret's forehead and waked her. She did not start, but only opened her brown eyes and looked up at me with instant recognition. Before either of us spoke, Mrs. Holliday appeared in a doorway, and said:

I FOUND HER THERE WHEN I ENTERED.

"Capt. Marshall is here."

I was looking straight into Margaret's face when the man's name was mentioned; and somehow I got an impression that there might be hope for Preble yet.

The girl followed her mother to another part of the house, and I walked to the general's side. He was bent over his desk, and his head rested upon his hands. I spoke, and he did not move. I laid my hand upon his shoulder. My touch disturbed the equipoise of his body. It slowly, heavily slid from the chair, and fell to the floor where it lay face upward.

A single glance at that face showed me that Gen. Holliday was dead.

I am not one of those who tremble in the presence of death. The dominant sentiment of my heart, as I knelt beside this lifeless form, was poignant grief for the loss of one whom I had loved and reverenced many years.

But when, after a moment, I saw blood upon him and upon the floor where he had fallen, and much more beneath the desk, I was alarmed, and cried out for help. Stephen Hanley, my uncle's butler, ran into the room by a door close to where I stood beside the corpse. He was the only person who heard my cry. It is notable about the Long Room that sound does not readily pass out of it. The butler was so terror-stricken as to be of no use to me. He dared not touch the body. The sight of the blood, which had startled me, seemed utterly to have unmanned him.

"Find Dr. Hilton," I cried, "and send him here instantly. Tell no one else."

Hanley obeyed with alacrity, and in scarcely more than a minute Dr. Hilton came. He was a young physician resident in the family, with which he had a distant relationship. Gen. Holliday had paid for his education, and had supported him since he had taken his degree. Hilton was not a money-maker, and would have fared badly but for the general's charity, disguised in the form of a salary to a "family physician;" but with so generous a helper the young man might have been an object of envy. He was assured of a luxurious home during the general's life, and of competency after his death, under the will.

A GLANCE AT THE FACE SHOWED ME GEN. HOLLIDAY WAS DEAD.

I have never thought well of Dr. Hilton's professional attainments, but the foremost practitioner of the world could have done no more in this instance. Gen. Holliday had been shot through the body. The bullet had shattered the spine, and death had resulted instantly from shock. So much Dr. Hilton was able to say with perfect certainty. He added that the murderer must have stood directly behind his victim, and have aimed well, for the bullet, if it had not been deflected slightly by the spine, would have pierced the heart. Gen. Holliday had been dead a very short time—certainly less than an hour.

Considering his medical training, Hilton was extraordinarily affected by this terrible event. He was far less calm than I was, and for that reason I decided that it would be best for me to do what must be done about informing Mrs. Holliday and her daughter. Hilton begged me to do it, speaking with pallid and trembling lips. It even seemed to me, as I turned away, that he dreaded to be left alone with the body.

We speak in the most ordinary way of breaking such news as that, to those who will be heart-broken when they hear it. I did my best, speaking to Margaret first, because she was stronger than her mother; but I doubt if either could have suffered greater pain at the most brutally sudden announcement. Mrs. Holliday was utterly prostrated; and I believe that nothing but her mother's dire need saved Margaret.

I have already confessed my prejudice against Capt. Marshall, and it is therefore with the greater pleasure that I admit him to have proven himself a serviceable man in such an emergency. If it is in him to face the perils of battle with an equal calmness, he must be a good soldier.

It was under his direction that we at last began to make an investigation of the tragedy. We had already telephoned to the police of West Point.

Evidently the extraordinary circumstance—the seemingly impossible detail which distinguished the case from all other mysteries—was the presence of Margaret when the shot was fired. Of that fact there could be no doubt. She told us that she had come to the Long Room immediately after luncheon. Her father had come in, very soon afterwards, and had gone at once to his desk. She must have fallen asleep immediately; and she remembered nothing more till the moment when she saw me standing beside her.

"This is beyond belief," said Hilton. "It is utterly incredible that Margaret should not have been awakened by the report of the weapon; but it is even more preposterous to suppose that any human creature would have had the hardihood to commit this crime right before the girl's face, even though she slept."

"He might have felt sure that she wouldn't wake," said Marshall; and I noticed that his cold gray eyes scanned Hilton's face narrowly.

The suggestion seemed to escape the physician, but it came like a blow to me. Margaret's sudden and deep sleep might furnish the explanation of the entire mystery. Hilton sat next to Margaret at the table. He might have drugged her food. This necessitated the supposition that he knew that she and her father would be together in the Long Room after luncheon. It was not impossible that he should have known it. But if that seemed an obstacle to the theory, another and more reasonable one suggested itself immediately. Margaret's sleep might have been natural in the beginning. Then some one might have come noiselessly to her side, as I had done, without disturbing her slumbers. He might have caused her to inhale some soporiferous vapor which would have dulled her senses while the murderous deed was done, passing away afterwards without leaving a trace upon her.

We three were silent while these thoughts were passing through my brain. Hilton sat in a chair and his head had fallen upon his hands. Before him stood Marshall, stern and soldierly. I stood at one side observing them.

It was [illegible] was drugged, I thought, who but this doctor could have done it? Is there some secret passion in the man's heart for Margaret? Did she favor him, and did he hope to win her when his rival should lack a father's influence in his favor? Then there was the will; and Hilton knew its contents.

"They make powders nowadays," said Marshall, "which develop extraordinary energy but very little noise. I think it possible that a weapon so charged might have been fired in this end of the room and not have been heard by anybody but the murderer. It is extremely improbable, but we must not forget the fact. A shot was certainly fired in this room. It must be explained somehow."

"Where were you?" I asked, with unintentional rudeness.

He turned upon me with a sort of military wheel.

"I was in the parlor with Mrs. Holliday," he said. "And your question reminds me of one that may be pertinent. Dr. Hilton, from your examination of the body, should you think it likely that Gen. Holliday was shot after Margaret left this room?"

I flushed hotly and was on the point of uttering a sharp retort. And then suddenly the thought of the true-hearted, kindly man, the friend whom all of us had lost, came over me and grief conquered resentment.

"Gentlemen," I said, "we waste time with idle suspicions. Let us confine ourselves to the facts of the case."

THE DAILY PRESS

ESTABLISHED MAY 10, 1887. PLAINFIELD, N. J., TUESDAY, APRIL 30, 1895 TWO CENTS A COPY. $5 A YEAR.

THE MEN WHO BROKE THE BANK.

The Greatest of All Great Detectives Drops in at The Press Office and Makes a Few Characteristic Comments.

A tall, sombre man with thoughtful, clean-shaven face, clothes of English cut, and an easy self-conscious air, strolled into The Press office at a late hour last evening. The man who writes the religious notes was matching pennies with the chap who does the fish stories, when the stranger entered.

"I beg pardon"—remarked the visitor.—"Have you such a thing as a burning-glass at hand?"

The fish editor produced the magnifying-crystal which he employs professionally and the stranger sighed with relief as he accepted a proffered chair and, nervously pulling from an inner pocket a large sheet of white paper, fell to examining it with great care. The religious man and the fish man looked on in silent curiosity and the cigar which the former was smoking went out and never came back. After some five minutes of this sort, the guest glanced up with a satisfied smile, returned the magnifying-glass to its owner and, assuring the literary men of his profound thanks, turned to go. But the fish editor saw a possible story in sight and recalled him.

"Would you consider it an impertinence, sir,"—inquired the shad authority with characteristic politeness—"if I were to enquire your business with the magnifying-glass?"

"Certainly not"—returned the stranger, seating himself easily on the city editor's desk.—"I see no further need of secrecy in my work, and you appear to be the sort of young men to appreciate the case. Might I trouble you, however, for a cigar? We ghosts like a smoke once in a while, you know."

"Ghosts!"—gasped The Press men.—"You never mean to say that you are a ghost!"

"That is precisely the notion I sought to convey"—he replied calmly, lighting the irreproachable cigar which the religious man gingerly handed him.—"You may possibly have heard of me in the flesh—some chap of the name of Doyle has made a fortune as my press agent. My name is Holmes."

"What! Sherlock Holmes?"—cried the newspaper men together.

"The same"—he admitted.—"My old friend Watson, whom Doyle has celebrated as my understudy, dropped in on me last night with a copy of The Press which he gets as regularly as may be expected considering the vile mail service that old man Charon puts up on the Styx. He directed my attention to your account of the robbery of a bank here and I was interested enough to buy a scalper's ticket and look in on the case."

"Well, do n't you think it is a dandy?"—enquired the religious man with some show of local pride.

"Hardly"—returned the shade, knocking the ashes from his cigar.—"The solution of the mystery appears very simple to me. When I arrived on the scene, I went over the ground and discovered that that the police, as is usual, had gone off on the wrong scent, and were looking for someone's horse and buggy, for people who remotely resembled those seen by the bank clerks, for everything or anything absurd, but overlooking, of course, the one available valuable clue which it required only a few hours for me to find. Here it is—the sheet of paper bearing an imaginary list of notes which a member of the gang held up before the eyes of one of the clerks while his brother crook slipped by and gained access to the vault."

"But where did you find it?"—put in the fish man excitedly.

"That is another story"—replied the late Holmes evasively.—"Suffice it that a cursory examination of the sheet reveals these interesting facts: That there were three persons concerned in the robbery: One, a tall man, well-educated, wearing a dark mustache, gray trousers, patent leather shoes slightly run down at the heels, and parting his hair on the right side; the second, a short man, stooping, beardless, knock-kneed in the left leg and bowed in the right, and wearing an $8 Spring suit; and the third, a woman, young, pretty, stylish, sporting a number of large finger rings, a chatelaine watch, an Eton jacket of navy blue, a white veil and No. 3 tan shoes."

"Is n't there a good deal of guesswork in all this?"—asked the religious man bravely.

"None whatever"—answered the spirit; "it's plain enough to anyone of brains who examines this paper. But I must be off, and you boys ought to be in bed. No, I must decline to explain how I arrived at my conclusions; Doyle has given the snap away so often that you should be able to figure it out for yourselves. Tell your policemen that I shall leave the sheet of paper just where I found it and that they might spend their time hunting it up instead of wild-goosing all over the State for nothing. Another cigar? Don't mind if I do. Remember me to Chief Grant, won't you! Good-bye."

He strolled leisurely over to the copy-desk and vanished up the pneumatic tube. Then the religious man and the fish man, dazed and awed, split the pennies even, and, quietly proceeding to the drug store at the corner, asked for something very, very soft—they had had enough of spirits for one night.

GRIST OF THE CITY COURT.

Phases of Plainfield Life as Depicted Before Judge Coddington.

George Lewis, a colored hackman, was arraigned before Judge Coddington in City Court this morning on the charge of assaulting Thomas Jones, an old man, near the North Avenue station Saturday night.

Jones was looking for Hibbitts's hack to take him home, but was unable to find the driver of the vehicle when Lewis came up and offered his services. Jones said he did not want to ride with him, but Lewis kept following him up, until the old man became provoked and said:

"I would n't ride with a nigger, any how."

This roiled Lewis's blood and he struck Jones a blow on the cheek that felled the old man to the ground. Policeman Frederickson was sent for and arrested Lewis.

In the City Court the colored man claimed that Jones attempted to joke him and that he struck him only in self defense. Also that it was a preconcerted arrangement among the other hackmen to run him out of a job by injuring his business. But the evidence was all against him and he was compelled to pay a fine of $10.

It was a quartette of rare specimens of humanity that faced Judge Coddington in City Court this morning. After the Lewis case had been disposed of, the Judge said in his accustomed way: "Bring in the next".

Sergeant Kiely repaired to the "cold" cells and after the clanking sounds of unlocking the grated doors had passed away, out tripped four giggling, curly-haired pickaninnies, who were hatless, coatless and shoeless. Through the crevices of their tattered stockings were seen shining toe nails—a sure harbinger of Summertide.

The Judge was busy in conversation with a gentleman when the juvenile culprits came in, and the pickaninnies clustered together like lambs at one end of the rail, where they whispered, giggled and seemed to be enjoying their novel initiation hugely. They looked with awe at the rogues collection displayed on the wall, and viewed the picture depicting the scene of a railroad lunch restaurant—the only work of art the rookery prides itself on possessing—as though they would like to be munching a ham sandwich or a piece of mince pie. Then they glanced at the Daily Press man and one of them suggested that their names would be in the paper. This seemed to please the little coons and they giggled some more. Here the Judge resumed his court business and asked their names. They gave them as George White, Joshua Brown, Clide White and Lewis Grant.

"What did you say your name was?"—asked Chief Grant of the last one in line in a surprised way.

"Lewis Grant", again answered the boy in a stoic tone.

The arrest was made by Policeman Robinson for stealing rides on a coal train.

"Where do you live?" asked the Judge of the first boy.

"Williameport, yah honah, sah", was the reply.

"What are you doing way up here?"

"I'se lookin' for a job, sah; I'se goin' to try to get a job as a bell boy in a hotel."

This reply was so good that it pleased his comrades so that they had to put their hand over their mouths to keep from breaking out in a hearty haw haw.

"What are you doing here?" asked the Judge of the last boy in the line.

"Why I jest come 'long 'cause he—referring to the boy who wanted to answer 'Front'—wanted me to".

"Ever been arrested before?"—asked the Judge.

"No sah"—they answered in concert.

"How do you get enough to eat—beg it?"

"Why we jest sing and dance in the small towns and get money 'nough that way to support ourselves."

"I will let you go, if you will get right out of town, and go home where you belong"—said the Judge in conclusion.

They stood as if bewildered for a moment, and then went out as they came in—giggling.

CLUB WOMEN.

Toasts Enjoyed at the Monday Afternoon Club Dinner.

The scene presented in the Casino of the Country Club during the Monday Afternoon Club dinner yesterday afternoon was one of beauty. The eight tables were arranged in fan shape, the principal one running lenthways along the side of the south wall, while the others ran out at right and left angles. The curtains of the stage were dropped, and in front of them was arranged a bower of flowers and potted plants, which, with their many colored blossoms and green foliage, gave a tropical air to the surroundings. The table covers were of white linen, and the serving dishes of silver and china. The table flowers were yellow daffodils and roses. On each table was a large number of candelabra, the shades of which corresponded in color with the flowers. All of these, accentuated by the brilliant toilettes of the fair diners, made a picture of delight and animation.

The dinner was commenced at 1, and it was 3 before the last course was served, at the conclusion of which the toasts were enjoyed. The first one responded to was "The Active Member," who was discussed by Mrs. Jennie De La M. Lozier, vice-president of Sorosis. The success of the club, of course, depended on the active member. The active members, however, might be of widely divergent characters, and pursue different methods, but when they come together under right conditions they will accomplish results.

"Women's Clubs, 1868-1895", was the toast to which Mrs. Jennie C. Croly, president of the New York State Federation of Woman's Clubs, responded. Early clubs, she said, aimed at being representatives of science, art and literature. The State and National Federations of Clubs are gradually assuming the power of great social republics, and she believed that if equal suffrage at the ballot box ever came it would be by reason of the women showing their ability to grasp and solve the problems of the day, just as the Monday Afternoon Club is doing.

"Our Guests" was talked of in a brief and pleasant strain by Mrs. L. H. Johnson, president of the Woman's Club of Orange.

The serious toast of "Faces We Miss" was responded to by Miss Adeline Newton. She said the memory of those who had met and worked with them in the past was too precious to give up without a reference—even in this time of banqueting. She spoke of those who had contributed much to the success of the last annual dinner, who were missing now by reason of being claimed by their Maker.

Mrs. Noah H. Chapman of the Brooklyn Woman's Club made a short address, "A Plea for Simplicity", which had been postponed from the literary exercises in the morning. The paper was practical in the opinions ventured and suggestions offered, so that Mrs. Chapman was the recipient of applause as she finished.

Miss Chandler responded to the toast of "The Woman Without a Club", but stated that she thought there was no such thing as the woman without a club—that is without being a member of some organization.

"The Men, God Bless Them" was responded to in happy vein by Mrs. Florence Howe Hall.

Mrs. Aaron Powell spoke of "The Home Maker", and said that the intellectual thought which clubs develop assists to make better homes among those whom it reaches.

Mrs. Henry Opdyke finished the toasts with "Our Next Reunion".

NEWS FROM THE EXCURSIONISTS.

As a Contrast to the Present Spell of Weather, Read This Letter from a Floral Eden.

Under date of Echo Mountain, Cal., April 23, A. V. D. Honeyman writes that he finds Fred S. Dunn of Plainfield in good health and as brown as a berry. He adds:

"The trip has been, thus far, an uninterrupted success. We arrived in Los Angeles in time to see the great floral parade; and, as the sight was such that no word-painting could describe it, we felt the spectacle was alone worth a trip across the continent to witness. Flowers were as thick as the grass at our feet and of beauty and fragrance such as we read of in oriental tales but did not suppose we should see in America. You could pick up, after the floral battle, a hundred thousand roses or pinks and no one would say nay. One of our party found in the street a cluster of over 100 roses and no one stopped to notice them."

Y. M. C. A. GYMNASTS.

Clever Performances Publicly Given by Local Athletes.

The first half of the gymnastic exhibition and indoor pentathlon contest was held in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium last evening and was a most interesting affair.

The running track was filled with spectators, who cheered for their favorites and added enthusiasm to the contests.

The dumb-bell drill was the first number on the programme, and was given by the class. The exhibition was a most creditable one, and the members showed great improvement in execution and precision.

Probably the most exciting event of the evening was the vaulting of the bar. Messrs. Wyckoff, Dupee, Burns and Woodward entered, but after 6 feet had been reached Burns and Wyckoff dropped out. The bar was raised one inch at a time, and as the two contestants successfully performed the feat hearty cheers were given by their friends. The limit was finally reached, however, when the bar was placed at the top, 7 feet 8 inches, and both cleared it in excellent form. The matter was weighed carefully by the judges, and finally decided in favor of Charles Dupee, after the contests were over.

Another very interesting feature was the exhibition on the parallel bars. The feats by the different members were exceedingly clever and well performed.

During the evening Thomas Schaefer gave an enjoyable exhibition of Indian-club swinging.

The concluding numbers, running high jump and standing broad jump, were interesting, and good work was done.

Those acting as judges were: Walter Freeman, Physical Director Black of Rahway, and Henry Haurand of the Turn Verein of this city.

The contests will be continued this evening, at which time the winners of both nights' performances will be announced and President W. D. Murray will award the prizes.

In the Casino Thursday Night.

Mr. Underhill gives an original condensation of Richard Brinsley Sheridan's great comedy "The Rivals", and, without the aid of costumes or stage effects, personates eight distinct characters with marvelous fidelity to living types. Keen wit and humorous situations abound, and all are exquisitely set forth by the genius of the impersonator.

There is no confusion of characters; Mrs. Malaprop is always the same as to voice and manner, as much as in the wrong use of big words, for which she is famous; and this is true of all other characters. Sir Anthony is the hit of the evening.

A Russian Honeymoon.

The management of "A Russian Honeymoon" earnestly begs that requests for tickets and all communications of whatever nature be sent to P. O. Box 644 or left at Reynolds's pharmacy as advertised, and not given to individuals in the cast or management.

Orders received through the proper channels can be filled quickly and satisfactorily. Monday, May 6, the public sale of tickets will take place at the box office of Music Hall at 2:30 p. m. All tickets remaining unclaimed at Reynolds's after that time will be sold with the others.

Village Choir.

A fine rehearsal of the Village Choir took place Monday afternoon. The large number of trained voices makes the training of the chorus an easy matter. Though Mr. Bassett, as leader, is equal to any emergency, it is not all work and no play ever for those assisting in producing the entertainment. For Jedidiah taught by illustrations that cause shouts of laughter. If you want to enjoy a hearty laugh go to the Y. M. C. A. Hall Thursday and Friday evening, May 2 and 3. The New York Herald says: "The entertainment is replete with novel and amusing scenes."

Exempts Elect.

The following officers were elected by the Exempt Firemen's Association last night: President—A Saltzman; vice-president—J E Flannery; corresponding secretary—G Thorn; financial secretary—S J Robinson; treasurer—E M Laing; trustees—D W Littell, E M Laing, W A Woodruff, Joseph A Hubbard, and E A Vermeule; representatives to Relief Association—A Saltzman, and G Thorn; representatives to State Association—D W Littell, J E Flannery, W A Woodruff, E M Laing, and S J Robinson.

Our better halves say they could not keep house without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is used in more than half the homes in Leeds, Sims Bros., Leeds, Iowa. This shows the esteem in which that remedy is held where it has been sold for years and is well known. Mothers have learned that there is nothing so good for colds, croup and whooping cough, that it cures these ailments quickly and permanently, and that it is pleasant and safe for children to take. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. PLANNING FOR COMMENCEMENT.

North Plainfield School Trustees Conduct Important Business.—Sewing May Be Taught in School.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Education of North Plainfield was held last evening in the schoolhouse. Those present were Trustees Joseph, Van Winkle, Schutt, Waring, Brown, Overton, Lounsbury, and McCutchen.

The monthly salary list and incidental bills, amounting to $1,160.30, were audited and ordered paid.

The President reported renewals of contracts with teachers for the coming school year.

A report was received from a special committee appointed to consider the advisability of introducing plain sewing into the school. The committee reported an extensive correspondence with schools in which sewing is taught, and recommended its introduction next year into the school.

The report was accepted, but action on the recommendation was deferred for the present.

The Principal reported a new plan for Commencement exercises, to consist of music, an address, presentation of diplomas, and two essays, with recitations to be delivered by members of the class, to be selected according to merit.

The report was received and adopted.

A committee of three, to consist of the president and two other trustees to be named by him, was appointed with power to have charge of the Commencement exercises.

SAVE THE ELMS.

Another Leading Citizen Endorses the Plan to Establish a $1,000 Fund.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—Ex-Mayor Randolph has placed our community under great obligations for his very admirable communication in Saturday's issue with reference to the protection of our elms. It is a subject which should enlist the immediate attention of all our citizens. We have the strange paradox and inconsistency confronting us that while the national, and, I believe, all the State governments, set apart Arbor Day for tree planting, and to restore as far as practicable the wanton destruction of our forests for the last 25 or 30 years, we, the good citizens of Plainfield, are trying to see how many good elms and maples they can destroy; and the least irregularity in the surface of our sidewalks is made the pretext for slaughtering our maples and elms of 25 and 30 years growth, as if they could be replaced in a night. This has met with decided opposition in some quarters and had to be abandoned by our street commissioner. I shall gladly be another subscriber of $5 or $10 per annum to create a fund of $1,000, either to repay our Common Council for a like amount or put it in the hands of a committee who will carry out the plan suggested by Mr. Randolph. In connection with the subject, let me quote a short article from The Presbyterian, of April 14, suggesting another remedy. "The elm tree which has been in its present location for three years has grown vigorously. Every Spring attacks are made upon it by elm bugs. I keep a lot of chickens under it inclosed by a wire fence. They seem to keep the tree free from all kinds of bugs. When the elm bug made its appearance last year I sprayed the tree, cleaning them out, and then put the chickens under it. The insects never bothered the tree any more."

SAMUEL MILLIKEN, JR.

Plainfield, April 29.

[Action in this important matter should be immediate. The Press has been asked, and is ready and willing, to keep the Elm-Tree Subscription Fund open in its office. Now is the time to subscribe.]

MASKS AND DANCES.

Pocohontas Daughters Have a Merry Masquerade.

Grotesque costumes and ludicrous masks made the masquerade ball given by the Daughters of Pocohontas last night one of pleasure in the fact that the merry terpsichorean disciples could cut up funny antics with a freedom born of a knowledge that their burlesque attire obscured their true identity. The costumes of the dancers make a circus-like spectacle while they tripped the light fantastic toe to the tuneful music of Frazee's orchestra. About 100 were present.

The committee of arrangements was as follows: Mrs E Radin, chairman; Mrs Fleischhauer, Mrs Beucklaus, Mrs J W Klein, Mrs L Holstein.

Wooden Wedding Anniversary.

The fifth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Dudley S. Miller was very pleasantly celebrated last night by a number of friends giving them a wooden surprise party. The affair was so quietly arranged by Mrs Charles Van Winkle that neither Mr. nor Mrs. Miller was apprised of the event until they came in on them at about 8:30, the party having previously met at the home of Elmer Moffett nearby. The evening was spent in cheerful social intercourse during which Mrs. Charles Bullman read two choice selections. Mr. and Mrs. Miller were the recipients of a valuable collection of woodenware presents, as tokens of the occasion, and to show the appreciation in which the visitors held them. Refreshments were also served.

The following were present: Mr and Mrs R K Case, Mr and Mrs C Van Winkle, Mr and Mrs A M Vanderbeek, Mr and Mrs Calen, Mr and Mrs Charles E Vail, Mr and Mrs Charles Bullman, Mr and Mrs E Moffett, Mrs William Drake, Arthur Drake, Miss Margaret R Case, Mrs L W Randolph, and Mrs A Miller.

Alfred Bonnell of Manning avenue is today celebrating the 90th anniversary of his birthday. Mr. Bonnell was about the borough today as lively as any other young man. He takes great interest in the lumber business, in which his son George Bonnell is engaged.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

BUCHANAN IN SUSPENSE

His Counsel at Work on the Last Faint Hope.

Belief That Total Collapse May Attend His Execution To-morrow—He Has Made No Preparation for Death, Believing That He Will Yet Escape the Electric Chair.

Sing Sing, April 30.—The respite granted by Gov. Morton for Dr. Buchanan expires at midnight to-night and unless the court interferes the condemned man will be executed to-morrow morning. Buchanan relies solely on the efforts to be made by his lawyers to-day to save him from the electric chair. The condemned man realizes that this is the most critical period in his long struggle to escape the death penalty. He is naturally extremely nervous to-day and is waiting anxiously to hear from his lawyers, who are in Washington making final appeal.

Has Made No Preparation.

Buchanan has made no preparation for death, and should he have to go to the electric chair to-morrow morning it is thought he will be in a fearful condition. Mrs. Buchanan, who visited her husband yesterday afternoon and remained with him for a long time, will probably go to the prison again some time to-day if the legal struggle of the lawyers to save her husband is unsuccessful. She will then take her last leave of him.

May Never See His Daughter Again.

It is probable that if Dr. Buchanan is executed he will never see his little daughter again, as he has persuaded his wife not to bring the child to the prison. He does not want the little one to know that he is to meet such a fate.

Claims He Is Legally Dead.

New York, April 30.—Lawyer Gibbons, after Justice Brown, in the United States district court, yesterday, denied the writ of habeas corpus asked for in behalf of Dr. Buchanan, said he was still confident that he could prolong Buchanan's life for several months yet. He maintains that Buchanan is legally dead, and that, therefore, the person still known as Buchanan should no longer be detained at Sing Sing. The application papers for the writ asked for recited that Gov. Morton respited Buchanan for a week, naming a day of execution, which the lawyers say, he had no right to do. They therefore ask that Warden Sage be required to produce the body of Dr. Buchanan in court and show cause why he is detained. After the decision of Justice Brown, a notice of appeal was filed with the clerk of the district court. A certified copy of this was sent to Sing Sing. Buchanan's lawyers claim it will act as a stay to save his life until the final argument before the supreme court.

Believes His Case Is Hopeless.

Albany, April 30.—Lawyers, judges and state officers here who have been interested in the Buchanan case are of the opinion that the United States court will refuse to interfere in the case upon any grounds, and that Buchanan will have to die Wednesday. This is the opinion of Attorney-General Hancock, Judge Joyce, the pardon clerk, and Private Secretary Cole.

RUSSIAN MAIL STEAMER SUNK.

In Collision with a Russian War Ship—Five Lives Lost.

Vienna, April 30.—A dispatch from Sebastapol says the Russian warship Penderaklia of the Black sea fleet, collided with the Russian mail steamer Kotzebu near Takinnut lighthouse. The Kotzebu filled rapidly. Most of the passengers and crew were taken aboard the Penderaklia from the Kotzebu's decks, others were picked up after she went down. Five men sank with the ship and were lost. She is an iron vessel nearly twenty years old.

MRS. PARNELL BETTER.

The County Reward Offered for Her Assailant To Be Doubled.

Bordentown, N. J., April 30.—Dr. Shipps says Mrs. Parnell had a weak spell last night, but had fully recovered this morning, and continues to improve. It has leaked out that the county reward of $250 for the apprehension of Mrs. Parnell's assailant will be doubled to-morrow in case the present reward proves ineffectual. The Caseys have retained counsel. They declare their innocence of any connection with the affair and say they are ready to meet the charge.

GOODS HIDDEN AWAY.

Two Prominent Merchants Arrested for Defrauding Creditors.

Hollidaysburg, Pa., April 30.—Michael Drass and Jacob Drass, two prominent merchants and owners of stores at Roaring Springs and Duncansville, this county, are under arrest for the fraudulent concealment of goods, on a warrant sworn out by A. L. Horner, a Baltimore creditor. Merchandise to the value of $15,000 that had been shipped to Duncansville from Philadelphia, Pittsburg and Baltimore was found hidden away in three stables.

Death of a New York Broker.

New York, April 30.—William H. Hamilton, one of the best known members of the New York Stock exchange, died last night at his home in this city. Mr. Hamilton joined the Stock exchange on May 30, 1864, and for many years had been the partner of Frank W. Savin. He was 62 years old.

WHO WROTE TRILBY?

Du Maurier's Claim Disputed in the Courts.

A Theatre Company Alleges That the Book and Title Have Been Common Property for Over Seventy Years—A Surprise May Be in Store for Two Continents.

Denver, April 30.—Did Du Maurier write "Trilby?" This novel question was propounded in the United States court in good faith when the suit of Harper Brothers and A. M. Palmer for an injunction against the Lyceum Stock company to restrain them from producing "Trilby" at their theatre, was called. The defendants allege that the book entitled "Trilby" was not originated, invented or written by Du Maurier.

Claim a Property for 75 Years.

They assert that the orignal title and book of "Trilby" was first published in France in 1820 and afterward translated and published in English in 1847, and that the book has been common property for seventy-five years. The attorneys for the plaintiffs asked for time to communicate with their clients in New York as to the course they should pursue, and the court postponed the hearing until to-morrow.

Would Cause a Sensation.

Should the allegations of the Lyceum company be true a sensation will be caused all over the two continents. This is the first public intimation of an attack on the authenticity of the work, and if it is successful every company in the world will have as much right to play "Trilb" as the Boston organization.

DANA ADVISES METHODISTS.

They Should Advertise Religion in the Daily Newspapers.

New York, April 30.—"Whether of Not the Church Should Advertise," was discussed at a meeting of the Methodist Social union, held in Jaeger's, Madison avenue and Fifty-ninth street, last night. The chief speaker was Charles A. Dana, editor of the Sun. He told the Methodists that the only successful way to advertise was in a daily newspaper with a circulation reaching the masses. There were forces at work, he said, undermining religion greater than ever before, which necessitated defense and extension of the faith.

SEAL FISHING SEASON.

The Most Successful on Record and Encouraging for Newfoundland.

St. Johns, N. F., April 30.—The seal fishing season just ended has been one of the most successful on record. Two-third of the steamers engaged did remarkably well while the remainder made enough to pay expenses. The value of the catch is estimated to be about $500,000. This will prove wonderfully beneficial in the way of bringing about the recovery of the colony from the recent commercial disasters.

PAIN BANISHED SLEEP.

A Rheumatic Tells a Wonderful Story.

Less Than Half a Bottle of Munyon's New Remedy Restored Him to Health.

James Buckley 215 Washington street, Newark, N. J., says: "I have been suffering from rheumatism for a number of years. The pains were exceedingly severe and I could not sleep nights. I could not get relief until I commenced taking Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. Less than one-half a bottle drove all the Rheumatism out of my system and I am as well and strong as I ever was in my life. Mothers have never found a preparation so well adapted to the needs of thin, delicate children, as Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites.

Children almost universally like the taste of it, which makes its administration easy, and it supplies their blood with the food properties that overcome wasting tendencies.

Scott's Emulsion enriches the blood, promotes the making of healthy flesh, and aids in a healthy formation of the bones.

Don't be persuaded to accept a substitute.

HER SWIFT PASSAGE

Vigilant Beats All Transatlantic Yacht Records.

Returns to New York in Eighteen Days, Two Hours and Fifteen Minutes—Tugs Could Not Keep Up with Her—The Skipper Delighted with Her Conduct.

New York, April 30.—The Vigilant, the gallant cup defender and fighter for Yankee supremacy in yachtdom, is home again. She bowled past the Sandy Hook lightship at 11:45 a. m., and beat all yacht records on the westward transatlantic voyage for either sloops or schooners. Eighteen days, two hours and fifteen minutes was her time. A couple of tugs vied with each other for the honor and profit of towing her up the bay, but the yacht scorned them both. Indeed neither of them, fallen astern, could catch her, and she sped through the swash channel and up to the narrows to the house of the Atlantic Yacht club, where she anchored and her great mainsail was furled for the first time since she weighed anchor in Southampton harbor on April 11, for she made the open sea on the other side without the assistance of a tug.

Vigilant's Log.

The Vigilant's log showed the following days' runs: From 3.30 p. m. of the 11th to noon of the 12th, 209 knots, and to noon of each following day, 235, 247, 233, 213, 173, 173, 98, 220, 269, 189, 59, 158, 125, 96, 79, 216 and 232, to Sandy Hook lightship. When Captain Barr and crew left New York for Southampton to bring the Vigilant home, he said that if he could make the passage in twenty days he would be a happy man. Sixty days' provisions were taken aboard before she left England.

Previous Yacht Records.

The best previous transatlantic yachting record this way was made by the 40-foot Fife boat Minerva. The time was twenty-eight days. Eastward records have been much better, as a matter of course, with the customarily prevalent easterly winds on the north Atlantic. Vigilant made the eastward trip across in fifteen days to Tory island, off the north coast of Ireland, and the small sloop yacht Alice was taken across by Capt. Clark, of Boston, in less time than that.

DEGREE FOR A WOMAN.

Significant Step Taken at Goettingen, Germany.

Berlin, April 30.—An Englishwoman, Miss Grace Chisholm, has just taken the degree of doctor of philosophy at the University of Goettingen, with the express permission of the Prussian minister of education. This is the first degree ever taken by a woman since Goettingen became a Prussian university. The emperor has hitherto opposed the admission of women to the imperial universities and the conferring of this degree looks like a change of policy and the beginning of further concessions in regard to the higher education of women.

PROF. SWING'S BURIAL PLACE.

His Daughters Divided and a Probate Judge Asked to Arbitrate.

Chicago, April 30.—The daughters of the late Prof. David Swing are divided as to the burial place for their father's remains, and other relatives have taken sides on the matter. Some want the burial to be by the side of his wife at the old home in Oxford, O., while the other section want the interment here. Probate Judge Kohisant was asked to arbitrate.

THE BOUZY DISASTER.

Steady Rain Has Increased the Wretchedness of the Sufferers.

Paris, April 30. —After making a tour of the Aviere valley and approving the arrangements for the relief of the sufferers, M. Laguee returned to Paris last evening. A despatch from Epinal says that steady rain has increased the wretchedness of the families left homeless by the disaster.

"Theosophical Pope."

Boston, April 30.—At a meeting of the independent theosophists of Boston yesterday a protest and appeal was made to the thosophists of America condemning the action of the theosophical society just held in Boston, in electing W. Q. Judge perpetual president and styling the latter "This new theosophical pope."

Carpenter Will Recover.

Easton, Pa., April 30.—Samuel Carpenter, arrested last week on suspicion of having caused the death of Mrs. Rey Blackwell, Phillipsburg, N. J., and who attempted suicide in Easton jail Sunday by cutting his throat with a razor, is very much inproved and will likely recover.

Efficiency Only To Be the Test.

Cleveland, April 30.—It is rumored that the railroads in the Vanderbilt system, in making promotions among employes, will pay no attention to seniority of service, but will consider only efficiency. This, it is expected, will meet with stubborn resistance.

To Be Rowed on the Hudson.

New York, April 30.—It has been practically settled that the big boat race of the university crews of Cornell, Columbia and the University of Pennsylvania shall be rowed on the Hudson at Poughkeepsie.

Wilde's Defense.

London, April 30.—The defense in the case against Oscar Wilde and Alfred Taylor began this morning.

MIKADO HAS A CHILL.

Japan Has Not Yet Replied to Russia.

London, April 30.—The reports that the Russian, French and German ministers have gone to Kioto for the purpose of having an interview with Premier Ito are unfounded. Japan has not as yet officially replied to the joint note of protest lodged by the three powers. The ministers of the powers mentioned are still inclined to take a pacific view of the situation. The mikado is suffering from the effects of a chill, and the fetes which were to have been held in Kioto to celebrate the victories of Japan have been postponed in consequence.

Count Ito's Departure.

Yokoham, April 30.—The date of the departure of Count Ito, the president of the Japanese council of ministers, for Cheefoo, in order to ratify the treaty of peace there on May 8, has not yet been determined upon.

Minister Dunn Urging Japan.

London, April 30.—A dispatch from Vienna says: A cablegram from Tokio announces that the American envoy there is doing all in his power to make the envoys of Italy, Belgium, Austria, Spain and Holland help him to persuade Count Ito, president of the Japanese council of ministers, to comply with the wishes of Russia, France and Germany.

MANUELA GARCIA RELEASED.

The Little Cuban Girl Handed Over to Her Chinese Escort.

New York, April 30.—Manuela Garcia, the 7-year-old child who has for some days been in the custody of the Gerry society on the supposition that she had been abducted from her parents in Cuba, was yesterday given back into the hands of Jose Garcia, the Chinaman, who says he is taking her to China at the request of her father. When the case came up for examination in the Tombs court, Agent Stocking of the society said that he had not heard from the society's agents at Havana, although he had cabled to them twice. He said, however, that he would have no difficulty in getting her if the report from Havana agents warranted the society in taking further action, as she cannot reach Vancouvre within less than a week.

COCK FIGHT NEAR ELMIRA.

Many Thousand Dollars Changed Hands Last Night.

Elmira, N. Y., April 30.—A great chicken main between birds from Buffalo and Rochester was in progress about three miles from this city late last night. Several hundred sports from these cities, Elmira and other places were in attendance and many thousand dollars changed hands. The sheriff was kept in the dark and the fight was very animated. Rochester birds won the first two battles, gathering in about $1,000 from the Buffalo-Elmira combine. The fight was for the best six and Buffalo won in a majority of the contests. The stakes were $300 a side. The match was not finished until early this morning.

SEEN TO DIG UP A PACKAGE.

Two Strangers Who May Have Secured a Hidden Treasure.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., April 30.—Saturday night two men drove to White Plains, this county, and proceeding to the farm of Frank Eno, near that village, dug up a package which had been buried near a large boulder, and hastily disappeared, since which time nothing has been seen or heard of the strangers. It is believed by some that it was the treasure supposed to have been buried by "Red Nose Mike," the Italian arrested at White Plains several years ago for the murder and robbery of a paymaster in Pennsylvania.

ORDERED TO NICARAGUA

Two U. S. Gunboats To Proceed Without Delay.

To Protect American Residents in the Event of a Threatened Revolution — No Connection with the Corinto Affair, Says Secretary Herbert—Indemnity Situation.

Washington, April 30.—After several conferences last evening between Secretary Gresham and Secretary Herbert, the secretary of the navy has sent dispatches to the commanders of the United States gunboats Alert and the Atlanta, directing them to proceed without delay to San Juen Del Sur and Greytown, Nicaragua, respectively. The Alert is at Panama, and it will take her about a day and a half to reach San Juan Del Sur, which is the cable station nearest to Corinto, situated about one hundred miles below that port. The Atlanta is at Key West, and can make the distance of 750 miles from that place to Greytown in two and a half days.

Revolution Threatened.

When Secretary Herbert was asked the significance of these orders he answered promptly as follows: "The newspapers say that a revolution is probable in Nicaragua. They state that the people are very much dissatisfied with the course of the government, and are likely to attempt to overthrow it. In order to protect the interests of American citizens, their lives and property and, following the policy always pursued in such contingencies, I have ordered the Alert to San Juan Del Sur, and the Atlanta to Greytown. In addition to these vessels the Montgomery, now at Mobile, will sail on May 7 for Greytown, conveying the Nicaraguan canal commission to that place. The Montery, which has sailed for Panama, will remain at Panama for the present.

No Connection with Corinto Affairs.

"With two United States ships on one side of Nicaragua and one ship on the other side, it is plain that American interests will be protected, if the rumored revolution should take place. But I wish it distinctly understood that these vessels are sent to Nicaragua for the purpose of caring for citizens of the United States and their interests, and not on any business connected with the situation at Corinto."

Nicaragua Is a Sovereign State.

While the policy of this government in the trouble at Corinto is well understood, the first authoritative statement on the subject has just been made. A cabinet officer said that the United States could not interfere between Great Britain and Nicaragua in their matter of difference because Nicaragua was a sovereign state, recognized as such by Great Britain and the United States and must hold herself responsible to Great Britain for offenses committed against British subjects.

Corinto Situation Relieved.

It is understood that the situation at Corinto has been relieved of much of its tension by an intimation cabled by Ambassador Bayard, that in case Nicaragua would guarantee payment of the indemnity asked within fifteen days, Great Britain would accede to a request for such an extension of time.

INCOME TAX RETURNS.

Tabulated Ones To Be Sent to Washington To-morrow.

Washington, April 30.—The officials having charge of income tax matters have had little to do lately, but a rush of work is expected to begin to-morrow. On that day collectors of customs have been instructed to send in all income tax returns that have been examined and tabulated. Remaining returns are to be sent in on May 15. It is probable that the returns, which will begin to arrive to-morrow, will comprise fully three-fourths of the whole. The returns that came in prior to the decision of the supreme court have nearly all been sent back to the collectors to be corrected in conformity with the court's decision.

Disinherited Her Son.

New York, April 30.—The contest over the will of Mrs. Sarah A. Havemeyer, the widow of ex-Mayor William F. Havemeyer, which was begun several months ago, has been compromised. Mrs. Havemeyer left an estate of about $200,000. Under the codicil she disinherited her son, Charles W. Havemeyer, and gave his share to his children, Julia L. and Loom's Havemeyer. Mr. Havemeyer is a resident of Philadelphia, and has been ill for some time. He had not been on friendly terms with the family for some years.

STORY OF THE WAR.

JAPAN'S BRILLIANT TACTICS IN SUBDUING CHINA.

A Succession of Victories From the First. An Offensive and Defensive Alliance By Which Japan Will General China's Vast Armies Should Either Be Besieged.

The full terms of the treaty of peace between China and Japan are finally avowed, and more than justify the wildest estimate that has yet been made of the ambition—of the conquering power. The independence of Corea was assured, but such independence as Corea would enjoy under this treaty is a mere sham. The annexation of Formosa, of the conquered strongholds and of the territory east of the Liao River is the dismemberment of China. The indemnity is $142,000,000.

The sixth article provides for "an offensive and defensive alliance between China and Japan." This means Japanese generals in command of Chinese armies, Japanese admirals restoring China's navy, Japanese control of Chinese finances, legislation, commerce and foreign relations. In a word it gives to forty millions of Japanese the power of handling the resources of the four hundred millions of China.

What use Japan would make of this power is sufficiently indicated in an interview published by Henry Norman in "The People and Politics of the Far East." In this interview Count Okuma, an ex-Minister of Foreign Affairs, frankly says:

"The European powers are already showing symptoms of decay, and the next generation will see their constitutions shattered and their empires in ruins. * * * Who is fit to be their proper successors if not ourselves."

Japan is undoubtedly dreaming of world conquest. Its statesmen and generals have read the history of Persia, of Alexander and of Imperial Rome. The absorption of China is really the chief article of the treaty.

MARSHAL YAMAGATA, ADMIRAL ITO, MARSHAL OYAMA.

Japan, an empire with forty million population conquered China, an empire with four hundred million population, within a little less that eight months.

The war virtually began on the 22d of last June, when 20,000 Japanese troops were landed in Corea. It practically ended February 14 of this year when Admiral Ting, the Chinese Commander surrended Weihaiwei and then committed suicide.

The United States tried to prevent war by offering (July 18) to be a sort of mutual friend in settling the quarrel. China seemed willing to consent to meditation, but Japan as much as told the Americans to mind their own business. Nevertheless, on every favorable occasion during the struggle the United States sought to play the part of peacemaker, and eventually peace was brought about through the instrumentality of Minister Dunlin Tokio and Minister Denby in Pekin.

They were the means of arranging the Shimonoseki conference, and of insuring its advance by bringing the warring powers to an understanding as to outline conditions after which only details remained to be settled.

The first overt act of war was the sinking of the British steamship Kowshing off Asan, Corea, in July by the Japanese cruiser Naniwa. The Kowshing was transporting troops to reinforce the Chinese on the peninsula.

Two days before the Japanese had in effect seized the king's palace at Seoul under pretense of protecting the helpless Corean monarch.

LI HUNG CHANG.

July 29 Japan called out her reserves and on Aug 1 she notified representatives of other countries that war was on, but when the blood letting had fairly begun Japan politely informed the rest of the world that things were just what they seemed.

There were numerous engagements of minor consequence while the Japanese were driving the Chinese northward out of Corea, but the first great battle was at Pingyang, Sept. 15 and 16, when Field Marshal (now Minister of War) Yamagata's army captured that stronghold.

Sept. 17, the sea fight off the mouth of the Yalu River substantially destroyed the Chinese navy.

Field Marshal Oyama sailed from Hiroskima Sept. 23, with the second Japanese army, but was lost to sight until exactly one month later he landed with his forces at Talien on the Shinking peninsula of China.

Marshal Yamagata meanwhile had been leading his victorious army through Northern Corea.

Port Arthur, looked upon as one of the best fortified places in the world, fell Nov. 21. The two Japanese armies then marched leisurely on to Peking. There was occasional fighting, but evidently the Japanese did not press the campaign, moving along leisurely and when ready capturing Newchwang on the Leaotong River.

The battle of Weihaiwei was the next and the final important engagement of the war.

Japan has made a hostile demonstration about Formosa, but probably in order to lay a foundation for a claim to it in the peace negotiations rather that to seize the island.

About the middle of March the talk of peace negotiations, which had been heard for some weeks, crystalized in the definite agreement of China to accept the conditions which Japan proposed.

The correspondence was carried on through the United States ministers in order to avoid a repetition of the incident of February, when Japan kicked out two emissaries masquerading as peace embassadors, but without credentials.

After some further delay Li Hung Chang was duly commissioned to represent the Emperor of China and sailed for Shimonoseki, Japan, where he was received by Japan's peace commissioners, Count Ito and Viscount Mutsu.

The peace conference was only fairly under way when a fanatic shot Li Hung Chang, inflicting a slight wound in the face. The Mikado promptly proclaimed an armistice, intended to last until the Chinese Envoy should recover.

Before the armistice expired the peace conference had agreed upon a treaty.

The provisions of the treaty of most consequence to outside countries are these:

China agrees to no longer impose upon foreigners the odious tax known as likin, levied upon goods and sales.

A uniform standard tael is to be adopted by China for her currency. Much confusion is caused in money calculations, because there are the Aaikwan or custom tael (usually meant when Government computations are made), worth about 72 cents, and the Shanghai tael, worth about 69 cents.

All foreigners are to be permitted to introduce into China factories and machinery, and to lease warehouses in the interior.

Japan takes Formosa, the Pescadores Islands and Manchuria from Yingkow, on the Leao River to Auping, on the Yalu including the Leatong peninsula.

No other part of China is to be occupied by Japan even as a temporary guarantee that China shall abide by the provisions of the peace treaty, except possibly Weihaiwei.

The important commercial concessions made by China are to be shared by all nations.

Other countries have striven for many years to induce China to abolish the likin impost, but in vain.

The term is composed of the Chinese word "li," the thousandth part of a tael, and "kin," meaning money. The tax is imposed in addition to customs duties upon goods transported from one point in China to another, and the rates varies at the different barriers or boundaries throughout the country.

Foreign owned goods might be exempted from this and other local exactions by means of transit passes issued by the customs authorities on payment of two and one-half per cent. of the value of the goods.

Originally the likin was a tax of one cash (a copper coin varying in value from one-tenth to one-fourteenth of an American cent) per tael on the value of all sales, and was imposed by the people of China upon themselves to make up the deficiency in the land tax during the Taiping rebellion.

The money thus raised was to be set apart for military measures only, and was intended to be merely a temporary measure. But it is still levied and has been recognized in treaties by foreign nations trading with China.

JAPAN'S NEW ACQUISITION.

Formosa, Rich in Resources, Grows a Much Prized Kind of Tea.

Formosa, "the beautiful," is about 90 miles east of the southern central part of China, opposite the cities of Amoy and Swatow. It is separated from China by the Formosa Channel, through which the Pacific mail steamships pass going between Yokohama and Hongkong. The channel is a favorite locality for the typhoon.

The island is about 240 miles long, with an average width of about 70 miles. A chain of mountains stretches north and south through the middle. Many of the mountains are volcanic.

Along the entire west coast are numerous cities, inhabited principally by Chinese, who have emigrated from Amoy, Swatow and other places in the Province of Fokien, under which Government it is. The population of Formosa is estimated at about 2,000,000 by the Chinese, but that is most undoubtedly an overestimation.

The principal traders, aside from the wealthy Chinese tea dealers, are English commission and shipping merchants and Parsee merchants, who export tea, sugar, camphor drugs, rice, jute and hemp, and import opium, cheap cotton goods, etc.

The eastern coast is almost entirely inhabited by aboriginal savages, wholly unlike the Chinese. They have coarse, black hair, which is cut squarely across at the neck. They are large, erect, and resemble North American Indians much more than their Chinese neighbors. They still indulge in tattooing to a great extent.

The chief city on the western coast is Kelung, at the northern extremity, very important in consequence of its coal mines and a valuable coaling station. The export of coal from Kelung probably reaches 75,000 tons a year.

Tamsin, the next city, is on the west coast, a few miles from the extremity at the mouth of the Tamsin River. Its principal article of export is tea, of which over twenty million pounds is shipped in a year.

This tea has a flavor very different from any in China. It is very popular in the United States, which country takes over three-quarters of its product. The crop is shipped between April and November to Amoy, where it is sold to commission merchants, matted and faced, and shipped per Suez steamships to England and America and via Pacific mail steamers to San Francisco from Hongkong.

Formosa tea has almost entirely superseded the Amoy tea, so largely exported 20 years ago.

The Old Man's Idea.

"Gosh!" said Mr. Jason, stopping on the corner and turning clear around to get another look at the young woman passing by, "kissing a girl with them sleeves on must be nigh the same as tunnelin' into a gingham sunbonnet, like a fellow had to do when I was a boy."—Indianapolis Journal.

The expression to "rain cats and dogs," indicating a severe shower, is found in Dean Swift. It is supposed to be of proverbial origin, and much older than his time.

ORIGIN OF FAMILIAR PHRASES.

From Classics to Slang and the Reason for Comprehensive Expressions.

"To fire out," in the sense of a forcible ejection, is found in Shakespeare, in Sonnet 144.

"Cups that cheer, but not inebriate," are first mentioned by Cowper in the "Task." The allusion is to teacups.

"Facts are stubborn things" is an aphorism first used by La Sage in "Gil Blas." It has since become proverbial.

"No flies on him," given as an Americanism, is found in "Don Quixote," where it occurs as one of the sayings of Sancho Panza.

"Fiasco" means a bottle or flask. When the Italian glass blowers detected flaws in the vase they were blowing, they made an ordinary bottle of the failure, and hence the name.

The phrase "almighty dollar" was first used, so far as known, by Washington Irving. It has since passed into general employment to indicate the worship of wealth, both in this country and in England.

To "pile on agony" is popularly supposed to be an Americanism. It is found, however, in one of the letters of Charlotte Bronte.

"In the same boat," an expression often given by English authorities as an Americanism, really dates back to the first Christian century, when it was used by Clement I., Bishop of Rome, about the year 100, in a letter to the Church of Corinth.

The soubriquet "Father of his country," was first applied to Marius, the Roman officer who (B. C. 102 and 101) won signal victories over the Northern barbarians.

"Washing dirty linen in public" is probably an old proverbial saying. It was made famous by Napoleon, who used it in a speech to the Chamber of Deputies in 1814 to intimate that differences between the parties in France should not become a matter of public scandal.

"Barking up the wrong tree," meaning that an individual is mistakenly following the wrong impression, is believed to be an Americanism borrowed from the fact that squirrel dogs will often bark at the root of a tree from which their game has escaped by passing from branch to branch.

To "face the music" is a metaphor borrowed from the stage, where the player comes to the front and faces the orchestra.

To "take the cake" is an expression which seems to have originated among the colored people of the South. Cake walks, or promenades in which cakes were offered as a reward for grace of demeanor, were formerly common in the Southern States, and are even now known in many localities.

The expression "bloody shirt" is believed to have originated with the Italians of New Orleans. There were many natives of Corsica among them, and in that turbulent island when a man was killed in one of the private feuds which were continually occurring his bloody shirt and other garments were exposed at the funeral in order to incite his relatives to vengeance.

The phrase "to die in the last ditch" was first used by William, Prince of Orange, who, during the war with France, was asked what he would do in case the troops of Holland were defeated in the field and who replied: "I will die in the last ditch."

STAMFORD'S TYPHOID CASES.

Result of the Investigation by the State Board of Health.

New Haven, April 30.—Dr. C. A. Lindsley, head of the state board of health, said this morning that the outbreak of typhoid fever at Stamford is decidedly the worst on record in Connecticut. He gives the result of the board of health investigation up to last Saturday night as follows: In a population of about 16,000 in Stamford there were up to Saturday night 168 cases in which the diagnosis was typhoid fever and 24 other cases were doubtful. The cases were equally divided between the sexes, and 54 out of 160 were cases under ten years of age, indicating milk used by children as the cause. Forty-three cases were between twenty and thirty years of age. Out of 160 cases, 121 developed in four days, between April 18 and 22, and 147 of the persons affected were consumers of the milk of one dealer; six of the remaining 13 took milk from his cans, one used his milk supplied to another family, and six took milk from other sources. The well from which the water to wash the cans was taken was found to be filled with surface water, and to be brimming with bacteria. New cases are still expected.

THE CHITRAL CAMPAIGN.

Surrender of Sher Afzul—Whereabouts of Umra Kahn Unknown.

London, April 27.—The Times publishes a dispatch from Dir, in the Chitral district, which says: "The Khan of Dir has arrived here with Sher Afzul, the fugitive usurper of the throne of Chitral, and 1,500 other prisoners. He drove Sher Afzul through the snow and starved him into surrender. The political effect of the capture is very important. The whereabouts of Umra Khan is urcertain. Twenty of his men have been captured and disarmed of Martini carbines. The large number of stolen British rifles and the immense quantities of government ammunition found in the hands of the rebels has caused considerable surprise. Ten thousand cartridges were found in the Dir fort in sealed government boxes.

THE CASE OF MR. WALLER.

No Reply Yet Received by Ambassador Eustis from the French.

Paris, April 30.—United States Ambassador Eustis has received pointed and definite instructions from Washington regarding the case of John B. Waller, formerly United States consul at Tamatave, Madagascar, now imprisoned in France under a twenty years' sentence imposed by court-martial, on the ground that he was in communication with the Hovas. Mr. Eustis verbally and in writing has communicated his instructions to the French minister of foreign affairs, M. Hanotaux, but the latter has not yet replied to these communications.

Crops Destroyed in Mexico and People Fleeing for Their Lives.

Guadalajara, Mexico, April 30.—The Colima volcano is again in a state of active eruption and the inhabitants of the valley at the base of the mountain have been forced to abandon their homes and flee for their live. The molten lava and ashes have destroyed the growing crops and much valuable property in that section. The fire which issues from the crater presents a magnificent sight at night.

Boston, April 30.—The investigation of the books of Clarence P. Lovell, who until recently was the secretary of the Boston Fruit and Produce exchange, is not quite completed. It is probable that it will show a shortage of not over $500. It is likely that Mr. Lovell or his friends will make the amount good and that there will be no criminal proceedings instituted. Mr. Lovell is ill at his home.

CAUGHT WITH A TROUT ROD.

Experiences Which Incline a Strong Swimmer to Believe Big Fish Stories.

"To hear you fellows talk one would think a six ounce trout pole and single leader would land a shark. Now dust shot will not kill an eagle, though it may blind him, and I am a little skeptical about these fish stories."

The best fisherman of the party replied:

"Well, you are a pretty good swimmer. I'll tell you what I will do. I'll bet you a suit of clothes that if you will play the fish with an ordinary trout line attached to a swivel between your shoulders I with a six ounce pole will land you and bring you to bag." The bet was accepted, and a few days later the contest came off in one of the swimming baths of New York.

A piece of ribbon was passed in a loop over each shoulder of the man fish and fastened between the shoulders to a fair sized swivel, to which was attached a thirty-seven strand English woven silk line, which was reeled on an ordinary five and a half ounce trout rod. The fisherman stood on the diving platform, rod in hand, with the line rather slack, and the fish stood half way down the bath. The fish was to take a header, and this was to constitute the strike of the fish. The victory was to be decided by the swimmer reaching the end of the bath, or the fisherman towing him within reach of the landing net twice out of three times.

The signal given, in dived the fish, and the fisherman gave him all the line he wanted until his head appeared, and then put on a little strain which turned the swimmer slightly sidewise. The fish, not perceiving this for a second, struck out strongly for the end of the bath, but the strain, slight as it was, turned him more and more around, and turning his head to look, he lost ground for a breath, and was hauled over on his back. For an uncumbered swimmer to turn onto his chest from his back is very easy, but with that pull between the shoulders it is a very different matter. As a finger under the chin will hold a swimmer up when learning, so that touch of a finger on the line towed the swimmer half way down the bath before he could get the line slack and turn again. By that time he was nearly out of breath, and still the trifling strain held him just enough to impede him without stopping him.

Slowly and steadily he moved ahead, combating the side strain this time by increased exertion of the left arm, and he seemed in a fair way of making the goal, when zip, the point of the red swung over, and aided by the strong sweep of the left arm the strain caught the fish as if the butt had been given and round he came again on his chest. A mad plunge to break the line resulted only in a loss of ten feet of line, but the swimmer secured his turn and again set his face for the end. Moving the point of the rod to the left, to the right, raising it, sinking it, catching the man fish wherever he showed a weak spot, the wily angler played him right across the open space and within ten feet of the end, and then gauging the moment, he gave him the butt, and snap went the line, and the fish struck home. One leg of the three for the fish. Time, seven minutes and a quarter.

The fish had a good rub down, a hot lemonade and a rest of half an hour, and then a fresh start was made. This time the angler was more at home. Carefully handling the fish he caught him rising from the header and promptly turned him on his back in a way that surprised him, and as the fish plunged to the bottom to try and break the line again (this being the equivalent of sparring for wind), another round turn brought him to within twelve feet of the fisherman, and, struggle as he might, he could not get away. Plunge after plunge was of no avail, and only prevented further reeling in, until finally a lucky turn brought the fish over, and he was promptly reeled in before he could get on his chest again. Time, four minutes. Leg and leg.

Another rest was taken, and now the fisherman wanted to back himself at five to one for the last leg, but not even the fish seemed inclined to take him. This time the fish dressed himself and rested an hour, walking around, and before going in taking a strong rough rub. This time a curious thing occurred. As he dived in his foot slipped and he struck the water sidewise. The quick angler had him on his back under the water the next moment, and if he had persisted in reeling him up would possibly have drowned him, so helpless was the fish. Amid laughter he let up, and the fish was allowed to land and start again. This time a successful header was taken and a strong fight made. Swimming solely with the side stroke, the fish could see all the movements of the angler, and so forged ahead until the downward stroke of his right arm swept the bottom at the shallow end of the bath. Feeling the shallow, with victory within reach, the fish turned his head, and that moment the butt was given him, his feet were swung aside and under, and before he knew what had occurred he was in the center of the bath again. Once more he tried the side stroke, but he was fast tiring, and the varying strain of the line, now to the right, now to the left, soon put the issue beyond doubt, and he was towed within the reach of the net in seven minutes and a third. The swimmer said he was more tired than if he had swam a couple of miles in open water, and is inclined to believe any fish story told him during the present season.

The Champion Neat Woman.

There is a woman in eastern Maine who couldn't go to a picnic when invited because she couldn't get time. "I have so much work at home," she said, "I can't go anywhere." Yet this same woman afterward sent a lot of old rags to a junk dealer, where she realized a price of a cent a pound, perhaps, and every piece of them had been newly washed and ironed smooth and was neatly folded up. The thing was so funny that the junkman put the rags on exhibition as the work of a woman who was short of time. She can now safely lay claim to the title of "champion neat woman of America."—Lewistown Evening Journal.

UTTERLY PARALYZED

My emotions—meaning by that those feelings of the heart which tend to make a man see all women as the only perfection of creation, and some one woman as the aggregated perfection of all women—my emotions, as I was about to say when I interrupted myself, are utterly paralyzed, and have been since the 14th day of last September, at 15 minutes after 11 A. M., Eastern time.

At that hour and for several hours previously, I was in the act of spending my summer vacation at a delightfully quiet and retired resort on the Atlantic coast, where also among a number of other fortunates, Miss Ruth Allen, Miss Myrtle Morton—such a sweet name, that, I used to think—and Jack Foster, the bane of my existence and the paralyzer of my emotions.

Foster was a dashing fellow while I was merely a dashed fellow, and because of that, possibly, I was less fortunate in my heart affairs than he. In any event I never loved a dear gazelle, as the poet has it, I believe, but some day, sooner or later, the nervy Foster came that way and chose her for his mate, the result of which invariably was I lost her.

Several times during the summer I had for these depredations of his, been tempted to drown him, for I was a fine sailor and he wasn't, though he often went out with me, as he said he felt safe in my hands and he had a large life insurance policy in addition. Then he would laugh at his time tried and fire tested joke and all the girls would laugh also.

Bah! The idiots to laugh at an old chestnut like that. A cocanut was equally as funny and much larger.

However, as time moved on, Jack gave me a chance, and, left to my own devices, it was not a great while before I was paying undivided attention to Miss Allen and Miss Morton. These two were my choice, and, one I felt sure would be chosen, but as yet I had not determined which one.

The time for decision came at last, for my month was nearly up, and on that sweet September morn I had an engagement to go walking with Miss Allen. I felt that morning that she was the one woman of all women for me, and I asked her to go with me so that I might have an opportunity to ask her a far more important question. I am sure she understood my purpose, for I had almost more than once told her what was in my heart.

"Miss Ruth," I said, as we strolled along the shore returning to the hotel, "may I ask you a question?"

"Certainly, Mr. Bryting," she replied, as sweetly as a girl could reply or a bird could sing.

"It is not an everyday question," I said, as a slight preparation to her, "but one of great importance to me."

"It isn't a conundrum, is it?" she asked nervously, "for I hate conundrums."

"Yes, it is," I answered. "At least it is about something that I don't want to give up."

There wasn't anything funny in that but I laughed at it and she joined in it, giving me to that extent an addition to my courage.

"Well, you don't have to give it up," she said. "You surely can answer your own conundrum."

"Not this one, I fear.

"Goodness, it must be a hard one. Don't ask me. I'm sure I can't answer it."

"Yes, you can," I insisted. "You know," and I became serious, "you know, Miss Ruth, that for some time past I have been thinking of you a great deal. More, indeed, than I should have done, for there was so much uncertainty in it all. I have been thinking of it this moment, and of you, and of what I should say to you and how I should say it, to win the answer I desired above all things earthly."

"Well, but what is your conundrum?" Miss Allen asked.

"Simply this: Will you be my wife?" I said, dropping on one knee in the sand.

"Goodness! I can answer that easily enough. No; I cannot marry you."

The unhesitating way in which she spoke made me almost hopeless, yet I persisted.

"But you could learn," I pleaded there in the sand—fool that I was to think that a woman could learn to marry a man. Whoever heard of such a thing?

"No," she said, "I could not learn for—for—for—"

"Don't finish the sentence," I said bitterly, as I rose from my devotional attitude, "don't finish it, pray. I know you will say that you love another, and that utterly precludes your taking lessons under my instructions. Of course," I went on, brutally enough, I'm sure, "it would have been utterly impossible for you to have prevented me from making the fool of myself I have, and I absolve you from any connivance in the matter. May I ask as an epilogue to this comedy, that you will tell me who the happy man is, that I may congratulate him?"

Her eyes blazed and her cheeks reddened, and how pretty she was as she looked at me as an angry queen might look upon an offending subject.

"Mr. Bryting," she said, scornfully, "I had hoped to spare you pain, and had thought to say good-by to you after this pleasant holiday by the sea as friends say good-by, with sorrow in every note, but now I shall say good-by with unfeigned pleasure, and in parting will feel a peculiar delight in telling you that the happy man is your friend, Mr. Foster, and that he asked me only yesterday to be his wife, and I took this walk with you to tell you so, and did not do so because, as you are well aware, you took up all the time at my disposal with the absurdly important question you had to ask me."

What further remarks she might have made I have no means of knowing, but they would, no doubt, have gone much further, for in an angry woman's game with language she plays without limit, but fortunately for my self esteem we were startled at that moment by the shouts of a party coming over the sand hill to our left, and by the time we had made a rapid change in our outward show of temper the crowd was upon us. They had come out in search of us to join a party for a sail and among the searchers were Mr. Foster and Miss Morton. Under the circumstances it was not a difficult matter for Miss Allen and myself to effect an interchange of escorts, and I accompanied Miss Morton back to the hotel, leaving Miss Allen to the tender mercies of her fiance.

As Miss Morton and I followed in the wake of the returning procession, I made myself particularly gay and she seemed to appreciate me more than she had ever done.

"What a color you have to-day, Mr. Bryting," she exclaimed, as she looked at me with admiring eyes.

"I wasn't aware of it, really," I replied, with a culpable lack of truth in my words, for I knew I must be flushed after what I had just gone through, notwithstanding the fact that I could feel my face burning as if I had been standing in the hot sun bareheaded.

"Well, you have," she continued, "and it makes you handsomer than I ever saw you before."

"Possibly," I said, speaking slowly and with evident feeling, "it is because the full sunshine of your kindness has never shone on me before and given me its radiance."

"Oh," she exclaimed, "this is perfectly delicious. You talk just like a character in a novel."

"Is it novel for a man to love a beautiful woman?" I asked, looking squarely into her eyes and thinking how much prettier than Miss Allen she was.

"Are you in love?" she asked, with charming naivette.

At this moment we were a hundred yards or more behind the party, and it was five minutes after 11 o'clock, A. M.

"Oh, Myrtle," I broke out with a fervor I did not think I was capable of, "don't you know that I am in love, and don't you know with whom? Haven't you seen every day for weeks that you held my heart in thrall and that you were its queen? Don't you know, Myrtle, that I have been waiting for and wishing and hoping for the propitious time when I could tell you this? Now, I am soon to go back to my work, to the dark and dismal town, and before I go won't you give me your heart to take the place of mine you have taken away, that its light may make sunshine along all the paths of the future my footsteps may fall upon? Tell me, Myrtle, tell me!" and in my wild ardor I caught her hand in mine and kissed it.

"Oh," she exclaimed, snatching it away, "don't do that. They'll see us."

"What do I care?" I replied. "An honest love fears no criticism."

"I know, I know," she stammered, "but you mustn't talk love to me. I can't listen to you now. Jack Foster and I are engaged. He asked me yesterday and we are to be married in December."

And it was fifteen minutes after 11 o'clock A. M.—Detroit Free Press.

THE POETIC BURGLAR.

Twenty-five Years of Prison Life For the Medium of the Muse.

Fred Irving, who is serving a twenty-five years' sentence in the Maine State's prison for burglary, and who is altogether a bad man, indulges his poetic instincts by producing sonnets of varied patterns. In reading them one cannot help thinking what an automatic genius for good and evil Mr. Irving is. Some persons might call it versatility, but we fear the poet is wearing the grinning mask while he composes such lines as:

God sent a poem to my heart last night;
The visitation of the Holy Ghost
Burst through the corridors of thought almost Prostrating me with a divine delight
I heard the stars make music in their flight
And saw the pinions of a Seraph host.
And felt the rushing wind of Pentecost
Sweep by me as I rose and sought to write.

But in an instant was the vision fled.
And I leaned, panting, on my lonely desk.
I know that it will never come again;
But in that foretaste of the joys ahead,
I've been of all the earth supremely blest,
And thank Thee, Father, with amen amen!

Try as he may to stifle his evil impulse Mr. Irving is still the burglar, and these secessions from his poems may close appropriately with the following realistic sonnet:

Oho! Look out for me, I come in the night,
I come in the dead of the night when you think all's well,
I come to give you that horrible, sinking fright
In the pit of the stomach, of which you've heard folks tell.
And when you see a little pencil of light
And a velvet mask a-hover above your bed,
Don't move, don't even breathe, or happy might
Be filling a long engagement with the dead.

I'd kinder hate to knife such a pretty girl;
So quiet, my beauty, while I swoop the stuff,
And I'll not injure even your lightest curl.
By George! this is a Jurgensen, sure enough!
Those diamond drops are cukoos; this black pearl
Will keep me many a day like a Lord Macduff.

Cummings's Story of Horace Greeley.

"While I have the floor," said Amos Cummings, "I might as well tell a story about Horace Greeley. I worked with Greeley for years. He always called me 'Asa;' never could remember Amos. One day I went out to see Greeley at Chappaqua about some newspaper business. The old gentleman saw me coming as he stood looking out the window and opened the door himself.

" 'Come here, Asa,' he said, in his high, mealy tones, as he led me into a fashion of parlor.

"I followed him into the room, and as I was only going to remain a moment, laid my hat, gloves and cane on a center table. Greeley and I had just immersed ourselves in a talk when Mrs. Greely swept into the room. Now, Mrs. G. was what one might call a spirited woman. The moment she entered the door her eyes fell indignantly on my trousseau as I'd piled it up—hat, gloves and stick—on the table. Without a word, and before I could speak to her, she swooped on the outfit like a fishhawk, and the next moment threw them out of the window.

"Then she left the room without pausing for speech, as one who had taught somebody that the hall was the place for hat and cane and similar bric a brac. I was inclined to get a trifle hot; a man naturally might who sees his hat pounced upon and cast into the shrubbery. But before I could get up or say a word Greeley stretched out his hand in a deprecatory way and cheered me with the remark:

"Never mind her, Asa; she thought they were mine.'

"Afterward, however," concluded Cummings, "when I recalled what Greeley's hat used to look like, I had my doubts."—Washington Post.

The Landlady's Business Perspicacity.

Passing by on Monday last, we took occasion to step into the Commercial Hotel. The owner, Mrs. Bats, greeted us very pleasantly, and after regaling us with a piece of delicious lemon pie and a glass of pure cold cream, invited us to look at the improvements and additions she had made to the Commercial. The hotel deserves a large patronage and will get it, and Mrs. Bats deserves great credit for her energy, push and business perspicacity.—Silverton Weekly Miner.

She—Why, you silly boy, if I married you you could not even dress me.

He (bashfully)—Perhaps with a few lessons I could learn.

CHAPTER II.

HORACE PREBLE.

There is a police officer in West Point who has a considerable reputation as a detective. His name is Bernard Kelly. Within an hour after the message was sent out from Sunnyside Kelly arrived.

Meanwhile we had made several important discoveries. First we questioned the servants. There were six. Three of them believed that they had heard a sound like a pistol shot, about the time when the crime must have been committed. The other three were sure that they had not. Of the latter, Hanley, the butler, was the most important witness. He was nearer to the Long Room during the critical period than any other person not actually within it. He had heard nothing, but he had seen something of consequence—namely, a man whom he did not know, walking hurriedly away from the house. This person the butler had seen from a window. He attached no importance to the circumstance at the time; indeed, he did not mention it until I had sharply questioned him. This was just before Kelly arrived.

My first vague suspicions had centered upon Hanley. They were founded only upon his demeanor at the time when he and I were together in the Long Room immediately after my discovery of the crime. Certainly there could not have been a more perfect picture of guilty terror than he furnished then. His horror of the body, and especially of the blood; his eagerness to escape from the room; his dread of questioning, were all suggestive.

But I could not at first supply a motive for him. That came later, when, with Kelly's assistance, we examined more closely my uncle's desk. Our first examination of it had but one object; we wished to trace the course of the bullet. This was not difficult. After passing entirely through my uncle's body it had penetrated the back of the desk, and the wall also. I was amazed at the power of the projectile; but Capt. Marshall was not. It supported his theory that the new explosive for small arms figured in this case. He was an expert upon this point; indeed, he was at that time conducting experiments with a rifle intended for the army. This dreadful weapon when fired on a level from the height of a man's shoulder would send a bullet nearly two miles, and at two thousand yards would drive it through the bodies of seven men.

He stated these facts to me with professional calmness; he even offered to exhibit them to me if I would go some day to his laboratory and proving ground, which was on the outskirts of West Point. His knowledge of the subject was undoubtedly great, and the more I thought upon it the more important, in my mind, became the coincidence of the presence of such a man in that house at a time when a mysterious and terribly powerful weapon had been murderously employed.

My interest became horror when I found soon afterward that this circumstance impressed itself more strongly than any other upon the mind of Bernard Kelly. Through Margaret he learned from Mrs. Holliday that she had left Marshall alone in the parlor for fully ten minutes. He seemed not to have moved when she returned, but he had had time to go to the Long Room and return.

Margaret told me of Kelly's questions, despite his warning to her to keep absolute silence about them. She said, frankly, that they indicated to her his suspicion that Marshall had committed the crime.

"That is not to be thought of," said the girl. "He, of all others, had most reason to wish my father to live."

Perhaps; yet it is true that a living father may change his mind about a daughter's marriage, but the expressed desire cannot be recalled when death has sealed the lips.

Then came that other discovery relative to the desk, and it threw all my theories into confusion.

On the forenoon of that day I had seen a pile of bank notes in a drawer of the desk, and the topmost had been of the denomination of one hundred dollars. How much was in the pile I did not know. My uncle had closed the drawer immediately. I had seen only one of the bills. When we searched the desk under Kelly's direction there was no money at all in it. My uncle had only a few dollars and a gold watch in his pockets.

If robbery was the motive, whom should we suspect? I thought of Hanley instantly; and, in private, I described to Kelly the demeanor of the man at the first alarm. The detective received my communication without any comment whatever. Indeed, he did not speak ten words, except in questions, while he was in the house.

About an hour after he had gone away, I received a telephone message from him saying that the case would soon be cleared up. He spoke as if he already had his hand on the murderer's shoulder. I begged him to name the guilty man, but his only reply was that he would be at Sunnyside early the next morning.

The night in that house was one which I shudder to remember. Suspicion was rampant. In my own mind Hanley, Marshall and Hilton figured in turn as the murderer. Then the absence of the weapon suggested the mysterious stranger whom the butler had seen. My thoughts were in a whirl, and their confusion became more as I perceived that both Hilton and Marshall were coming more and more closely into conference and conspicuously shunning me.

I heard one of the servants say to another that Capt. Marshall had done it, and the reply was that, whoever had fired the shot, Margaret Holliday was certainly a party to the crime. Another servant in response to my questioning said that he had seen Hanley enter the Long Room from the dining room which adjoined it, not ten minutes before my discovery of the murder. Hanley, with white lips, denied that he had been in that room since the morning.

Marshall and Hilton divided between them the care of the body and did not consult me. I passed the night in torment, relieved only by an occasional sight of Margaret, who twice or thrice came from her mother's room to speak with me. She would not see Marshall. I think that she believed him guilty.

At eight o'clock I was standing on the veranda in front of the house when the sound of wheels startled me, and I saw a carriage containing Bernard Kelly and a man who leaned far back with his face in the shadow. It flashed across me in a second that Kelly had solved the riddle, arrested the murderer, and was bringing him to the house. If that was so, the prisoner could be no other than the man whom Hanley had seen. And then I thought of the steps that I had heard, and had supposed to be Marshall's, as I lay in the hammock. Had the murderer passed me then?

The carriage rapidly approached. In a few seconds it was near enough for me to see the face of the shadow. Kelly's companion was Horace Preble.

I hope to get through this mortal life without suffering such a shock as that again.

Preble got out of the carriage with Kelly close behind him.

"In heaven's name what is this?" I demanded.

The young man looked disconsolately down upon the ground. He had at first extended his hand toward me and had withdrawn it.

"This thing had to come out," he said. "I've tried to cover it up as much as I could, but it was no use. You might as well know the truth."

"Speak!" I cried.

"Why, you see, about two years ago, when I lost all my money, I was in a desperate fix. I had hoped to live without work and that hope failed me. I got into sad straits, and at last—of course you'll regard this as confidential?"

"Confidential!"

"Well, it's known to a few. Every time a thing of this kind happens to me, somebody has to be let in."

"Look here, Preble," I exclaimed, "I'm altogether too nervous to stand this strain any longer. Since yesterday I've been suspected of murder by half a dozen people, and have convicted, in my own mind, half a dozen others in town. I convicted you, when I saw you with Detective Kelly. But of course when I stand here face to face with you, I know it can't be true. Yet you have some part in the shameful secret, as you have confessed to me. What is it? Don't keep me in suspense!"

A sickly smile distorted Preble's handsome face.

"I am a detective in the pay of the New York police department," he said. "I'm here professionally."

He shuddered at the thought.

"It's a little different from the old times," he continued. "I'm heartily ashamed of it, my boy, but it can't be helped now. There's little to choose between detective and criminal in my opinion. The criminal inflicts an injury on society, and the detective inflicts an injury on the criminal, and the best defense that the detective can make is the old school-boy claim: 'The other fellow began it.' Why can't we all let one another alone?"

I was leaning upon the railing of the veranda and laughing weakly, almost hysterically. To see Preble out of that scrape was too much happiness for me. Little I cared about his profession. I thought it as good as most others and much better than the law. But I knew him well enough to be sure that whatever profession he had chosen would immediately seem to him the most disgraceful and unbecoming that men's needs had ever produced.

"We wired to New York for a man," said Kelly, "and Byrnes sent up Mr. Preble. Between us I guess we can sift this matter down. Would you like to look at the body, Mr. Preble?"

"Not yet," he replied. "Let us have a look at the room."

Capt. Marshall joined us while we were busy there. Preble was examining the bullet hole in the desk and in the wall. He enlarged the latter until he could see through it, and then he looked out, following with his eye as nearly as possible the direction of the ball.

"There's a chance that we can find it," he said, and led the way to the grounds at the rear of the house.

Fifty yards back we came to a large tree, and in its rough bark, near the ground, after most careful searching, Preble found a bullet hole. Five minutes later he held in his hand the leaden missile that had killed Gen. Holliday.

"Capt. Marshall," he said, "you, as an expert, will be able to tell us what sort of weapon carries such a bullet."

"You know already," replied the captain, with a sort of gasp. "I can see that in your face. It is the bullet which the rifle I am testing carries. There is no other like it."

I looked anxiously at Preble, and saw, to my surprise, that he was not regarding Marshall. He was looking over the captain's head.

I turned and saw a man running through the grounds. He was bent double, and seemed to fancy himself to be shielded by some low shrubbery. I recognized Hanley, the butler.

"You'd better go after him, Kelly," said Preble, and Kelly obeyed, exhibiting a surprising swiftness of foot.

He overtook Hanley before he had reached the road which bounds the estate upon the south; and in a few minutes the trembling servant stood before Preble. The detective nodded to Kelly, who instantly began to search Hanley. In one of his pockets was a package of twelve one-hundred-dollar bills.

"Now, let's have your story without a moment's delay," said Preble, sternly.

"I swear to you, sir," replied the butler, solemnly, "that I had no hand in his death. I robbed him, but I did not kill him. It was this way: I went into the Long Room to speak to him. Miss Margaret was asleep on the couch. The general also seemed to be asleep with his head on his desk. And right there in plain sight was all that money.

"I've been hard pressed, sir, of late. There's been some as bad as me at a disadvantage and have used their power. It's their fault, sir, that I took the money. I'm no thief at heart. I did it in sheer nervousness, at the sight of what I needed so much.

"The general never stirred. He was dead then, sir, I've no doubt, but I didn't know it. I got away with the money and hid it in my room. Then when the murder was discovered I was near frozen with horror. I would have restored the money, but there's been no chance. Somebody has been in that room all the time. So this morning, when I learned that one of the servants had seen me go into that room, and had told on me, I resolved to run for it. That's the whole truth, sir, and I'm glad to have it off my mind."

"I believe you, my man," said Preble. "It's never a good thing in this world to be too smart, and it's your good fortune that you're not nearly smart enough to have committed this crime, supposing that it is a crime at all."

He directed Kelly to keep an eye on Hanley and then we all went into the Long Room. We found Margaret and Dr. Hilton there. Margaret greeted Preble with great cordiality. She said that she felt much relieved at having his advice and aid, for she had always thought him to be gifted with an exceptionally clear mind.

"If my present theory of this terrible mystery proves to be correct," said Preble, "I think we shall all feel greatly relieved. It is only a theory at present, and its basis is no more than this."

He opened his hand and showed a splinter of wood about an inch and a half long. For my part I had no idea of its bearing upon the case. The others seemed equally at a loss.

"I found this on the floor at that end of the room," he said, pointing away from the general's desk. "It was knocked off the inside of the wall by the bullet which killed your father. It surprises me, gentlemen, that when you had found where the bullet went out you should not have looked for the place where it came in."

"But, Preble," I exclaimed, "you are not going to tell us that the murderer fired through that wall and across the whole length of this room?"

"And a mile of open country besides," said Preble, calmly, "if my theory is true. Capt. Marshall, will you tell me whether I am correct in saying that a line drawn from the spot where Gen. Holliday was struck down and extended through the wall one foot to the left of that window would pass close to your laboratory on the other side of the valley?"

Marshall's forehead was wet with perspiration.

"It is true," he said, in a low voice. "I am afraid that your theory is right."

"You mean," I cried, "that the accidental discharge of a rifle which was being tested is responsible for this terrible calamity?"

"You have seen the bullet," said Preble, "and I have proven the direction in which it came. The weapon could not have been fired near the house or you would have heard the report. The shot must have been accidental, for the distance and the impossibility of seeing into this room preclude the possibility of intent. I can see no other explanation. However, we need not be long in doubt. If Capt. Marshall will accompany me to the spot we can learn whether there was an accidental discharge of a rifle at the hour named.

"I may add," he continued, "that the whole aspect of this case indicates the work of chance. It had not from the first the appearance of human device. The absolutely impartial bearing of the facts, which implicated equally every person who could have been physically present, showed a broader grasp of detail than any man can claim. The minor crime of Hanley strikes in discordantly with the rest. You can readily see the difference between design and fate which can have no purpose. This terrible event is the forerunner of many which will follow upon this new development of modern arms. And the tragedies will not all be accidents. If a murderer can by repeated trials at last strike down his victim at the distance of more than a mile, he will be less often restrained by mere cowardice."

He bade us good-by and went away with Marshall and Kelly. In an hour we received a telephone message from the last named, that Preble's theory had been confirmed.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again.
